You know very well that our president, Comrade Oliver Tambo, is not well. It is my intention, subject to what the National Reception Committee may decide, to visit our headquarters in Lusaka, to go and thank personally those remarkable men and women who have put our organization in an unprecedented position to win the new South Africa that we are fighting for.

From Lusaka I intend to visit Sweden, so that I can have the opportunity of shaking hands and congratulating the man who has led this movement. [applause]

Two days ago in my address in Cape Town I told the audience that I have read on numerous occasions that it is not the king and general that make history, but the masses of the people. I have always believed in this but not to the extent to which I now believe that basic principle, because I have seen, with my own eyes, the masses of our people, the workers, the peasants, the doctors, the lawyers, the clergy, all our people; I have seen them making history, and that is why all of us are here today.

In conclusion, I must repeat what Comrade Sisulu has said. It is proper that we should behave, it is proper that we should behave in a way worthy of disciplined freedom fighters and men who know what their duty is. Let not a single (?hair), not a window be broken when you leave this place. And remember that we have friends on death row, and it is your struggle that has made the government to grant some sort of relief in this regard, and we sincerely hope that there are men among the government who will respond constructively to the demand that those men should be set free. Africa!

ADDRESS BY THE STATE PRESIDENT, MR. F.W. DE KLERK, DMS, AT THE OPENING OF THE SECOND SESSION OF THE NINTH PARLIAMENT OF THE REPUBLIC OF SOUTH AFRICA, CAPE TOWN, FEBRUARY 2, 1990

Mr. Speaker, Members of Parliament, the general election on September the 6th, 1989, placed our country irrevocably on the road of drastic change. Underlying this is the growing realisation by an increasing number of South Africans that only a negotiated understanding among the representative leaders of the entire population is able to ensure lasting peace.

The alternative is growing violence, tension and conflict. That is unacceptable and in nobody's interest. The well-being of all in this country is linked inextricably to the ability of the leaders to come to terms with one another on a new dispensation. No one can escape this simple truth.

On its part, the Government will accord the process of negotiation the highest priority. The aim is a totally new and just constitutional dispensation in which every inhabitant will enjoy equal rights, treatment and opportunity in every sphere of endeavour—constitutional, social and economic.

I hope that this new Parliament will play a constructive part in both the prelude to negotiations and the negotiating process itself. I wish to ask all of you who identify yourselves with the broad aim of a new South Africa, and that is the overwhelming majority:

Let us put petty politics aside when we discuss the future during this Session.

Help us build a broad consensus about the fundamentals of a new, realistic and democratic dispensation.

Let us work together on a plan that will rid our country of suspicion and steer it away from domination and radicalism of any kind.

During the term of this new Parliament, we shall have to deal, complementary to one another, with the normal processes of legislation and day-to-day government, as well as with the process of negotiation and renewal.

Within this framework I wish to deal first with several matters more closely concerned with the normal process of government before I turn specifically to negotiation and related issues.

1. FOREIGN RELATIONS

The Government is aware of the important part the world at large has to play in the realisation of our country's national interests.

Without contact and co-operation with the rest of the world we cannot promote the well-being and security of our citizens. The dynamic developments in international politics have created new opportunities for South Africa as well. Important advances have been made, among other things, in our contacts abroad, especially where these were precluded previously by ideological considerations.

I hope this trend will be encouraged by the important change of climate that is taking place in South Africa.

For South Africa, indeed for the whole world, the past year has been one of change and major upheaval. In Eastern Europe and even the Soviet Union itself, political and economic upheaval surged forward in an unstoppable tide. At the same time, Beijing temporarily smothered with brutal violence the yearning of the people of the Chinese mainland for greater freedom.

The year of 1989 will go down in history as the year in which Stalinist Communism expired.

These developments will entail unpredictable consequences for Europe, but they will also be of decisive importance to Africa. The indications are that the countries of Eastern and Central Europe will receive greater attention, while it will decline in the case of Africa.

The collapse, particularly of the economic system in Eastern Europe, also serves as a warning to those who insist on persisting with it in Africa. Those who seek to force this failure of a system on South Africa, should engage in a total revision of their point of view. It should be clear to all that it is not the answer here either. The new situation in Eastern Europe also shows that foreign intervention is no recipe for domestic change. It never succeeds, regardless of its ideological motivation. The upheaval in Eastern Europe took place without the involvement of the Big Powers or of the United Nations.

The countries of Southern Africa are faced with a particular challenge: Southern Africa now has an historical opportunity to set aside its conflicts and ideological differences and draw up a joint programme of reconstruction.

It should be sufficiently attractive to ensure that the Southern African region obtains adequate investment and loan capital from the industrial countries of the world. Unless the countries of Southern Africa achieve stability and a common approach to economic development rapidly, they will be faced by further decline and ruin.

The Government is prepared to enter into discussions with other Southern African countries with the aim of formulating a realistic development plan. The Government believes that the obstacles in the way of a conference of Southern African states have now been removed sufficiently.

Hostile postures have to be replaced by co-operative ones; confrontation by contact; disengagement by engagement; slogans by deliberate debate.

The season of violence is over. The time for reconstruction and reconciliation has arrived.

Recently there have, indeed, been unusually positive results in South Africa's contacts and relations with other African states. During my visits to their countries I was received cordially, both in private and in public, by Presidents Mobutu, Chissano, Houphouet-Boigny and Kaunda. These leaders expressed their sincere concern about the serious economic problems in our part of the world. They agreed that South Africa could and should play a positive part in regional co-operation and development.

Our positive contribution to the independence process in South West Africa has been recognized internationally. South Africa's good faith and reliability as a negotiator made a significant contribution to the success of the events. This, too, was not unnoticed. Similarly, our efforts to help bring an end to the domestic conflict situations in Mozambique and Angola have received positive acknowledgement.

At present the Government is involved in negotiations concerning our future relations with an independent Namibia and there are no reason why good relations should not exist between the two countries. Namibia needs South Africa and we are prepared to play a constructive part.

Nearer home I paid fruitful visits to Venda, Transkei and Ciskei and intend visiting Bophuthatswana soon. In recent times there has been an interesting debate about the future relationship of the TBVC countries with South Africa and specifically about whether they should be re-incorporated into our country.

Without rejecting this idea out of hand, it should be borne in mind that it is but one of many possibilities. These countries are constitutionally independent. Any return to South Africa will have to be dealt with, not only by means of legislation in their parliaments, but also through legislation in this Parliament. Naturally this will have to be preceded by talks and agreements.

2. HUMAN RIGHTS

Some time ago the Government referred the question of the protection of fundamental human rights to the Southern Africa Law Commission. This resulted in the Law Commission's interim working document on individual and minority rights. It elicited substantial public interest.

I am satisfied that every individual and organisation in the country has had ample opportunity to make representations to the Law Commission, express criticism freely and make suggestions. At present, the Law Commission is considering the representations received. A final report is expected in the course of this year.

In view of the exceptional importance of the subject of human rights to our country and all its people, I wish to ask the Law Commission to accord this task high priority.

The whole question of protecting individual and minority rights, which includes collective rights and the rights of national groups, is still under consideration by the Law Commission. Therefore, it would be inappropriate of the Government to express a view on the details now. However, certain matters of principle have emerged fairly clearly and I wish to devote some remarks to them.

The Government accepts the principle of the recognition and protection of the fundamental individual rights which form the constitutional basis of most Western democracies. We acknowledge, too, that the most practical way of protecting those rights is vested in a declaration of rights justifiable by an independent judiciary. However, it is clear that a system for the protection of the rights of individuals, minorities and national entities has to form a well-rounded and balanced whole. South Africa has its own national composition and our constitutional dispensation has to take this into account. The formal recognition of individual rights does not mean that the problems of a heterogeneous population will simply disappear. Any new constitution which disregards this reality will be inappropriate and even harmful.

Naturally, the protection of collective, minority and national rights may not bring about an imbalance in respect of individual rights. It is neither the Government's policy nor its intention that any group—in whichever way it may be defined—shall be favoured above or in relation to any of the others.

The Government is requesting the Law Commission to undertake further task and report on it. This task is directed at the balanced protection in a future constitution of the human rights of all our citizens, as well as of collective units, associations, minorities and nations. This investigation will also serve the purpose of supporting negotiations toward a new constitution.

The terms of reference also include:

The identification of the main types and models of democratic constitutions which deserve consideration in the aforementioned context;

An analysis of the ways in which the relevant rights are protected in every model; and

Possible methods by means of which such constitutions may be made to succeed and be safeguarded in a legitimate manner.

3. THE DEATH PENALTY

The death penalty has been the subject of intensive discussion in recent months. However, the Government has been giving its attention to this extremely sensitive issue for some time. On April the 27th, 1989, the honourable Minister of Justice indicated that there was merit in suggestions for reform in this area. Since 1988 in fact, my predecessor and I have been taking decisions on reprieves which have led, in proportion, to a drastic decline in executions.

We have now reached the position in which we are able to make concrete proposals for reform. After the Chief Justice was consulted, and he in turn had consulted the Bench, and after the Government had noted the opinions of academics and other interested parties, the Government decided on the following broad principles from a variety of available options:

That reform in this area is indicated;

That the death penalty should be limited as an option of sentence to extreme cases, and specifically through broadening judicial discretion in the imposition of sentence; and

That an automatic right of appeal be granted to those under sentence of death.

Should these proposals be adopted, they should have a significant influence on the imposition of death sentences on the one hand, and on the other, should ensure that every case in which a person has been sentenced to death, will come to the attention of the Appellate Division.

These proposals require that everybody currently awaiting execution, be accorded the benefit of the proposed new approach. Therefore, all executions have been suspended and no executions will take place until Parliament has taken a final decision on the new proposals. In the event of the proposals being adopted, the case of every person involved will be dealt with in accordance with the new guidelines. In the meantime, no executions have taken place since November the 14th, 1989.

New and uncompleted cases will still be adjudicated in terms of the existing law. Only when the death sentence is imposed, will the new proposals be applied, as in the case of those currently awaiting execution.

The legislation concerned also details other related principles which will be announced and elucidated in due course by the Minister of Justice. It will now be formulated in consultation with experts and be submitted to Parliament as soon as possible.

I wish to urge everybody to join us in dealing with this highly sensitive issue in a responsible manner.

4. SOCIO-ECONOMIC ASPECTS

A changed dispensation implies far more than political and constitutional issues. It cannot be pursued successfully in isolation from problems in other spheres of life which demand practical solutions. Poverty, unemployment, housing shortages, inadequate education and training, illiteracy, health needs and numerous other problems still stand in the way of progress and prosperity and an improved quality of life.

The conservation of the physical and human environment is of cardinal importance to the quality of our existence. For this the Government is developing a strategy with the aid of an investigation by the President's Council.

All of these challenges are being dealt with urgently and comprehensively. The capability for this has to be created in an economically accountable manner. Consequently, existing strategies and aims are undergoing a comprehensive revision.

From this will emanate important policy announcements in the socio-economic sphere by the responsible Ministers during the course of the session. One matter about which it is possible to make a concrete announcement, is the Separate Amenities Act, 1953. Pursuant to my speech before the President's Council late last year, I announce that this Act will be repealed during this Session of Parliament.

The State cannot possibly deal alone with all of the social advancement our circumstances demand. The community at large, and especially the private sector, also have a major responsibility towards the welfare of our country and its people.

5. THE ECONOMY

A new South Africa is possible only if it is bolstered by a sound and growing economy, with particular emphasis on the creation of employment. With a view to this, the Government has taken thorough cognisance of the advice contained in numerous reports by a variety of advisory bodies. The central message is that South Africa, too, will have to make certain structural changes to its economy, just as its major trading partners had to do a decade or so ago.

The period of exceptionally high economic growth experienced by the Western world in the sixties, was brought to an end by the oil crisis in 1973. Drastic structural adaptations became invitable for these countries, especially after the second oil crisis in 1979, when serious imbalances occurred in their economies. After considerable sacrifices, those countries which presevered with their structural adjustment programmes, recovered economically so that lengthy periods of high economic growth and low inflation were possible.

During that particular period, South Africa was protected temporarily by the rising gold price from the necessity of making similar adjustment immediately. In fact, the high gold price even brought prosperity with it for a while. The recovery of the world economy and the decline in the price of gold and other primary products, brought with them unhealthy trends. These included high inflation, a serious weakening in the productivity of capital, stagnation in the economy's ability to generate income and employment opportunities. All of this made a drastic structural adjustment of our economy inevitable.

The Government's basic point of departure is to reduce the role of the public sector in the economy and to give the private sector maximum opportunity for optimal performance. In this process, preference has to be given to allowing the market forces and a sound competitive structure to bring about the necessary adjustments.

Naturally, those who make and implement economic policy have a major responsibility at the same time to promote an environment optimally conducive to investment, job creation and economic growth by means of appropriate and properly co-ordinated fiscal and monetary policy. The Government remains committed to this balanced and practical approach.

By means of restricting capital expenditure in parastatal institutions, privatisation, deregulation and curtailing government expenditure, substantial progress has been made already towards reducing the role of the authorities in the economy. We shall persist with this in a well-considered way.

This does not mean that the State will forsake its indispensable development role, especially in our particular circumstances. On the contrary, it is the precise intention of the Government to concentrate an equitable portion of its capacity on these aims by means of the meticulous determination of priorities.

Following the progress that has been made in other areas of the economy in recent years, it is now opportune to give particular attention to the supply side of the economy. Fundamental factors which will contribute to the success of this restructuring are:

The gradual reduction of inflation to levels comparable to those of our principal trading partners;

The encouragement of personal initiative and savings;

The subjection of all economic decisions by the authorities to stringent financial measures and discipline;

Rapid progress with the reform of our system of taxation; and

The encouragement of exports as the impetus for industrialisation and earning foreign exchange.

These and other adjustments, which will require sacrifices, have to be seen as prerequisites for a new period of sustained growth in productive employment in the nineties.

The Government has also noted with appreciation the manner in which the Reserve Bank has discharged its special responsibility in striving toward common goals.

The Government is very much aware of the necessity of proper co-ordination and consistent implementation of its economic policy. For this reason, the establishment of the necessary structures and expertise to ensure this co-ordination is being given preference. This applies both to the various functions within the Government and to the interaction between the authorities and the private sector.

This is obviously not the occasion for me to deal in greater detail with our total economic strategy or with the recent course of the economy.

I shall confine myself to a few specific remarks on one aspect of fiscal policy that has been a source of criticism of the Government for some time, namely State expenditure.

The Government's financial year ends only in two month's time and several other important economic indicators for the 1989 calendar year are still subject to refinements at this stage. Nonetheless, several important trends are becoming increasingly clear. I am grateful to be able to say that we have apparently succeeded to a substantial degree in achieving most of our economic aims in the past year.

In respect of Government expenditure, the budget for the current financial year will be the most accurate in many years. The financial figures will show:

That Government expenditure is thoroughly under control;

That our normal financing programme has not exerted any significant upward pressure on rates of interest; and

That we will close the year with a surplus, even without taking the income from the privatisation of Iscor into account.

Without pre-empting this year's main budget, I wish to emphasise that it is also our intention to co-ordinate fiscal and monetary policy in the coming financial year in a way that will enable us to achieve the ensuing goals—namely:

That the present downturn will take the form of a soft landing which will help to make adjustments as easy as possible;

That our economy will consolidate before the next upward phase so that we will be able to grow from a sound base; and

That we shall persist with the implementation of the required structural adaptations in respect, among other things, of the following; easing the tax burden, especially on individuals; sustained and adequate generation of surplusses on the current account of the balance of payments and the reconstruction of our gold and foreign exchange reserves.

It is a matter of considerable seriousness to the Government, especially in this particular period of our history, to promote a dynamic economy which will make it possible for increasing numbers of people to be employed and share in rising standards of living.

6. NEGOTIATION

In conclusion, I wish to focus the spotlight on the process of negotiation and related issues. At this stage I am refraining deliberately from discussing the merits of numerous political questions which undoubtedly will be debated during the next few weeks. The focus, now, has to fall on negotiation.

Practically every leader agrees that negotiation is the key to reconciliation, peace and a new and just dispensation. However, numerous excuses for refusing to take part, are advanced. Some of the reasons being advanced are valid. Others are merely part of a political chess game. And while the game of chess proceeds, valuable time is being lost.

Against this background I committed the Government during my inauguration to giving active attention to the most important obstacles in the way of negotiation. Today I am able to announce far-reaching decisions in this connection.

I believe that these decisions will shape a new phase in which there will be a movement away from measures which have been seized upon as a justification for confrontation and violence. The emphasis has to move, and will move now, to a debate and discussion of political and economic points of view as part of the process of negotiation.

I wish to urge every political and community leader, in and outside Parliament, to approach the new opportunities which are being created, constructively. There is no time left for advancing all manner of new conditions that will delay the negotiating process.

The steps that have been decided, are the following:

The prohibition of the African National Congress, the Pan Africanist Congress, the South African Communist Party and a number of subsidiary organisations is being rescinded.

People serving prison sentences merely because they were members of one of these organisations or because they committed another offence which was merely an offence because a prohibition on one of the organisations was in force, will be identified and released. Prisoners who have been sentenced for other offences such as murder, terrorism or arson are not affected by this.

The media emergency regulations as well as the education emergency regulations are being abolished in their entirety.

The security emergency regulations will be amended to still make provision for effective control over visual material pertaining to scenes of unrest.

The restrictions in terms of the emergency regulations on 33 organisations are being rescinded. The organisations include the following: National Education Crisis Committee, South African National Students Congress, United Democratic Front, Cosatu, and Die Blanke Bevrydingsbeweging van Suid-Afrika.

The conditions imposed in terms of the security emergency regulations on 374 people on their release, are being rescinded and the regulations which provide for such conditions are being abolished.

The period of detention in terms of the security emergency regulations will be limited henceforth to six months. Detainees also acquire the right to legal representation and a medical practitioner of their own choosing.

These decisions by the Cabinet are in accordance with the Government's declared intention to normalise the political process in South Africa without jeopardising the maintenance of the good order. They were preceded by thorough and unanimous advice by a group of officials which included members of the security community.

Implementation will be immediate and, where necessary, notices will appear in the Government Gazette from tomorrow.

The most important facets of the advice the Government received in this connection, are the following:

The events in the Soviet Union and Eastern Europe, to which I have referred already, weaken the capability of organisations which were previously supported strongly from those quarters.

The activities of the organisations from which the prohibitions are now being lifted, no longer entail the same degree of threat to internal security which initially necessitated the imposition of the prohibitions.

There have been important shifts of emphasis in the statements and points of view of the most important of the organisations concerned, which indicate a new approach and a preference for peaceful solutions.

The South African Police is convinced that it is able, in the present circumstances, to combat violence and other crimes perpetrated also by members of these organisations and to bring offenders to justice without the aid of prohibitions on organisations.

About one matter there should be no doubt. The lifting of the prohibition on the said organisations does not signify in the least the approval or condonation of terrorism or crimes of violence committed under their banner or which may be perpetrated in the future. Equally, it should not be interpreted as a deviation from the Government's principles, among other things, against their economic policy and aspects of their constitutional policy. This will be dealt with in debate and negotiation.

At the same time I wish to emphasise that the maintenance of law and order dare not be jeopardised. The Government will not forsake its duty in this connection. Violence from whichever source, will be fought with all available might. Peaceful protest may not become the springboard for lawlessness, violence and intimidation. No democratic country can tolerate that.

Strong emphasis will be placed as well on even more effective law enforcement. Proper provision of manpower and means for the police and all who are involved with the enforcement of the law, will be ensured. In fact, the budget for the coming financial year will already begin to give effect to this.

I wish to thank the members of our security forces and related services for the dedicated service they have rendered the Republic of South Africa. Their dedication makes reform in a stable climate possible.

On the state of emergency I have been advised that an emergency situation, which justifies these special measures which have been retained, still exists. There is still conflict which is manifesting itself mainly in Natal, but as a consequence of the country-wide political power struggle. In addition, there are indications that radicals are still trying to disrupt the possibilities of negotiation by means of mass violence.

It is my intention to terminate the state of emergency completely as soon as circumstances justify it and I request the co-operation of everybody towards this end. Those responsible for unrest and conflict have to bear the blame for the continuing state of emergency. In the meantime, the state of emergency is inhibiting only those who use chaos and disorder as political instruments. Otherwise the rules of the game under the state of emergency are the same for everybody.

Against this background the Government is convinced that the decisions I have announced are justified from the security point of view. However, these decisions are justified from a political point of view as well.

Our country and all its people have been embroiled in conflict, tension and violent struggle for decades. It is time for us to break out of the cycle of violence and break through to peace and reconciliation. The silent majority is yearning for this. The youth deserve it.

With the steps the Government has taken it has proven its good faith and the table is laid for sensible leaders to begin talking about a new dispensation, to reach an understanding by way of dialogue and discussion.

The agenda is open and the overall aims to which we are aspiring should be acceptable to all reasonable South Africans.

Among other things, those aims include a new, democratic constitution; universal franchise; no domination; equality before an independent judiciary; the protection of minorities as well as of individual rights; freedom of religion; a sound economy based on proven economic principles and private enterprise; dynamic programmes directed at better education, health services, housing and social conditions for all.

In this connection Mr. Nelson Mandela could play an important part. The Government has noted that he has declared himself to be willing to make a constructive contribution to the peaceful political process in South Africa.

I wish to put it plainly that the Government has taken a firm decision to release Mr. Mandela unconditionally. I am serious about bringing this matter to finality without delay. The Government will make a decision soon on the date of his release. Unfortunately, a further short passage of time is unavoidable.

Normally there is a certain passage of time between the decision to release and the actual release because of logistical and administrative requirements. In the case of Mr. Mandela there are factors in the way of his immediate release, of which his personal circumstances and safety are not the least. He has not been an ordinary prisoner for quite some time. Because of that, his case requires particular circumspection.

Today's announcements, in particular, go to the heart of what Black leaders—also Mr. Mandela—have been advancing over the years as their reason for having resorted to violence. The allegation has been that the Government did not wish to talk to them and that they were deprived of their right to normal political activity by the prohibition of their organisations.

Without conceding that violence has ever been justified, I wish to say today to those who argued in this manner:

The Government wishes to talk to all leaders who seek peace.

The unconditional lifting of the prohibition on the said organizations places everybody in a position to pursue politics freely.

The justification for violence which was always advanced, no longer exists.

These facts place everybody in South Africa before a fait accompli. On the basis of numerous previous statements there is no longer any reasonable excuse for the continuation of violence. The time for talking has arrived and whoever still makes excuses does not really wish to talk.

Therefore, I repeat my invitation with greater conviction then ever:

Walk through the open door, take your place at the negotiating table together with the Government and other leaders who have important power bases inside and outside of Parliament.

Henceforth, everybody's political points of view will be tested against their realism, their workability and their fairness. The time for negotiation has arrived.

To those political leaders who have always resisted violence I say thank you for your principled stands. This includes all the leaders of parliamentary parties, leaders of important organizations and movements, such as Chief Minister Buthelezi, all of the other Chief Ministers and urban community leaders.

Through their participation and discussion they have made an important contribution to this moment in which the process of free political participation is able to be restored. Their places in the negotiating process are assured.

CONCLUSION

In may inaugural address I said the following:

"All reasonable people in this country—by far the majority—anxiously await a message of hope. It is our responsibility as leaders in all spheres to provide that message realistically, with courage and conviction. If we fail in that, the ensuing chaos, the demise of stability and progress, will forever be held against us.

"History has thrust upon the leadership of this country the tremendous responsibility to turn our country away from its present direction of conflict and confrontation. Only we, the leaders of our peoples, can do it.

"The eyes of responsible governments across the world are focused on us. The hopes of millions of South Africans are centered around us. The future of Southern Africa depends on us. We dare not falter or fail."

This is where we stand:

Deeply under the impression of our responsibility.

Humble in the face of the tremendous challenges ahead.

Determined to move forward in faith and with conviction.

I ask of Parliament to assist me on the road ahead. There is much to be done.

I call on the international community to re-evaluate its position and to adopt a positive attitude towards the dynamic evolution which is taking place in South Africa.

I pray that the Almighty Lord will guide and sustain us on our course through unchartered waters and will bless your labours and deliberations.

Mr. Speaker, Members of Parliament, I now declare this Second Session of the Ninth Parliament of the Republic of South Africa to be duly opened.

Mr. CRANSTON. Mr. President, as Senate floor manager of the 1986 Comprehensive Anti-Apartheid Act, I am pleased to join with fellow congressional leaders of antiapartheid movement to reaffirm our commitment to combating apartheid and promoting multiracial democracy in South Africa.

Our message is clear.

The days of the repugnant apartheid regime are numbered. Like the Berlin wall, the obscene barriers of the apartheid state must soon crumble.

The courage of those in South Africa working for democracy—black and white—will clearly carry the day.

Sanctions have worked. By marshaling moral, diplomatic, and economic influence, we have helped impress upon South African leaders the urgency and inevitability of change.

The bipartisan resolution we are introducing today sets forth the following clear principles.

First, we welcome the commitment to nonviolence voiced by Nelson Mandela and his colleagues in the African National Congress.

We also welcome the courageous moves of F.W. de Klerk.

But these are just first steps. All the instruments of the hated apartheid state remain in place. Black citizens still cannot vote, cannot live where they want, work where they wish.

Congress extends two hands to the people of South Africa. We offer both carrots and sticks: the incentive of expanded trade and significant aid to a multiracial democracy; the commitment of continued sanctions if the instruments of apartheid are not swiftly dismantled.

Mr. President, I submit for the RECORD the following documents:

The text of section 311 of the 1986 act; and

A Senate Foreign Relations Committee staff memorandum explains these conditions, a memorandum which serves as the basis for the action we are taking today.

ELABORATION ON CONDITIONS OF 1986 ANTI-APARTHEID ACT

CONDITION (SEC. 311(A))

1. This includes, throughout South Africa, all those detained without charge and sentenced or currently prosecuted for "security" offenses motivated by political resistance to apartheid. It also addresses those who have been sentenced or prosecuted for offenses committed because they were swept up in anti-apartheid unrest.

2. The state of emergency in place at the time of enactment was nationwide. Repeal of the state of emergency includes the repeal of all emergency restrictions affecting the media, anti-apartheid groups and organizations including those dealing with education, and police powers.

3. This includes, throughout South Africa, such conditions as freedom of expression, publication, assembly, association and movement (including the return of exiles), and freedom from violence and intimidation by the military, police, and vigilante forces.

4. Self-explanatory.

5. "Truly representative members of the black majority" refers to those individuals who represent the genuine political aspirations of the black community and does not include individuals who represent elements of the black community because of their positions in apartheid structures, such as the homeland leaders.

"Good faith negotiations" are negotiations designed to bring about the real dismantling of apartheid and the creation of a political system in which individual rights, including the right to vote and full political participation, are provided for all races.

CONDITION 3 UNDER SECTION 311(B)

"Substantial progress toward dismantling the system" means repealing some of the legislative pillars of apartheid.

Substantial progress toward establishing a "nonracial democracy" means demonstrating a willingness to abandon the concept of "group rights" as a means of protecting individual rights and to establish a political system based on the fundamental democratic principle of majority rule, while also recognizing the need to protect individual rights.

TERMINATION OF CERTAIN PROVISIONS

SEC. 311. (a) This title and sections 501(c) and 504(b) shall terminate if the Government of South Africa—

(1) releases all persons persecuted for their political beliefs or detained unduly without trial and Nelson Mandela from prison;

(2) repeals the state of emergency in effect on the date of enactment of this Act and releases all detainees held under such state of emergency;

(3) unbans democratic political parties and permits the free exercise by South Africans of all races of the right to form political parties, express political opinions, and otherwise participate in the political process;

(4) repeals the Group Areas Act and the Population Registration Act and institutes no other measures with the same purposes; and

(5) agrees to enter into good faith negotiations with truly representative members of the black majority without preconditions.

(b) The President may suspend or modify any of the measures required by this title or section 501(c) or section 504(b) thirty days after he determines, and so reports to the Speaker of the House of Representatives and the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations of the Senate, that the Government of South Africa has—

(1) taken the action described in paragraph (1) of subsection (a),

(2) taken three of the four actions listed in paragraphs (2) through (5) of subsection (a), and

(3) made substantial progress toward dismantling the system of apartheid and establishing a nonracial democracy, unless the Congress enacts within such 30-day period, in accordance with section 602 of this Act, a joint resolution disapproving the determination of the President under this subsection.

(c) It is the policy of the United States to support the negotiations with the representatives of all communities as envisioned in this Act. If the South African Government agrees to enter into negotiations without preconditions, abandons unprovoked violence against its opponents, commits itself to a free and democratic post-apartheid South Africa under a code of law; and if nonetheless the African National Congress, the Pan African Congress, or their affiliates, or other organizations, refuse to participate; or if the African National Congress, the Pan African Congress or other organizations—

(1) refuse to abandon unprovoked violence during such negotiations; and

(2) refuse to commit themselves to a free and democratic post-apartheid South Africa under a code of law, then the United States will support negotiations which do not include these organizations.

Mr. BOREN. Mr. President, I am pleased to join with a bipartisan group of my Senate colleagues in sponsoring this joint resolution on the changes in South Africa. The resolution shows our support for the positive developments in South Africa, as well as for the political process that began last year and has accelerated during the past few weeks.

I believe this resolution accurately reflects the feelings of Members of Congress, the administration, and the American people. All Americans welcome the political process that has begun, and all of us hope that the longstanding goal of a just and nonracial South Africa can finally be realized in the foreseeable future.

The events in South Africa of the last month have truly been historic.

The release of Nelson Mandela is an event all of us have long been awaiting. His moral and symbolic leadership in fighting apartheid serves as an inspiring example for people around the world who are working for justice and political and economic freedom. His speeches and interviews following his release were very positive, and highlighted his lifelong commitment to a nonracial just society for all South Africans.

President de Klerk has embarked on a courageous path toward achieving a peaceful resolution to his country's problems. His opening speech to the South African Parliament, announcing the unbanning of the ANC and other political organizations and stating his dedication to opening negotiations with leaders of the opposition, along with his statement announcing the release of Nelson Mandela herald a new phase in the political development in South Africa.

Mr. President, I want to especially highlight for my colleagues the speeches Nelson Mandela gave in Cape Town and in Soweto, as well as the opening address by President de Klerk at the opening of Parliament. I ask unanimous consent that these three speeches be included in the RECORD at the end of my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there is no objection, the speeches will be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. BOREN. While there are fundamental political, cultural, and economic differences, I believe analogies between President de Klerk's leadership and that of President Gorbachev in the Soviet Union contain a great deal of truth. Both men are attempting to lead their country out of a troubled past to a new country with political and economic freedoms for all. Both are responding to historic developments, political as well as economical, that dictate either progress or a final failure, with the very viability of their countries at stake.

Both also face strong opposition from the political extremes in both countries. However, one crucial difference prevents the analogy from being complete. The changes in the Soviet Union have had a profound impact on the political culture in that country, and the drive for political freedom in regions of the Soviet Union can never be rolled back. However, the changes we have seen in South Africa are reversible. Because of this, our country needs to be vigilante, and work closely together to enhance the delicate process underway. We cannot respond and act all at once. We must take deliberate steps, in a step-by-step process, to encourage progress and maintain our leverage for continuing change. This applies to the sanctions currently in place, as well as possible future positive gestures. Our approach must not be one that is an all or nothing approach toward sanctions but one which allows us a range of reactions phased to coincide with the actual rate of real progress in the negotiations. A proportional approach should be followed.

To this end, I believe it is crucial that the President and the Secretary of State work closely with leaders of Congress to ensure the United States speaks with one voice, sends one message, and articulates a common set of goals for change in South Africa. Through a united position, we can best influence positive change within that country.

President Bush decided at the onset of his administration to set a different tone in United States policy toward South Africa. After my visit to that country in December 1988, I met with the President on a number of occasions to discuss U.S. policy. I encouraged him to invite a Albertina Sisulu and leaders of the United Democratic Front to come to the United States and talk directly with him. His personal invitation and positive meeting with "Mama" Sisulu, as well as his earlier meeting with Archbishop Tutu, the Reverend Boesak, and the Reverend Naude were very significant, and highlighted his personal interest in South Africa. This was a marked change from the previous administration, and opens the opportunity for a new partnership with Congress on U.S. policy as we move forward. President Bush deserves commendation for moving administration policy in more potentially helpful directions.

I hope both Nelson Mandela and President de Klerk have the opportunity to visit our country in the coming weeks. Their thoughts, visions, and plans would be welcome here, and a first hard account would help all U.S. policymakers for the future.

I look forward to sitting down with Secretary Baker and the bipartisan leaders of Congress to discuss these changes in South Africa and where our policy goes from here if progress continues, including the details concerning modifying sanctions under the 1986 Comprehensive Anti-Apartheid Act. Our country's role in encouraging this process will be greatly enhanced if we speak with one voice. As I believe with all matters of foreign policy, a united, bipartisan stand is the best avenue to positively affect the current situation.

Again, Mr. President, I want to commend all of my colleagues in joining together on this resolution. I hope this is a symbol of the work all of us can do together in promoting the changes underway in South Africa.

EXCERPTS FROM THE SPEECH BY MANDELA IN SOWETO

SOWETO, SOUTH AFRICA, February 13.—Following are excerpts from Nelson Mandela's speech here today:

HIS PRIDE IN SOWETO

. . . As proud as I am to be part of the Soweto community, I have been greatly disturbed by the statistics of crime, what I have read in the newspapers. Although I understand the deprivations our people suffer, I must make it clear that the level of crime in our township is unhealthy and must be eliminated as a matter of urgency. I salute the anti-crime campaigns conducted by our organizations.

The crisis in education that exists in South Africa demands special attention. The education crisis in black schools is a political crisis. It arises out of the fact that our people have no vote and therefore cannot make the government of the day responsive to their needs.

Apartheid education is inferior and a crime against humanity. Education is an area that needs attention, that needs the attention of all our people, students, parents, teachers, workers and all of the organized sectors of our community. . . .

THE POWER OF EDUCATION

It has been the policy of the A.N.C. that the entire education system is a site of struggle . . . I want to add my voice therefore to the call made at the beginning of the year: that all students must return to school and learn.

We must continue our struggle for people's education within the school system and utilize its resources to achieve our goals. I call on the Government to build more schools, to train and employ more teachers, and to abandon its policies of forcing our children out of the school system by use of various measures. . . .

THE VIOLENCE OF APARTHEID

As I said when I stood on the dock at the Rivonia Trial 27 years ago and as I said on the day of my release in Cape Town, the A.N.C. will pursue the armed struggle against the Government as long as the violence of apartheid continues.

Our armed combatants act under the political leadership of the A.N.C., cadres of our people's army are engaged not only in military affairs but as the political commissars of our movement. We are therefore disturbed that there are certain elements amongst those who claim to support the liberation struggle who use violence against our people. The hijacking and setting alight of vehicles and the harassment of innocent people are criminal acts that have no place in our struggle. We condemn that. . . .

POWER IN NUMBERS

Our major weapon of struggle against apartheid oppression . . . is our people organized into mass formation of the democratic movement. This is achieved by politically organizing our people, not through the use of violence against our people.

I call in the strongest possible way for us to act with the dignity and discipline that our just struggle for freedom deserves. Our vigils must be celebrated in peace and joy. In particular I call on our people in Natal to unite against the perpetrators of violence . . . Let us act with political foresight and develop bold steps to end the mindless violence.

. . . We understand that attempts have been made to disrupt the unity of the oppressed by starting tensions between African and Indian communities in Natal. Let us build from the proud tradition of unity in action.

BLACKS BUILT THE NATION

We call on the police to abandon apartheid, to serve the interests of the people. Join our march to a new South Africa where you also have a place. We note with appreciation that there are certain areas where policemen are acting with restraint and fulfilling the real role of protecting all our people irrespective of their race.

Much debate has been spoken of the A.N.C. policies on the economy relating to nationalization and the redistribution of wealth. We believe that apartheid has created a heinous system of exploitation in which a racist minority monopolizes economic wealth while the vast majority of the oppressed and black people are condemned to poverty.

South Africa is a wealthy country. It is the labor of black workers that has built the cities, roads and factories we see. They cannot be excluded from sharing this wealth. The A.N.C. is just as committed to economic growth and productivity as the present employer came to be. Yet we are also committed to ensure that a democratic government has the resources to address the inequalities caused by apartheid. Our people need proper houses, not ghettos like Soweto. . . .

A LIVING WAGE

Workers need a living wage and the right to join unions of their own choice and to participate in determining policies that affect their lives. . . .

We call on employers to recognize the fundamental rights of workers in our country. We are marching to a new future based on strong foundations of respect for each other achieved through bona-fide negotiations. In particular, we call for genuine negotiations to achieve a fair Labor Relations Act and mechanisms to resolve conflict.

Employers can play their role in shaping the new South Africa by acknowledging these rights. We call on workers, black and white, to join industrial trade unions. . . .

The fears of whites about their rights and place in a South Africa they do not control exclusively are an obstacle we must understand and address. I stated in 1964 that I and the A.N.C. are as opposed to black domination as we are to white domination. We must accept that our statements and declarations alone will not be sufficient to allay the fears of white South Africans. We must clearly demonstrate our good will to our white compatriots and convince them by our conduct . . . that a South Africa without apartheid will be a better home for all. . . .

ONE PERSON ONE VOTE

We call on those who out of ignorance have collaborated with apartheid in the past to join our liberation struggle. No men or women who have abandoned apartheid will be excluded from our movement towards a nonracial, united and democratic South Africa based on one person one vote, on a common voters roll. . . .

MASSES CONTROL HISTORY

Two days ago, in my address in Cape Town, I told the audience that I have read on numerous occasions that it is not the kings and generals that make history but the masses of the people. I have always believed in this.

But much to the extent to which I now believe that basic principle because I have seen with my own eyes the masses of our people, the workers, the peasants, the doctors, the lawyers, the clergy, all our people I have seen them making history and that is why all of us are here today.

(Following is a transcript of the address at Cape Town City Hall yesterday by Nelson Mandela, as recorded by The New York Times through the facilities of Cable News Network. Portions of the speech were delivered in Xhosa, one of the major languages spoken by black South Africa.)

Amandla! Amandla! i-Afrika, mayibuye! [Power! Power! Africa it is ours!]

My friends, comrades and fellow South Africans, I greet you all in the name of peace, democracy and freedom for all. I stand here before you not as a prophet but as a humble servant of you, the people.

Your tireless and heroic sacrifices have made it possible for me to be here today. I therefore place the remaining years of my life in your hands.

On this day of my release, I extend my sincere and warmest gratitude to the millions of my compatriots and those in every corner of the globe who have compaigned tirelessly for my release.

I extend special greetings to the people of Cape Town, the city to which, which has been my home for three decades. Your mass marches and other forms of st-uggle have served as a constant source of strength to all political prisoners.

I salute the African National Congress. It has fulfilled our every expectation in its role as leader of the great march to freedom.

I salute our president, Comrade Oliver Tambo, for leading the A.N.C. even under the most difficult circumstances.

I salute the rank-and-file members of the A.N.C. You have sacrificed life and limb in the pursuit of the noble cause of our struggle.

LEADER'S SALUTATIONS

I salute combatants of Umkonto We Sizwe [Spear of the Nation], like Solomon Malhangu and Ashley Kriel, who have paid the ultimate price for the freedom of all South Africans.

I salute the South Africa Communist Party for its steady contribution to the struggle for democracy. You have survived 40 years of unrelenting persecution. The memory of great Communists like Moses Kotane, Yusuf Dacoo, Bram Fischer and Moses Madidha will be cherished for generations to come.

I salute General Secretary Joe Slovo, one of our finest patriots. We are heartened by the fact that the alliance between ourselves and the party remains as strong as it always was.

I salute the United Democratic Front, the National Education Crisis Committee, the South African Youth Congress, the Transvaal and Natal Indian Congresses. And Cosatu. And the many other formations of the mass democratic movement.

I also salute the Black Sash and the National Union of South African Students. We note with pride that you have acted as the conscience of white South Africans. Even during the darkest days in the history of our struggle, you held the flag of liberty high. The large-scale mass mobilization of the past few years is one of the key factors which led to the opening of the final chapter of our struggle.

I extend my greetings to the working class of our country. Your organized stance is the pride of our movement. You remain the most dependable force in the struggle to end exploitation and oppression.

TRIBUTES TO CAMPAIGNERS

I pay tribute—I pay tribute to the many religious communities who carried the campaign for justice forward when the organizations of our people were silenced.

I greet the traditional leaders of our country. Many among you continue to walk in the footsteps of great heroes like Hintsa and Sekhukhuni.

I pay tribute to the endless heroes of youth. You, the young lions. You the young lions have energized our entire struggle.

I pay tribute to the mothers and wives and sisters of our nation. You are the rock-hard foundation of our struggle. Apartheid has inflicted more pain on you than on anyone else. On this occasion, we thank the world—we thank the world community for their great contribution to the antiapartheid struggle. Without your support our struggle would not have reached this advanced stage.

The sacrifice of the front-line states will be remembered by South Africans forever.

My salutations will be incomplete without expressing my deep appreciation for the strength given to me during my long and lonely years in prison by my beloved wife and family.

I am convinced that your pain and suffering was far greater than my own.

NEED FOR ARMED STRUGGLE

Before I go any further, I wish to make the point that I intend making only a few perliminary comments at this stage. I will make a more complete statement only after I have had the opportunity to consult with my comrades.

Today the majority of South Africans, black and white, recognize that apartheid has no future. It has to be ended by our own decisive mass actions in order to build peace and security. The mass compaigns of defiance and other actions of our organizations and people can only culminate in the establishment of democracy.

The apartheid destruction on our subcontinent is incalculable. The fabric of family life of millions of my people has been shattered. Millions are homeless and unemployed.

Our economy—our economy lies in ruins and our people are embroiled in political strife. Our resort to the armed struggle in 1960 with the formation of the military wing of the A.N.C., Umkonto We Sizwe, was a purely defensive action against the violence of apartheid.

The factors which necessitated the armed struggle still exist today. We have no option but to continue. We express the hope that a climate conducive to a negotiated settlement would be created soon so that there may no longer be the need for the armed struggle.

I am a loyal and disciplined member of the African National Congress. I am, therefore, in full agreement with all of its objectives, strategies and tactics.

DEMOCRATIC PRACTICE

The need to unite the people of our country is as important a task now as it always has been. No individual leader is able to take all these enormous tasks on his own. It is our task as leaders to place our views before our organization and to allow the democratic structures to decide on the way forward.

On the question of democratic practice, I feel duty bound to make the point that a leader of the movement is a person who has been democratically elected at a national conference. This is a principle which must be upheld without any exceptions.

Today, I wish to report to you that my talks with the Government have been aimed at normalizing the political situation in the country. We have not as yet begun discussing the basic demands of the struggle.

I wish to stress that I myself had at no time entered into negotiations about the future of our country, except to insist on a meeting between the A.N.C. and the Government.

Mr. de Klerk has gone further than any other Nationalist president in taking real steps to normalize the situation. However, there are further steps as outlined in the Harare Declaration that have to be met before negotiations on the basic demands of our people can begin.

I reiterate our call for inter alia the immediate ending of the state of emergency and the freeing of all, and not only some, political prisoners.

A DECISIVE MOMENT

Only such a normalized situation which allows for free political activity can allow us to consult our people in order to obtain a mandate. The people need to be consulted on who will negotiate and on the content of such negotiations.

Negotiations cannot take place—negotiations cannot take up a place above the heads or behind the backs of our people. It is our belief that the future of our country can only be determined by a body which is democratically elected on a nonracial-basis.

Negotiations on the dismantling of apartheid will have to address the overwhelming demand of our people for a democratic nonracial and unitary South Africa. There must be an end to white monopoly on political power.

And a fundamental restructuring of our political and economic systems to insure that the inequalities of apartheid are addressed and our society thoroughly democratized.

It must be added that Mr. de Klerk himself is a man of integrity who is acutely aware of the dangers of a public figure not honoring his undertakings. But as an organization, we base our policy and strategy on the harsh reality we are faced with, and this reality is that we are still suffering under the policies of the Nationalist Government.

Our struggle has reached a decisive moment. We call on our people to seize this moment so that the process, toward democracy is rapid and uninterrupted. We have waited too long for our freedom. We can no longer wait. Now is the time to intensify the struggle on all fronts.

UNIVERSAL SUFFRAGE

To relax our efforts now would be a mistake which generations to come will not be able to forgive. The sight of freedom looming on the horizon should encourage us to redouble our efforts. It is only through disciplined mass action that our victory can be assured.

We call on our white compatriots to join us in the shaping of a new South Africa. The freedom movement is the political home for you, too. We call on the international community to continue the campaign to isolate the apartheid regime.

To lift sanctions now would be to run the risk of aborting the process toward the complete eradication of apartheid. Our march to freedom is irreversible. We must not allow fear to stand in our way.

Universal suffrage on a common voters roll in a united democratic and nonracial South Africa is the only way to peace and racial harmony.

In conclusion, I wish to go to my own words during my trial in 1964. They are as true today as they were then. I wrote: I have fought against white domination, and I have fought against black domination. I have cherished the idea of a democratic and free society in which all persons live together in harmony and with equal opportunities.

It is an ideal which I hope to live for and to achieve. But if needs be, it is an ideal for which I am prepared to die.

[The following portion was delivered in Xhosa. The translation was provided by Mbulelo Mzamane, a professor of Comparative Literature at the University of Georgia.]

My friends, I have no words of eloquence to offer today except to say that the remaining days of my life are in your hands.

[He continued in English.] I hope you will disperse with discipline. And not a single one of you should do any thing which will make other people to say that we can't control our own people.

ADDRESS BY THE STATE PRESIDENT, MR. F.W. DE KLERK, DMS, AT THE OPENING OF THE SECOND SESSION OF THE NINTH PARLIAMENT OF THE REPUBLIC OF SOUTH AFRICA, CAPE TOWN, FEBRUARY 2, 1990

Mr. Speaker, Members of Parliament, the general election on September the 6th, 1989, placed our country irrevocably on the road of drastic change. Underlying this is the growing realisation by an increasing number of South Africans that only a negotiated understanding among the representative leaders of the entire population is able to ensure lasting peace.

The alternative is growing violence, tension and conflict. That is unacceptable and in nobody's interest. The well-being of all in this country is linked inextricably to the ability of the leaders to come to terms with one another on a new dispensation. No one can escape this simple truth.

On its part, the Government will accord the process of negotiation the highest priority. The aim is a totally new and just constitutional dispensation in which every inhabitant will enjoy equal rights, treatment and opportunity in every sphere of endeavour—constitutional, social and economic.

I hope that this new Parliament will play a constructive part in both the prelude to negotiations and the negotiating process itself. I wish to ask all of you who identify yourselves with the broad aim of a new South Africa, and that is the overwhelming majority:

Let us put petty politics aside when we discuss the future during this Session.

Help us build a broad consensus about the fundamentals of a new, realistic and democratic dispensation.

Let us work together on a plan that will rid our country of suspicion and steer it away from domination and radicalism of any kind.

During the term of this new Parliament, we shall have to deal, complementary to one another, with the normal processes of legislation and day-to-day government, as well as with the process of negotiation and renewal.

Within this framework I wish to deal first with several matters more closely concerned with the normal process of government before I turn specifically to negotiation and related issues.

1. FOREIGN RELATIONS

The Government is aware of the important part the world at large has to play in the realisation of our country's national interests.

Without contact and co-operation with the rest of the world we cannot promote the well-being and security of our citizens. The dynamic developments in international politics have created new opportunities for South Africa as well. Important advances have been made, among other things, in our contacts abroad, especially where these were precluded previously by ideological considerations.

I hope this trend will be encouraged by the important change of climate that is taking place in South Africa.

For South Africa, indeed for the whole world, the past year has been one of change and major upheaval. In Eastern Europe and even the Soviet Union itself, political and economic upheaval surged forward in an unstoppable tide. At the same time, Beijing temporarily smothered with brutal violence the yearning of the people of the Chinese mainland for greater freedom.

The year of 1989 will go down in history as the year in which Stalinist Communism expired.

These developments will entail unpredictable consequences for Europe, but they will also be of decisive importance to Africa. The indications are that the countries of Eastern and Central Europe will receive greater attention, while it will decline in the case of Africa.

The collapse, particularly of the economic system in Eastern Europe, also serves as a warning to those who insist on persisting with it in Africa. Those who seek to force this failure of a system on South Africa, should engage in a total revision of their point of view. It should be clear to all that it is not the answer here either. The new situation in Eastern Europe also shows that foreign intervention is no recipe for domestic change. It never succeeds, regardless of its ideological motivation. The upheaval in Eastern Europe took place without the involvement of the Big Powers or of the United Nations.

The countries of Southern Africa are faced with a particular challenge: Southern Africa now has an historical opportunity to set aside its conflicts and ideological differences and draw up a joint programme of reconstruction.

It should be sufficiently attractive to ensure that the Southern African region obtains adequate investment and loan capital from the industrial countries of the world. Unless the countries of Southern Africa achieve stability and a common approach to economic development rapidly, they will be faced by further decline and ruin.

The Government is prepared to enter into discussions with other Southern African countries with the aim of formulating a realistic development plan. The Government believes that the obstacles in the way of a conference of Southern African states have now been removed sufficiently.

Hostile postures have to be replaced by cooperative ones; confrontation by contact; disengagement by engagement; slogans by deliberate debate.

The season of violence is over. The time for reconstruction and reconciliation has arrived.

Recently there have, indeed, been unusually positive results in South Africa's contacts and relations with other African states. During my visits to their countries I was received cordially, both in private and in public, by Presidents Mobutu, Chissano, Houphouet-Boigny and Kaunda. These leaders expressed their sincere concern about the serious economic problems in our part of the world. They agreed that South Africa could and should play a positive part in regional co-operation and development.

Our positive contribution to the independence process in South West Africa has been recognized internationally. South Africa's good faith and reliability as a negotiator made a significant contribution to the success of the events. This, too, was not unnoticed. Similarly, our efforts to help bring an end to the domestic conflict situations in Mozambique and Angola have received positive acknowledgement.

At present the Government is involved in negotiations concerning our future relations with an independent Namibia and there are no reason why good relations should not exist between the two countries. Namibia needs South Africa and we are prepared to play a constructive part.

Nearer home I paid fruitful visits to Venda, Transkei and Ciskei and intend visiting Bophuthatswana soon. In recent times there has been an interesting debate about the future relationship of the TBVC countries with South Africa and specifically about whether they should be re-incorporated into our country.

Without rejecting this idea out of hand, it should be borne in mind that it is but one of many possibilities. These countries are constitutionally independent. Any return to South Africa will have to be dealt with, not only by means of legislation in their parliaments, but also through legislation in this Parliament. Naturally this will have to be preceded by talks and agreements.

2. HUMAN RIGHTS

Some time ago the Government referred the question of the protection of fundamental human rights to the Southern Africa Law Commission. This resulted in the Law Commission's interim working document on individual and minority rights. It elicited substantial public interest.

I am satisfied that every individual and organisation in the country has had ample opportunity to make representations to the Law Commission, express criticism freely and make suggestions. At present, the Law Commission is considering the representations received. A final report is expected in the course of this year.

In view of the exceptional importance of the subject of human rights to our country and all its people, I wish to ask the Law Commission to accord this task high priority.

The whole question of protecting individual and minority rights, which includes collective rights and the rights of national groups, is still under consideration by the Law Commission. Therefore, it would be inappropriate of the Government to express a view on the details now. However, certain matters of principle have emerged fairly clearly and I wish to devote some remarks to them.

The Government accepts the principle of the recognition and protection of the fundamental individual rights which form the constitutional basis of most Western democracies. We acknowledge, too, that the most practical way of protecting those rights is vested in a declaration of rights justifiable by an independent judiciary. However, it is clear that a system for the protection of the rights of individuals, minorities and national entities has to form a well-rounded and balanced whole. South Africa has its own national composition and our constitutional dispensation has to take this into account. The formal recognition of individual rights does not mean that the problems of a heterogeneous population will simply disappear. Any new constitution which disregards this reality will be inappropriate and even harmful.

Naturally, the protection of collective, minority and national rights may not bring about an imbalance in respect of individual rights. It is neither the Government's policy nor its intention that any group—in whichever way it may be defined—shall be favoured above or in relation to any of the others.

The Government is requesting the Law Commission to undertake further task and report on it. This task is directed at the balanced protection in a future constitution of the human rights of all our citizens, as well as of collective units, associations, minorities and nations. This investigation will also serve the purpose of supporting negotiations toward a new constitution.

The terms of reference also include:

The identification of the main types and models of democratic constitutions which deserve consideration in the aforementioned context;

An analysis of the ways in which the relevant rights are protected in every model; and

Possible methods by means of which such constitutions may be made to succeed and be safeguarded in a legitimate manner.

3. THE DEATH PENALTY

The death penalty has been the subject of intensive discussion in recent months. However, the Government has been giving its attention to this extremely sensitive issue for some time. On April the 27th, 1989, the honourable Minister of Justice indicated that there was merit in suggestions for reform in this area. Since 1988 in fact, my predecessor and I have been taking decisions on reprieves which have led, in proportion, to a drastic decline in executions.

We have now reached the position in which we are able to make concrete proposals for reform. After the Chief Justice was consulted, and he in turn had consulted the Bench, and after the Government had noted the opinions of academics and other interested parties, the Government decided on the following broad principles from a variety of available options:

That reform in this area is indicated;

That the death penalty should be limited as an option of sentence to extreme cases, and specifically through broadening judicial discretion in the imposition of sentence; and

That an automatic right of appeal be granted to those under sentence of death.

Should these proposals be adopted, they should have a significant influence on the imposition of death sentences on the one hand, and on the other, should ensure that every case in which a person has been sentenced to death, will come to the attention of the Appellate Division.

These proposals require that everybody currently awaiting execution, be accorded the benefit of the proposed new approach. Therefore, all executions have been suspended and no executions will take place until Parliament has taken a final decision on the new proposals. In the event of the proposals being adopted, the case of every person involved will be dealt with in accordance with the new guidelines. In the meantime, no executions have taken place since November the 14th, 1989.

New and uncompleted cases will still be adjudicated in terms of the existing law. Only when the death sentence is imposed, will the new proposals be applied, as in the case of those currently awaiting execution.

The legislation concerned also details other related principles which will be announced and elucidated in due course by the Minister of Justice. It will now be formulated in consultation with experts and be submitted to Parliament as soon as possible.

I wish to urge everybody to join us in dealing with this highly sensitive issue in a responsible manner.

4. SOCIO-ECONOMIC ASPECTS

A changed dispensation implies far more than political and constitutional issues. It cannot be pursued successfully in isolation from problems in other spheres of life which demand practical solutions. Poverty, unemployment, housing shortages, inadequate education and training, illiteracy, health needs and numerous other problems still stand in the way of progress and prosperity and an improved quality of life.

The conservation of the physical and human environment is of cardinal importance to the quality of our existence. For this the Government is developing a strategy with the aid of an investigation by the President's Council.

All of these challenges are being dealt with urgently and comprehensively. The capability for this has to be created in an economically accountable manner. Consequently, existing strategies and aims are undergoing a comprehensive revision.

From this will emanate important policy announcements in the socio-economic sphere by the responsible Ministers during the course of the session. One matter about which it is possible to make a concrete announcement, is the Separate Amenities Act, 1953. Pursuant to my speech before the President's Council late last year, I announce that this Act will be repealed during this Session of Parliament.

The State cannot possibly deal alone with all of the social advancement our circumstances demand. The community at large, and especially the private sector, also have a major responsibility towards the welfare of our country and its people.

5. THE ECONOMY

A new South Africa is possible only if it is bolstered by a sound and growing economy, with particular emphasis on the creation of employment. With a view to this, the Government has taken thorough cognisance of the advice contained in numerous reports by a variety of advisory bodies. The central message is that South Africa, too, will have to make certain structural changes to its economy, just as its major trading partners had to do a decade or so ago.

The period of exceptionally high economic growth experienced by the Western world in the sixties, was brought to an end by the oil crisis in 1973. Drastic structural adaptations became inevitable for these countries, especially after the second oil crisis in 1979, when serious imbalances occurred in their economies. After considerable sacrifices, those countries which persevered with their structural adjustment programmes, recovered economically so that lengthy periods of high economic growth and low inflation were possible.

During that particular period, South Africa was protected temporarily by the rising gold price from the necessity of making similar adjustment immediately. In fact, the high gold price even brought prosperity with it for a while. The recovery of the world economy and the decline in the price of gold and other primary products, brought with them unhealthy trends. These included high inflation, a serious weakening in the productivity of capital, stagnation in the economy's ability to generate income and employment opportunities. All of this made a drastic structural adjustment of our economy inevitable.

The Government's basic point of departure is to reduce the role of the public sector in the economy and to give the private sector maximum opportunity for optimal performance. In this process, preference has to be given to allowing the market forces and a sound competitive structure to bring about the necessary adjustments.

Naturally, those who make and implement economic policy have a major responsibility at the same time to promote an environment optimally conducive to investment, job creation and economic growth by means of appropriate and properly co-ordinated fiscal and monetary policy. The Government remains committed to this balanced and practical approach.

By means of restricting capital expenditure in parastatal institutions, privatisation, deregulation and curtailing government expenditure, substantial progress has been made already towards reducing the role of the authorities in the economy. We shall persist with this in a well-considered way.

This does not mean that the State will forsake its indispensable development role, especially in our particular circumstances. On the contrary, it is the precise intention of the Government to concentrate an equitable portion of its capacity on these aims by means of the meticulous determination of priorities.

Following the progress that has been made in other areas of the economy in recent years, it is now opportune to give particular attention to the supply side of the economy. Fundamental factors which will contribute to the success of this restructuring are:

The gradual reduction of inflation to levels comparable to those of our principal trading partners;

The encouragement of personal initiative and savings;

The subjection of all economic decisions by the authorities to stringent financial measures and discipline;

Rapid progress with the reform of our system of taxation; and

The encouragement of exports as the impetus for industrialisation and earning foreign exchange.

These and other adjustments, which will require sacrifices, have to be seen as prerequisites for a new period of sustained growth in productive employment in the nineties.

The Government has also noted with appreciation the manner in which the Reserve Bank has discharged its special responsibility in striving toward common goals.

The Government is very much aware of the necessity of proper co-ordination and consistent implementation of its economic policy. For this reason, the establishment of the necessary structures and expertise to ensure this co-ordination is being given preference. This applies both to the various functions within the Government and to the interaction between the authorities and the private sector.

This is obviously not the occasion for me to deal in greater detail with our total economic strategy or with the recent course of the economy.

I shall confine myself to a few specific remarks on one aspect of fiscal policy that has been a source of criticism of the Government for some time, namely State expenditure.

The Government's financial year ends only in two month's time and several other important economic indicators for the 1989 calendar year are still subject to refinements at this stage. Nonetheless, several important trends are becoming increasingly clear. I am grateful to be able to say that we have apparently succeeded to a substantial degree in achieving most of our economic aims in the past year.

In respect of Government expenditure, the budget for the current financial year will be the most accurate in many years. The financial figures will show:

That Government expenditure is thoroughly under control;

That our normal financing programme has not exerted any significant upward pressure on rates of interest; and

That we will close the year with a surplus, even without taking the income from the privatisation of Iscor into account.

Without pre-empting this year's main budget, I wish to emphasise that it is also our intention to co-ordinate fiscal and monetary policy in the coming financial year in a way that will enable us to achieve the ensuing goals—namely:

That the present downturn will take the form of a soft landing which will help to make adjustments as easy as possible;

That our economy will consolidate before the next upward phase so that we will be able to grow from a sound base; and

That we shall persist with the implementation of the required structural adaptations in respect, among other things, of the following; easing the tax burden, especially on individuals; sustained and adequate generation of surpluses on the current account of the balance of payments and the reconstruction of our gold and foreign exchange reserves.

It is a matter of considerable seriousness to the Government, especially in this particular period of our history, to promote a dynamic economy which will make it possible for increasing numbers of people to be employed and share in rising standards of living.

6. NEGOTIATION

In conclusion, I wish to focus the spotlight on the process of negotiation and related issues. At this stage I am refraining deliberately from discussing the merits of numerous political questions which undoubtedly will be debated during the next few weeks. The focus, now, has to fall on negotiation.

Practically every leader agrees that negotiation is the key to reconciliation, peace and a new and just dispensation. However, numerous excuses for refusing to take part, are advanced. Some of the reasons being advanced are valid. Others are merely part of a political chess game. And while the game of chess proceeds, valuable time is being lost.

Against this background I committed the Government during my inauguration to giving active attention to the most important obstacles in the way of negotiation. Today I am able to announce far-reaching decisions in this connection.

I believe that these decisions will shape a new phase in which there will be a movement away from measures which have been seized upon as a justification for confrontation and violence. The emphasis has to move, and will move now, to a debate and discussion of political and economic points of view as part of the process of negotiation.

I wish to urge every political and community leader, in and outside Parliament, to approach the new opportunities which are being created, constructively. There is no time left for advancing all manner of new conditions that will delay the negotiating process.

The steps that have been decided, are the following:

The prohibition of the African National Congress, the Pan Africanist Congress, the South African Communist Party and a number of subsidiary organisations is being rescinded.

People serving prison sentences merely because they were members of one of these organisations or because they committed another offence which was merely an offence because a prohibition on one of the organisations was in force, will be identified and released. Prisoners who have been sentenced for other offences such as murder, terrorism or arson are not affected by this.

The media emergency regulations as well as the education emergency regulations are being abolished in their entirety.

The security emergency regulations will be amended to still make provision for effective control over visual material pertaining to scenes of unrest.

The restrictions in terms of the emergency regulations on 33 organisations are being rescinded. The organisations include the following: National Education Crisis Committee, South African National Students Congress, United Democratic Front, Cosatu, and Die Blanke Bevrydingsbeweging van Suid-Afrika.

The conditions imposed in terms of the security emergency regulations on 374 people on their release, are being rescinded and the regulations which provide for such conditions are being abolished.

The period of detention in terms of the security emergency regulations will be limited henceforth to six months. Detainees also acquire the right to legal representation and a medical practitioner of their own choosing.

These decisions by the Cabinet are in accordance with the Government's declared intention to normalise the political process in South Africa without jeopardising the maintenance of the good order. They were preceded by thorough and unanimous advice by a group of officials which included members of the security community.

Implementation will be immediate and, where necessary, notices will appear in the Government Gazette from tomorrow.

The most important facets of the advice the Government received in this connection, are the following:

The events in the Soviet Union and Eastern Europe, to which I have referred already, weaken the capability of organisations which were previously supported strongly from those quarters.

The activities of the organisations from which the prohibitions are now being lifted, no longer entail the same degree of threat to internal security which initially necessitated the imposition of the prohibitions.

There have been important shifts of emphasis in the statements and points of view of the most important of the organisations concerned, which indicate a new approach and a preference for peaceful solutions.

The South African Police is convinced that it is able, in the present circumstances, to combat violence and other crimes perpetrated also by members of these organisations and to bring offenders to justice without the aid of prohibitions on organisations.

About one matter there should be no doubt. The lifting of the prohibition on the said organisations does not signify in the least the approval or condonation of terrorism or crimes of violence committed under their banner or which may be perpetrated in the future. Equally, it should not be interpreted as a deviation from the Government's principles, among other things, against their economic policy and aspects of their constitutional policy. This will be dealt with in debate and negotiation.

At the same time I wish to emphasise that the maintenance of law and order dare not be jeopardised. The Government will not forsake its duty in this connection. Violence from whichever source, will be fought with all available might. Peaceful protest may not become the springboard for lawlessness, violence and intimidation. No democratic country can tolerate that.

Strong emphasis will be placed as well on even more effective law enforcement. Proper provision of manpower and means for the police and all who are involved with the enforcement of the law, will be ensured. In fact, the budget for the coming financial year will already begin to give effect to this.

I wish to thank the members of our security forces and related services for the dedicated service they have rendered the Republic of South Africa. Their dedication makes reform in a stable climate possible.

On the state of emergency I have been advised that an emergency situation, which justifies these special measures which have been retained, still exists. There is still conflict which is manifesting itself mainly in Natal, but as a consequence of the country-wide political power struggle. In addition, there are indications that radicals are still trying to disrupt the possibilities of negotiation by means of mass violence.

It is my intention to terminate the state of emergency completely as soon as circumstances justify it and I request the co-operation of everybody towards this end. Those responsible for unrest and conflict have to bear the blame for the continuing state of emergency. In the meantime, the state of emergency is inhibiting only those who use chaos and disorder as political instruments. Otherwise the rules of the game under the state of emergency are the same for everybody.

Against this background the Government is convinced that the decisions I have announced are justified from the security point of view. However, these decisions are justified from a political point of view as well.

Our country and all its people have been embroiled in conflict, tension and violent struggle for decades. It is time for us to break out of the cycle of violence and break through to peace and reconciliation. The silent majority is yearning for this. The youth deserve it.

With the steps the Government has taken it has proven its good faith and the table is laid for sensible leaders to begin talking about a new dispensation, to reach an understanding by way of dialogue and discussion.

The agenda is open and the overall aims to which we are aspiring should be acceptable to all reasonable South Africans.

Among other things, those aims include a new, democratic constitution; universal franchise; no domination; equality before an independent judiciary; the protection of minorities as well as of individual rights; freedom of religion; a sound economy based on proven economic principles and private enterprise; dynamic programmes directed at better education, health services, housing and social conditions for all.

In this connection Mr. Nelson Mandela could play an important part. The Government has noted that he has declared himself to be willing to make a constructive contribution to the peaceful political process in South Africa.

I wish to put it plainly that the Government has taken a firm decision to release Mr. Mandela unconditionally. I am serious about bringing this matter to finality without delay. The Government will make a decision soon on the date of his release. Unfortunately, a further short passage of time is unavoidable.

Normally there is a certain passage of time between the decision to release and the actual release because of logistical and administrative requirements. In the case of Mr. Mandela there are factors in the way of his immediate release, of which his personal circumstances and safety are not the least. He has not been an ordinary prisoner for quite some time. Because of that, his case requires particular circumspection.

Today's announcements, in particular, go to the heart of what Black leaders—also Mr. Mandela—have been advancing over the years as their reason for having resorted to violence. The allegation has been that the Government did not wish to talk to them and that they were deprived of their right to normal political activity by the prohibition of their organisations.

Without conceding that violence has ever been justified, I wish to say today to those who argued in this manner:

The Government wishes to talk to all leaders who seek peace.

The unconditional lifting of the prohibition on the said organizations places everybody in a position to pursue politics freely.

The justification for violence which was always advanced, no longer exists.

These facts place everybody in South Africa before a fait accompli. On the basis of numerous previous statements there is no longer any reasonable excuse for the continuation of violence. The time for talking has arrived and whoever still makes excuses does not really wish to talk.

Therefore, I repeat my invitation with greater conviction then ever:

Walk through the open door, take your place at the negotiating table together with the Government and other leaders who have important power bases inside and outside of Parliament.

Henceforth, everybody's political points of view will be tested against their realism, their workability and their fairness. The time for negotiation has arrived.

To those political leaders who have always resisted violence I say thank you for your principled stands. This includes all the leaders of parliamentary parties, leaders of important organizations and movements, such as Chief Minister Buthelezi, all of the other Chief Ministers and urban community leaders.

Through their participation and discussion they have made an important contribution to this moment in which the process of free political participation is able to be restored. Their places in the negotiating process are assured.

CONCLUSION

In my inaugural address I said the following:

"All reasonable people in this country—by far the majority—anxiously await a message of hope. It is our responsibility as leaders in all spheres to provide that message realistically, with courage and conviction. If we fail in that, the ensuing chaos, the demise of stability and progress, will forever be held against us.

"History has thrust upon the leadership of this country the tremendous responsibility to turn our country away from its present direction of conflict and confrontation. Only we, the leaders of our peoples, can do it."

"The eyes of responsible governments across the world are focused on us. The hopes of millions of South Africans are centered around us. The future of Southern Africa depends on us. We dare not falter or fail."

This is where we stand:

Deeply under the impression of our responsibility.

Humble in the face of the tremendous challenges ahead.

Determined to move forward in faith and with conviction.

I ask of Parliament to assist me on the road ahead. There is much to be done.

I call on the international community to re-evaluate its position and to adopt a positive attitude towards the dynamic evolution which is taking place in South Africa.

I pray that the Almighty Lord will guide and sustain us on our course through unchartered waters and will bless your labours and deliberations.

Mr. Speaker, Members of Parliament, I now declare this Second Session of the Ninth Parliament of the Republic of South Africa to be duly opened.

SENATE CONCURRENT RESOLUTION 95—RELATING TO NEGOTIATIONS RELATIVE TO GERMAN UNIFICATION

Mr. SIMON (for himself and Ms. MIKULSKI) submitted the following concurrent resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations:

S. CON. RES. 95

Whereas, a uniting of the two governments of Germany into one entity appears likely in the near future; and

Whereas, the people of Germany and all of Europe, who have experienced the painful consequences of military aggression in the past, desire to live in peace and freedom in a Europe free of military aggression;

Whereas, France, Poland and Czechoslovakia have special reason for making sure that great care is exercised as preparations are made for a united Germany; and

Whereas, the upcoming conference on German unification includes only one of those three countries, France; and

Whereas, the people of Poland and Czechoslovakia have suffered greatly when decisions were made on the future of Central Europe by other nations, without consultations with the Governments of Poland and Czechoslovakia;

Whereas, other bordering nations have much at stake in the unification of Germany: Therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That it is the Sense of the Congress that Prime Minister Tadeusz Mazowiecki and President Vaclav Havel and other designated leaders of the Polish and Czechoslovak Governments should be consulted by the governments of the United States, the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, Great Britain and France both prior to the upcoming meeting and during its sessions: Be it further

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the leaders of other bordering nations should also be consulted by the governments of the United States, the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, Great Britain and France both prior to the upcoming meeting and during its sessions.

Mr. SIMON. Madam President, I am submitting a concurrent resolution that calls for consultation with Poland and the other bordering countries of Germany in connection with the talks that are going to be taking place on the unification of Germany. I had frankly hoped that we would have clearance to take this up and suspend the rules and take it up immediately. There is objection by one member of the Foreign Relations Committee to doing that. So I am submitting it. I hope we can move it expeditiously.

There is concern, particularly in Poland. There are only two nations that have experienced dramatic changes in the lifetimes of any of us in this body in connection with Germany. One is France and one is Poland. France is a member of the two plus four, one of the big four that is going to be talking about this.

There is concern in Poland that actions are going to be taken without consultation with Poland. Frankly, the consultation should not be just with Poland. It should be with Czechoslovakia, it should be with Austria, Denmark, Netherlands, Begium. It should be with the other bordering countries. The resolution simply calls for that consultation; that the four superpowers—that is probably in incorrect terminology—that the United States, Soviet Union, France, and Great Britain should not act independently without consulting with these other bodies.

That is what the concurrent resolution does, very simply. It will be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations. I hope we can move it very quickly.

I think it is significant that Mr. Gorbachev has suggested that Poland should be considered. It seems to me to be not in our own national interest for Mr. Gorbachev to say Poland should be considered and we are not saying the same thing. It is not a very complicated thing that I am talking about. It is fairly simple. I hope we can get some positive action.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senator withhold?

The Chair in her capacity as a Senator from Maryland, asks unanimous consent to be included as an original cosponsor.

Mr. SIMON. I will be honored to have the Senator from Maryland as an original cosponsor.

SENATE RESOLUTION 247—RELATING TO HUMAN RIGHTS IN CUBA

Mr. DOLE (for Mr. MACK), (for himself, Mr. GRAHAM, Mr. MCCAIN, Mr. LIEBERMAN, Mr. KASTEN, Mr. COATS, Mr. GRAMM, and Mr. GORTON) submitted the following resolution; which was considered and agreed to:

S. RES. 247

Whereas the United Nations Human Rights Commission (UNHRC) sent a delegation to Cuba to investigate violations of human rights in Cuba in September, 1988;

Whereas the UNHRC delegation report found serious abuses of human rights, including "137 complaints of torture, cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment";

Whereas the Cuban Government gave public guarantees that no reprisals would be taken against Cuban citizens testifying before the UNHRC delegation;

Whereas after the visit of the UNHRC delegation more than twenty Cuban citizens who testified before the delegation were arrested, and the leaders of human rights groups imprisoned;

Whereas ninety United States Senators wrote to the United Nations Secretary General requesting that he intercede on behalf of Alfredo Mustelier Nuevo, Ernesto Diaz Rodriguez, and Mario Chanes de Armas, who have been incarcerated for over twenty years in Cuba;

Whereas on March 9, 1989, the UNHRC called on the Secretary General of the United Nations to "maintain direct contacts on the issues and questions contained in the report" on human rights in Cuba and take up the results of his efforts "in an appropriate manner";

Whereas the Secretary General of the United Nations has not acceded to the requests of the United States and other nations to provide a report on human rights situation in Cuba;

Whereas the UNHRC has appointed Special Rapporteurs to investigate and report on the situation of human rights in such countries as Iran, Afghanistan, El Salvador and Romania: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate, That the Senate hereby—

Condemns the Government of Cuba for retaliating against citizens who testified before the delegation of the United Nations Human Rights Commission (UNHRC);

Urges the Government of Cuba to release all human rights activists and other political prisoners, particularly those who have suffered over twenty years in prison;

Urges the Secretary General to prepare and make available to the 46th Session of the UNHRC a report on the results of his contacts with the Government of Cuba pursuant to UNHRC Resolution 89-113;

Urges the UNHRC to hold Cuba accountable to the standards embodied in the Universal Declaration of Human Rights;

Urges the UNHRC to appoint a Special Rapporteur to investigate the situation of human rights in Cuba and to submit a report for consideration at the 47th Session of the United Nations Human Rights Commission.

SENATE RESOLUTION 248—ESTABLISHING AN ADVISORY PANEL ON CAMPAIGN FINANCE REFORM

Mr. BYRD (for Mr. MITCHELL), (for himself and Mr. DOLE) submitted the following resolution; which was considered and agreed to:

S. RES. 248

Resolved, That the majority and minority leaders of the Senate are authorized to assemble an advisory panel (hereinafter referred to as the "Campaign Finance Reform Panel") to assist in the formulation of policy relating to campaign finance reform.

SEC. 2. The Secretary of the Senate is authorized and directed to pay from the contingent fund of the Senate, out of the account for miscellaneous items, the actual and reasonable expenses (including expenses incurred prior to the date this resolution is agreed to) incurred by members of the Campaign Finance Reform Panel for transportation and per diem expenses, in carrying out their functions as members of such Panel. Such expenses shall be paid on vouchers certified by the majority leader (or his designee), or the minority leader (or his designee) of the Senate.

AMENDMENTS SUBMITTED

STUDENT ATHLETE RIGHT-TO-KNOW ACT

BRADLEY (AND OTHERS) AMENDMENT NO. 1259

Mr. BYRD (for Mr. BRADLEY), (for himself, Mr. KENNEDY, and Mr. COCHRAN) proposed an amendment to the bill (S. 580) to require institutions of higher education receiving Federal financial assistance to provide certain information with respect to the graduation rates of student-athletes at such institutions, as follows:

Strike all after the enacting clause and insert the following:

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "Student Athlete Right-to-Know Act".

SEC. 2. FINDINGS.

The Congress finds that—

(1) education is fundamental to the development of individual citizens and the progress of the Nation as a whole;

(2) there is increasing concern among citizens, educators, and public officials regarding the academic performance of student-athletes at institutions of higher education;

(3) an overwhelming majority of college presidents (86 percent) in a survey by the U.S. News and World Report believe that the pressure for success and financial rewards in intercollegiate athletics interfers with the educational mission of the United States' colleges and universities;

(4) more than 10,000 athletic scholarships are provided annually by institutions of higher education;

(5) prospective student atheltes and their families should be aware of the educational commitments prospective colleges make to athletes; and

(6) knowledge of the graduation rates of student-athletes would assist prospective students and their families in making an informed judgment about the educational benefits available at a given institution of higher education.

SEC. 3. REPORTING REQUIREMENTS FOR INSTITUTIONS OF HIGHER EDUCATION.

(A) REPORTS TO THE SECRETARY.—Each institution of higher education which receives Federal financial assistance and is attended by students receiving athletic scholarships shall annually submit a report to the Secretary which contains—

(1) the number of students at the institution of higher education who received athletically related student aid for football, basketball, and all other sports, broken down by race and sex;

(2) the number of students at the institution of higher education, broken down by race and sex;

(3) the graduation rate for students at the institution of higher education who received athletic scholarships for football, basketball, and all other sports, broken down by race and sex;

(4) the graduation rate for first-time, full-time students, broken down by race and sex;

(5) the average graduation rate for the 4 most recent graduating classes of students at the institution of higher education who received athletically related student aid for football, basketball, and all other sports, broken down by race and sex;

(6) the average graduation rate for the 4 most recent graduating classes of all students, broken down by race and sex; and

(7) the average graduation rate for the 10 most recent graduating classes of students at the institution of higher education who received athletically related student aid for football, basketball, and all other sports, broken down by race and sex.

(b) STUDENT NOTIFICATION.—When an institution described in subsection (a) offers a potential student-athlete athletically related student aid, such institution shall provide to the student and his parents, his guidance counselor, and coach the information contained in the report submitted by such institution pursuant to subsection (a).

(c) SPECIAL CIRCUMSTANCES.—If an institution of higher education described in subsection (a) finds that the information collected pursuant to subsection (a), because of extenuating circumstances, does not provide an accurate representation of the school's graduation rate, the school may provide additional information to the student and the Secretary.

(d) COMPARABLE INFORMATION.—Each institution of higher education described in subsection (a) may provide supplemental information to students and the Secretary showing the graduation rate when such graduation rate does not include students transferring into, and out of, such institution. The Secretary shall ensure that the data presented to the student and the data submitted to the Secretary are comparable.

SEC. 4. REPORT BY SECRETARY.

(a) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary shall, using the data required under section 3, shall compile and publish a report containing the information required under section 3, broken down by—

(1) individual institutions of higher education, and

(2) athletic conferences recognized by the National Collegiate Athletic Association and the National Assocition of Intercollegiate Athletics.

(b) REPORT AVAILABILITY.—The Secretary shall make available copies of the report required under subsection (a) to any individual or secondary school requesting a copy of such report.

SEC. 5. INFORMATION.

The Secretary may, at his discretion, obtain the information required by section 3 from a private, not-for-profit organization when, in the Secretary's opinion, such collection will reduce the paperwork burden imposed on higher education institutions.

SEC. 6. WAIVER.

The Secretary shall waive the requirements of this Act for any institution of higher education which is a member of an athletic association or athletic conference that voluntarily publishes graduation rate data (or has already agreed to publish the data) that, in the opinion of the Secretary, is substantially comparable to the information required under this Act.

SEC. 7. DEFINITIONS.

For the purpose of this Act—

(1) The term "athletically related student aid" means any scholarship, grant, or other form of financial assistance whose terms require the recipient to particpate in an institution of higher education's program of intercollegiate athletics in order to be eligible to receive such assistance;

(2) The term "institution of higher education" has the same meaning given such term by section 1201(a) of the Higher Education Act of 1965 (20 U.S.C. 1141(a));

(3) The term "Secretary " means the Secretary of Education; and

(4) The term "graduation rate" means the percentage of students who enter an institution in a specific year and receive a bachelor's degree within 5 years.

SEC. 8. EFFECTIVE DATE.

The amendments made by this Act shall take effect October 1, 1991.

FEDERAL CIVIL PENALTIES INFLATION ADJUSTMENT ACT

GLENN AMENDMENT NO. 1260

Mr. BYRD (for Mr. GLENN) proposed an amendment to the bill (S. 535) to increase civil monetary penalties based on the effect of inflation, as follows:

On page 1, line 5, strike out "1989" and insert in lieu thereof "1990".

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Subcommittee on Public Lands, National Parks and Forests of the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources be authorized to meet during the session of the Senate at 2 p.m. on February 22, 1990, to receive testimony on S. 1578, to provide for the creation of an independent Historic Preservation Agency and a National Center for Preservation Technology, and for other purposes; and S. 1579, to amend the National Historic Preservation Act, the Historic Sites Act, the Archaeological Resources Protection Act, the Abandoned Shipwreck Act, and certain related acts to strengthen the preservation of our historic heritage and resources, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

COMMITTEE ON FINANCE

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Finance be authorized to meet during the session of the Senate on February 22, 1990, at 9:30 a.m. to hold a hearing on the Budget Authorization for the U.S. Customs Service, and to examine the possibility of a 2-year authorization and to also consider proposed legislation relating to the ad valorem customs merchandise processing fee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

ADDITIONAL STATEMENTS

THE IMPACTS OF THE EXPIRATION OF THE GREAT LAKES SET-ASIDE ON GREAT LAKES PORTS

● Mr. GLENN. Mr. President, as cochair of the Senate Great Lakes Task Force, I rise to protest the expiration of the Great Lakes set-aside, a policy that has helped offset the negative impacts of cargo preference on the Great Lakes shipping industry.

Cargo preference requires that a certain percentage of U.S. food aid cargoes will be transported on U.S. flag vessels. This policy is intended to assure employment for the U.S. flag shipping industry, and encourage a healthy merchant marine. However, the reality for the Great Lakes maritime commerce is that there is no regular ocean-going U.S. flag service to the lakes and there will not be for the foreseeable future. Thus, every time cargo preference is expanded, Great Lakes ports lose out on opportunities to compete for these cargoes. This means that within the Great Lakes region, cargo preference hurts employment in maritime related activities, and reduces merchant shipping activity.

Congress recognized this situation in 1985 when it expanded cargo preference from 50 to 75 percent of the Public Law 480 Government food aid cargoes. The Great Lakes historically competed successfully for roughly 4 percent of these cargoes. Because Congress foresaw that expansion of cargo preference would greatly curtail our region's ability to compete, and Congress' intent was not to hurt employment but increase it, Congress created a Great Lakes set-aside guaranteeing that 4 percent of United States Government food-aid cargoes would still be available to Great Lakes ports.

The set-aside was authorized for 4 years, while the increase in cargo preference was indefinite. Despite our earnest efforts by Great Lakes Task Force members to extend the set-aside prior to expiration last fall, all of our attempts were blocked by members representing competing port ranges. The set-aside has now expired, and Great Lakes ports are feeling the damage as the new shipping season opens.

The first round of bids for Public Law 480 cargoes were recently submitted to the U.S. Department of Agriculture by Great Lakes ports. Last year, when the set-aside was still in effect, the ports won allocations totaling thousands of tons of cargoes during the first round. This year the ports were the low bidder for a substantial portion of the allocations, but cargo preference policies prevented the U.S. Department of Agriculture from awarding any of the shipments to our ports. This outcome is neither efficient nor equitable.

The 1990 farm bill and the Great Lakes Maritime Trade Act of 1989 offer opportunities to redress this unnecessary blow to the Great Lakes agricultural exports. The Great Lakes only seek the opportunity to compete on a level playing field with the other port ranges. Repeal of the 75-percent cargo preference policy to the historical 50 percent, extension of the Great Lakes set-aside, and reflagging are among many possible resolutions to the present inequitable situation.

Mr. President, I personally will be seeking appropriate committee action on these and other Great Lakes maritime issues which I raise in S. 1350, my omnibus Great Lakes maritime trade bill—a bill which was cosponsored by 12 Senators—and look forward to your assistance in addressing the legitimate needs of the Great Lakes region.●

NOMINATION OF CLARENCE THOMAS

● Mr. PRYOR. Mr. President, on February 6, the Senate Judiciary Committee held a confirmation hearing on the nomination of Clarence Thomas as a U.S. circuit judge for the District of Columbia Circuit. During this hearing, a number of statements were made by Mr. Thomas that I find troubling.

Before I outline my concerns, I would like to acknowledge that there is much to admire and respect about Clarence Thomas. He is truly a self-made man, having advanced from very humble beginnings to Chairman of the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission [EEOC]. Along the way he attended law school at Yale University, served as assistant attorney general for the State of Missouri, and was appointed Assistant Secretary for Civil Rights at the U.S. Department of Education. These are significant achievements that should be taken into account when considering Mr. Thomas' fitness to serve on what is often described as the second most important court in the land.

What must be taken as an equally important indication of Mr. Thomas' ability to serve effectively on the District of Columbia Circuit, however, is his track record in his most recent position as Chairman of the EEOC. In that vein, I would like to take this opportunity to briefly explain my understanding of his performance in that capacity.

As chairman of the Senate Special Committee on Aging, I am particularly concerned about, and committed to, strong and effective enforcement of the Age Discrimination in Employment Act [ADEA]. With this in mind, I was dismayed to learn about several erroneous statements made by Chairman Thomas and his supporters regarding his role in enforcing ADEA.

At the hearing Mr. Thomas was praised by some for his 8-year tenure in which he took the EEOC "in shambles" and eliminated the case backlog, installed a new computer system for tracking cases, and managed the Commission's funds more wisely. Such comments give the impression that Clarence Thomas saved the EEOC from certain demise. I believe that the several thousand age discrimination claimants who, during Chairman Thomas' watch, lost their rights largely due to EEOC neglect and mismanagement would differ with this rose-colored view of the past 8 years.

According to documents obtained by the staff of the Special Committee on Aging during an investigation of the EEOC by former Chairman John Melcher, the EEOC's inventory backlog of 33,000 in 1982 rose to over 61,000 in 1987. During that same period, the number of unprocessed charges 300 days old or older increased some 2,200 percent, from 727 to 15,428. Therefore, far from eliminating its backlog, the EEOC was actually adding to it.

In addition, words of praise for Chairman Thomas for modernization of the EEOC must be taken with a grain of salt. The Aging Committee's investigation of EEOC found evidence that during Chairman Thomas' tenure the Commission spent millions of dollars in a highly unreliable computer system that eventually had to be replaced. Only recently has the EEOC's new Charge Data System begun to function properly and provide a reliable national data base.

Mr. Thomas' performance under questioning by members of the Judiciary Committee regarding EEOC's enforcement of the ADEA raised a number of concerns. Many of his responses appeared to be shaky attempts at revisionist history. Under questioning from Senator HATCH, Mr. Thomas stated that the EEOC had at one time allowed the statute of limitations for filing a case in Federal court lapse on 900 ADEA cases. He claimed, however, that the situation has been corrected and that lapses are now down to two cases a year.

These numbers are totally inaccurate and, some would say, border on misrepresentation. In fact, the EEOC's own figures indicate that the statute of limitations may have lapsed on well over 13,000 ADEA claims form 1984 to 1988. Additionally, over 1,500 charges contracted out by the EEOC to State Fair Employment Practice Agencies [FEPA's] have been allowed to expire since 1988.

In 1987 Chairman Melcher, acting on a number of complaints, began an investigation into ADEA claims that the EEOC had allowed to lapse. In early September, Chairman Melcher requested that the EEOC provide him with information on how many ADEA cases had exceeded the 2 year statute of limitations. Although an internal survey of district offices showed that the EEOC had let at least 900 ADEA charges lapse, Mr. Thomas chose to redefine cases as charges which had been recommended for litigation, and he told the Aging Committee that 70 such cases had expired.

After months of fruitless attempts to obtain additional and accurate information on this matter, the Aging Committee issued a February 1988 subpoena to Chairman Thomas to provide data on the lapsed charges. Thomas reported that from 1984 to 1987, 779 charges had exceeded the statute of limitations. Two weeks later Thomas received an internal EEOC report indicating that 1,200 charges had expired in 1987 alone.

Later in 1988, Congress passed the Age Discrimination Claims Assistance Act [ADCAA], which extended the statute of limitations 18 months for charges which were filed on or after January 1, 1984 and which expired on or before April 7, 1988. In complying with reporting requirements under ADCAA, the EEOC has admitted that it has mailed out more than 13,000 notices to older workers whose claims may have been allowed to expire during that period.

As mentioned, Mr. Thomas proclaimed to the Judiciary Committee that the problem of lapsed ADEA charges has been correcterd and that lapses are now running about 2 a year. In fact, EEOC documents submitted to the Judiciary Committee show that over 1,500 ADEA charges contracted out by the Commission to State FEPA's for investigation have lapsed since ADCAA.

Mr. Thomas' response when confronted by Senator METZENBAUM with this fact was twofold. He initially stated that the EEOC has no control over the FEPA's. He further responded by stating that the ADEA statute of limitations did not matter on those charges because they were filed under State antidiscrimination laws, which have no such limitations. These statements are certainly misleading, and raise serious questions about the nominee's appropriateness for the Federal bench.

The EEOC contracts with FEPA's to investigate a range of employment discrimination cases filed at the State level. While it is true that age discrimination charges lodged with FEPA's are filed under State antidiscrimination laws, they also represent claims under the ADEA. Indeed, EEOC regulations make it clear that charges filed with FEPA's under contract are considered to be filed with the EEOC also.

As the Federal entity charged with the enforcement of the ADEA, the EEOC has an inescapable duty to protect the rights of ADEA claimants. The fact that a lapsed charge may still be valid under State law does not relieve the Commission of its fundamental responsibility.

The contracts between the EEOC and FEPA's require that a charge be investigated and sent to the EEOC within 18 months of the date the charge is filed. This is intended to give the EEOC time before the expiration of the 2 year statute of limitations to make a decision on litigating the charge or issuing a no cause letter to the claimant. If FEPA's violate this time frame, they don't get paid. In addition, the EEOC can discontinue its relationship with poorly performing FEPA's. Most importantly, with its new computer system, the EEOC has the ability to track charges filed with FEPA's, and has the contractual right to take from the State agencies those charges found to be in danger of lapsing.

In conclusion, there should be little dispute that thousands of ADEA claimants have unfairly and unacceptably lost their rights during Chairman Thomas' 8-year tenure. We all agree that the massive lapses of ADEA charges prior to 1988 should have never happened. Likewise, we must recognize the tragedy and irony that even as Congress was acting to restore the rights of those who lose claims during that period, hundreds more cases were lapsing.

Mr. President, the qualifications and experiences of any person nominated to fill such an important post as a judgeship on the D.C. Circuit must be closely scrutinized. There are few things I respect more than an individual who has made a success of him or herself in the face of hardships. Indeed, Mr. Thomas' accomplishments are to be applauded; however, the concerns I have outlined above should not be dismissed as irrelevent to the confirmation process.

I have not decided how I will vote on Mr. Thomas' nomination; however, I will make my decision based on the scope of my knowledge about the nominee and his qualifications. It is my hope that all my colleagues will do the same. I look forward to reviewing the Senate Judiciary's report and recommendation on Mr. Thomas, as well as to any discussion which may occur on the floor regarding his nomination.●

OPPOSITION TO ANTI-SEMITISM

● Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. President, today I rise to call to the attention of the Senate and to the world the signs of an insidious rise of anti-Semitism in the Soviet Union.

Unfortunately, some in the Soviet Union have translated the new openness in their country as the freedom to hate, the freedom to revive scapegoat tactics of the past, and the freedom to attack other peoples' religious heritage.

President Gorbachev's program of glasnost has lifted some of the constraints on freedoms of expression, religion and assembly in the Soviet Union. Changes in the Soviet Union and neighboring Eastern bloc countries generally have advanced the cause of freedom. But, as we note these positive trends, we must not overlook the growth of organized anti-Semitic movements like Pamyat, which advocate religious hatred and violence against Soviet Jews.

In 1988, I visited Kiev, Leningrad, and Moscow, and learned first-hand of the phenomenon of rising anti-Semitism. Mr. President, silence in the face of anti-Semitism is not acceptable. We will not be silent. We will not close our eyes. We will not sit on the sidelines. We must speak out. For this reason, I have joined with Senator SIMON and other Members of the Senate to call on President Gorbachev to publicly condemn anti-Semitism in all its forms. Furthermore, I have asked Mr. Gorbachev to take quick action on pending proposals to permit those who have sought for many years to leave the Soviet Union to do so.

Mr. President, I ask that an article by Vitalii I. Goldanksii, a member of the Soviet Council of Peoples Deputies and the Foreign Relations Committee of the Supreme Soviet be printed in the RECORD. Mr. Goldanski, the director of the Semenov Institute of Chemical Physics of the Soviet Academy of Sciences, is considered the highest ranking Soviet official to acknowledge—in very clear terms—the rising anti-Semitism in the Soviet Union. His observations must be heeded by this body and by the world to prevent human rights and Soviet reform from being undermined by bigotry and prejudice.

[From the Washington Post, Feb. 18, 1990]

ANTI-SEMITISM: THE RETURN OF A RUSSIAN NIGHTMARE

(By Vitalii I. Goldanskii)

Supporters of President Gorbachev's perestroika are increasingly alarmed by the possibility that this program of restructuring and reforms may collapse. Should this occur—and it cannot be ruled out even in the near future—it would be a disaster not only for the Soviet Union but for all humankind.

Many of the difficulties being encountered by perestroika are well known outside the Soviet Union, as are some of the potential consequences if perestroika fails. But too little attention has been given, until now, to the special dangers posed by the growing aggressiveness in the Soviet Union of extreme right-wing, virulently anti-semitic groups that seek to subvert perestroika, to blame the country's past and present problems on the Jews, and (as some of their propaganda states explicitly) to "finish what Hitler started."

These extremists are flourishing in the climate of spite, envy, scapegoating and hatred associated with the increasingly severe difficulties in the Soviet economy and growing ethnic tensions. They are perhaps already the strongest, and certainly the fastest growing, of the divisive forces pushing the country toward bloodshed and civil war.

The extremist groups go by a variety of innocuous-sounding names, of which the best known outside the Soviet Union is the "National Patriotic Front Pamyat" (pamyat means "memory"). A number of them recently entered into a confederation under the title of "Bloc of Social-Patriotic Movements of Russia." I prefer to call them Russian monarcho-Nazis (or monarcho-fascists), to reflect their combination of deep reverence for the autocratic csarist Russian empire and ferocious hatred of Jews.

Incredibly, the Russian monarcho-Nazis openly and widely condemn the Jews as the main culprits in all of the troubles of Russia from the October Revolution of 1917 up until the present—including genocide against the Russian people in the form of the millions of Russian deaths in civil war, collectivization and various purges; destruction of tens of thousands of Russian churches and historical monuments; and spiritual poisoning of the people through the introduction of decadent and corrupt Western culture alien to Russian tradition. They even accuse the Jews of ritual murders and a worldwide conspiracy against humankind, making reference to the disgraceful hoax, "The Protocols of the Elders of Zion."

There is striking similarity, in fact, between the views, programs and intentions of the Russian monarcho-Nazis and the original Nazi platform as laid out in Hitler's "Mein Kampf" and other infamous documents of the German Nazi period. This similarity, and the resemblance of the general situation in the Soviet Union in 1988-90 to that in Germany in 1931-33, have been publicized by progressive Soviet mass media. The newspaper Soviet Circus, for example, has printed a point-by-point comparison of Pamyat's manifesto with the program of the Nazi Party of the 1930s.

The main organization serving as a coordinator of the monarcho-Nazi forces is the Union of Writers of the Russian Federation (RSFSR). As outlets for their propaganda they have at their disposal such newspapers and journals as "Literaturnaya Rossiya" (Literary Russia), "Nash Sovremennik" (Our Contemporary), "Molodaya Gvardija" (Young Guards) and "Moscow." The leaders of this movement include many notorious writers, some scientists, some artists and others.

The Nazi-type speeches and publications of these groups are becoming routine features of everyday life in the Soviet Union. Their form and content were analyzed by Prof. Herman Andreyev from Mainz University in West Germany in a recent issue of the weekly magazine Ogonyok. He concluded that in Western European countries such statements would be treated as unconstitutional, the persons propagating them would be called to account and the organizations supporting them would be dissolved.

Yet the monarcho-Nazis seem to be meeting no serious opposition—indeed, more often sympathy and connivance—from important party and government leaders of the U.S.S.R. It is instructive, for example, that in the platform of the Soviet Communist Party on ethnic problems published in August 1989, not a single word was said about the anti-semitic campaign against so-called cosmopolites (1949), the shooting of leading Jewish writers and artists (1952), or the disgraceful "Doctor's plot" (1953), while many other Stalin-era crimes against various nationalities of the Soviet people were scrupulously mentioned.

Similarly, an appeal by more than 200 people's deputies of the U.S.S.R. to the Presidium of the First Session of the Congress of People's Deputies in June 1989, expressing concern about the "growing wave of anti-semitic activities, including open calls for violence that could lead to irretrievable consequences," went unanswered. That was also the fate of a letter written to Gorbachev on this subject by 10 distinguished scientists and writers in September 1989.

The explanation of such passivity on the part of the authorities seems quite simple. In addition to the evident sympathy of many authorities on different levels to the views of the monarcho-Nazis, others who do not sympathize nonetheless hesitate to act because of the way the growing aggressiveness of the monarcho-Nazis is linked to the bloody ethnic conflicts and intensifying separatist movements in nearly all of the outlying districts of the Soviet Union.

Specifically, this situation offers the monarcho-Nazis considerable opportunities for blackmail and intimidation of Gorbachev and his closest advisers, through the claim that, in conditions of the "decline of empire," the Russian heartland and her "genuine sons" constitute the only reliable basis for the preservation of Gorbachev's power. Such arguments are being used to push Gorbachev toward the right and to divide him from his true supporters on the left—the liberal intelligentsia. The result could be a repetition of the circumstances that produced the downfall of Khrushchev in 1964.

In parallel with their attempts to intimidate Gorbachev, the monarcho-Nazis have been openly attacking his foreign policy. They even have accused Gorbachev of being an agent in the service of the CIA and the Israeli intelligence, the Mossad. With this two-pronged strategy of intimidation and direct attack, the Russian monarcho-Nazis hope to attain either a decisive influence over Gorbachev's policies or his removal and replacement at the seat of power by supporters of their movement.

What would that mean for Soviet Jews? The answer is all too clear from the similarity of the monarcho-Nazis' program to that of Hitler. The Russian monarcho-Nazis already possess their equivalent to Hitler's SA and SS, in the form of the Pamyat movement. This movement does not disguise its intentions to carry out pogroms against the Jews, to whom it refers using the insulting world "zhidy" (yids). In fact, members of Pamyat have been organizing well-attended meetings all over the country to call for pogroms—even in Moscow's Red Square on Nov. 12, 1989—and no one has stood in their way.

Hitler treated as Jews those who have more than one-quarter Jewish blood. Pamyat goes further. It has announced its intention to search for Jewish progenitors back to the 10th generation. New recuits to Pamyat are required to prove their "racial purity" and to provide to the organization the home addresses of five Jews—no doubt for the purposes of the pogroms to come. Opponents of the monarcho-Nazi movement who happen to be "racially pure" or "Aryan" are characterized, along with all liberal intelligentsia, as "masons" (or "zhido-masons," i.e., supporters of Jews); and these are also the targets of pogrom propaganda.

The brazenness of monarcho-Nazi threats against Soviet Jewry has been increasing. In addition to anti-semitic rallies and the desecration of Jewish cemeteries around the country, which have been going on for some time, it now seems that meetings of liberal intellectuals are no longer safe from disruption by Pamyat thugs.

On the evening of Jan. 18 of this year, for example, a meeting of the progressive "April" group of writers at the Central House of Writers in Moscow was invaded by some dozens of Pamyat monarcho-Nazis with megaphones. They roughed up some of the writers, forcibly ejected others from the hall, shouted anti-semitic slogans and announced that their next visit will be with automatic weapons. They also designated St. George's Day, at the beginning of May, for a pogrom. The police were called but took their time in arriving, and there were no arrests.

Further increases in anti-semitic activities (especially, of course, actual violence) surely will lead to a mass exodus of Jews, people of partly Jewish extraction and "racially pure" liberal intelligentsia. This new wave of emigrants—refugees from monarcho-Nazi power—could reach several millions and would represent a serious brain-drain from the U.S.S.R.

As for the possibility of another Holocaust, it certainly could not reach the scale of earlier Nazi crimes: The world has changed too drastically in the last half century for that. But a wave of pogroms more or less along the lines of the infamous "Kristallnacht" cannot be ruled out—weaker if a government like the present one tries to oppose them, stronger if a successor government of the monarcho-Nazi stripe sympathizes with the pogrom lust.

What should be done? As a start, the world public should be informed of the activities and intentions of the new followers of Hitler in the Soviet Union and should be told their names. The famous "Brown Book" published by anti-fascists in 1933, after all, was the first important step in the exposure of the Nazi crimes of that era. Clearly, the publishers of newspapers, journals and books, and producers of electronic media, have an important role to play.

The stakes are high. If the monarcho-Nazi prevail and perestroika collapses in an orgy of chauvinism and racism, the results are likely to include not only a rapidly growing degree of anarchy in the Soviet Union but even the outbreak of civil war. In a country still laden with tremendous stockpiles of nuclear and chemical weapons, as well as a widespread network of nuclear power plants, such a chain of events could quickly become not just a national but an international catastrophe.●

GAO REPORT ON B-2 PROGRAM

● Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, this morning the General Accounting Office presented its first unclassified report on the B-2 program to the House Armed Services Committee. The report issues a strong warning that the B-2 cost and schedule have changed significantly since 1986 and remain uncertain.

The GAO makes clear that the Air Force will not "fly before it buys." American taxpayers have already spent $25 billion on this program and to date, only 1 percent of the flight test program has been completed. GAO claims over $48 billion will be spent and 31 planes purchased before critical performance requirements will finally be tested.

Mr. President, I ask that a copy of the executive summary of the GAO report be printed in the RECORD so that all Senators and their staff may review these findings.

The summary follows:

[GAO Feb. 22, 1990]

EXECUTIVE SUMMARY

PURPOSE

The B-2 bomber is one of the most costly Department of Defense programs. Its high cost and highly classified nature have made it the subject of considerable controversy. Since 1986, GAO has issued five classified reports on the B-2 program. Recent changes in the security classification of the program permit this unclassified report on the program's history and current cost, schedule, and test status. This report contains information from our prior classified reports that is now unclassified and updated as necessary.

BACKGROUND

The B-2 has been in full-scale development since 1981. It is a flying wing aircraft with two crew members and provisions for a third. It has twin weapon bays and four engines and is designed to perform the traditional long-range bomber role for both nuclear and non-nuclear missions. The Air Force believes the B-2 has the greatest potential for a future capability against targets of uncertain locations, although concerns exist about the difficulties of locating movable targets.

The Air Force has been developing the B-2 while producing and deploying the B-1B bomber to modernize the aging B-52 bomber fleet. The B-2 is being developed to take advantage of low observable technologies, which, when combined with on-board avionics, are intended to allow penetration of current and postulated Soviet defenses.

In 1981 the Air Force estimated the cost to procure 133 B-2s—6 development aircraft and 127 production aircraft—would be $32.7 billion in 1981 dollars. In 1986 the Department of Defense announced the estimated cost would be $36.6 billion in 1981 dollars, which was equivalent to $58.2 billion in escalated dollars over the life of the B-2's procurement. The cost estimate and the related program schedule became the baseline from which subsequent budget and schedule changes are measured.

RESULTS IN BRIEF

The B-2 program's cost and schedule have changed significantly since 1986 and remain uncertain. The B-2 acquisition strategy includes cost and schedule projections that rely on very high annual funding levels and on ordering a large number of planes before the necessary testing to demonstrate that the B-2 can perform its mission is completed.

Since 1986 the B-2 cost estimate increased $12 billion, and the final B-2 delivery was extended 3 years to 1999. Future schedule changes and cost increases will occur if projected annual funding requirements are not appropriated or if planned program savings are not achieved.

The flight test program has just begun. If current schedules are met, it will be at least 3 years before critical performance requirements have been fully tested. That is the point in testing where problems are typically discovered. At that time, under the current schedule, over $48 billion would have been appropriated and 31 aircraft would have been ordered. In view of these uncertainties, as well as changing world conditions, GAO believes that alternative acquisition strategies should be considered.

Major design changes early in the B-2's development caused manufacturing difficulties that have contributed to a slower production schedule and labor cost increases. Contractors have reported improvements in productivity and reductions in manufacturing defects, but these improvements are less than anticipated. Also, further manufacturing improvements may be hindered by continuing design changes.

PRINCIPAL FINDINGS

Cost Estimate Increases: In June 1989 the B-2 program was estimated to cost $70.2 billion, a $12 billion increase from the baseline estimate. The June 1989 estimate depends on achieving $6.2 billion in savings through a cost reduction initiatives program and multiyear procurement strategy. The amount of savings and the feasibility of achieving them are uncertain. If the projected savings are not realized, additional funding will be required, and the B-2 program's schedule may be extended.

Since 1986 B-2 estimated cost increases have been caused primarily by an incomplete aircraft design at the start of manufacturing, underestimated material costs, and production schedule extensions. The most recent increase, $2.6 billion, occurred between January and June 1989 and was primarily due to extending the schedule 1 year.

Funding Assumptions: The current acquisition plan requires funding of $5.3 billion in fiscal year 1991 and $7.5 to $8 billion annually for fiscal years 1992 through 1995 to achieve the estimated program cost of $70.2 billion. If these funding levels are not achieved, the Air Force will have to delay or reduce the B-2's production program.

Program Schedule Changes: The B-2 program schedule has changed each year since 1986. The latest change in June 1989 delayed both the first full production and multi-year procurement decisions by 1 year. It also extended the B-2 final deliveries from 1998 to 1999. The last B-2 delivery is now scheduled 3 years later than planned in the 1986 baseline estimate.

The Secretary of Defense approved this schedule extension because delays in completing the first aircraft delayed the start of flight testing. If the production schedule had not been extended, the concurrency in the program would have increased. The schedule extension maintained the previously planned relationship between flight testing and production.

Manufacturing Problems: GAO reported in August 1988 that the contractors were encountering manufacturing problems, as evidenced by a large number of manufacturing defects, inefficient labor, and the transfer of work originally planned to be accomplished at the subcontractor plants to the final assembly site. These problems were caused in part because, to maintain schedule, manufacturing was started before the aircraft design was complete.

Manufacturing data collected in 1989 showed that the contractors are resolving some of these problems. The contractors are reporting they have reduced the number of manufacturing defects, improved worker efficiency, and transferred less work to the final assembly site. However, these improvements were less than anticipated.

As in the case of other programs, the contractors are initiating many changes to engineering drawings, which continue to disrupt the manufacturing process. Some of these changes require new parts, new tooling, and changes to the manufacturing plan, which hinder efforts to stabilize the manufacturing process.

B-2 Flight Test Program: The B-2 flight test program began on July 17, 1989, with the first flight of the aircraft. To date, 1 percent of the flight test program has been completed. The program will likely continue into 1994. The pace of testing will increase as the remaining five development aircraft become available for testing.

The first 1½ years of flight testing is to demonstrate basic B-2 air worthiness and provide preliminary data on the low observable features of the aircraft. More critical operational testing, including integrated offensive and defensive avionics, where problems have frequently been discovered on other programs, is scheduled to begin in 1992.

MATTER FOR CONGRESSIONAL CONSIDERATION

There has been much debate on whether the Department of Defense can realistically expect to receive the funding levels projected by the Department for the B-2 program. Because of this and the fact that critical testing is several years away, the Congress may wish to require the Secretary of Defense to provide an analysis of alternative acquisition plans for the B-2 program, including various annual funding levels. This analysis would provide the Congress with information on options for future funding decisions and their related impact on the B-2's cost and schedule.

AGENCY COMMENTS

GAO did not request official written comments on this report. However, GAO discussed a draft of this report with Department of Defense officials and incorporated their comments where appropriate.●

SMALL GOVERNMENTS REGULATORY PARTNERSHIP ACT OF 1989

● Mr. BOSCHWITZ. Mr. President, I recently cosponsored Senator GLENN's bill, S. 1758, the Small Governments Regulatory Partnership Act of 1989. I believe this legislation will be most beneficial to small governments in relieving the burden placed on it by the Federal Government. Most Senators have many small governments—villages, towns, townships—in his or her State; Minnesota, the State I am proud to represent, has many such small governments.

This bill, Mr. President, will clarify that the Regulatory Flexibility Act [RFA] applies to small governments as well as to small businesses. Oftentimes the Federal Government asks too much of the local government. Since the RFA was passed, whenever a Federal agency issues a regulation, it must certify whether the regulation will affect small entities. Small entities includes both small businesses and small governments. Currently, the enforcement of the RFA is by the Office of Advocacy at the Small Business Administration. Naturally, their emphasis is on small businesses rather than small governments.

S. 1758 would establish an Office of Small Government Advocacy within the Office of Management and Budget [OMB], headed by a Director for Small Government Advocacy. The Director shall be appointed by the President with Senate confirmation. That individual needs to be familiar with small government needs, and with the difficulties these communities encounter with the Federal regulatory process. It is believed this office could be staffed, and perhaps even funded, by existing OMB personnel and resources.

The Office of Small Government Advocacy will be assisted by a small government coordinator within certain Federal agencies. These coordinators will watch their own agencies' actions under the RFA, and provide support and data to the Office for Small Government Advocacy.

The legislation, Mr. President, will also establish an Interagency Committee of Small Government Coordinators within OMB. This committee will be responsible for coordinating the programs, plans, and policies of the small government coordinators.

S. 1758 will make it more difficult for agencies to exercise some of the RFA's waiver provisions. In fact, an agency would be required to provide evidence and citation of data sources when it claims that a proposed regulation will have no ill effects on small entities.

Finally, the legislation would require agencies to use standard measures when analyzing the effect of regulations on small governments.

I believe the Small Governments Regulatory Partnership Act of 1989 could relieve some of the burden Federal regulations place on small governments. I am proud to be a cosponsor of Senator GLENN's legislation, and I encourage my colleagues to support this bill.●

FALLON FEDERAL CHILD CARE CENTER OPENING

● Mr. SARBANES. Mr. President, I was very pleased to participate in the opening earlier this month of the Fallon Federal Child Care Center in Baltimore. The opening of this excellent facility comes at a time when the need for more and better child care services is becoming increasingly apparent. I am pleased that Federal employees working in the Fallon Building and other working parents will now have the opportunity to leave their children in the hands of an experienced, professional staff during the workday.

The Fallon Child Care Center is operated by the YWCA and provides full-time and drop-in day care for children ages 2 through 5. In addition, a holiday and summer program will be offered for children ages 6 to 12. Children of all Federal employees as well as the public are welcome at the center.

This facility was sponsored by the Internal Revenue Service, the Army Corps of Engineers, the General Services Administration, and the Federal Highway Administration. These four agencies, together with the remaining Federal agencies which have offices located in the Fallon Federal Office Building, will provide continuing funding for the program. Additional funding will be provided by the YWCA, the CFC, and private donors.

The generous support of these agencies and organizations enables the center to offer exceptional child care at significantly lower fees than are typically charged by child care services. In view of recent statistics indicating the inadequacy of the existing supply of child care services to meet the needs of children whose mothers are in the labor force, I share the view of the Fallon Child Care Center's sponsors that the opening of this facility addresses a critical need to offer quality, affordable child care for the children of all parents employed in the Fallon Building.

It is unfortunate that most American working mothers and their children do not have the same opportunity. There are more than 9 million children under the age of 6 with working mothers. Over half of all mothers with infants under 1 year of age work outside the home. In the past 15 years, the number of preschool children with mothers in the work force has increased by 75 percent, and the number of school-aged children with working mothers has grown by 22 percent. Yet, a study completed by the National Association for the Education of Young Children reported that in 1986, licensed day care services were capable of accommodating just 2.1 million children—only 24 percent of all preschool children with working mothers. The Census Bureau reported that in 1985, over 2 million school-aged children spent a portion of the day unsupervised while their parent or parents worked. In Maryland, a study undertaken by the Johns Hopkins Institute for Policy Studies at the request of the Maryland Department of Human Resources indicates that there is a great need for increased day care facilities for both preschool and school-aged children.

As an original cosponsor of the Act for Better Child Care, I was very pleased that this legislation was passed by the Senate on June 23, 1989. It remains my view that the ABC bill will help establish a national commitment to extend the availability of quality, affordable child care such as that offered by the Fallon Federal Child Care Center to all working parents and their children. It has become increasingly apparent that economic trends will continue to bring larger numbers of mothers into the work force, and it is my hope that similar legislation will receive prompt consideration in the House of Representatives.●

JENIFER JONES, CYPRUS HIGH SCHOOL, MAGNA, UT

● Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I rise today to pay tribute to a very talented young woman from my home State of Utah who has just been chosen as the 1990 western regional recipient of the 1990 Amateur Athletic Union/Mars Milky Way High School All-American Award. Jenifer Jones, a senior at Cyprus High School in Magna, UT, is one of eight students nationally to receive this award.

The criteria for this award are manifold. In addition to academic and athletic prowess, the recipient must also participate in community events. Jenifer, a 4.0 student, is a General Sterling Scholar and a member of both the National Honor Society and the National Honor Roll. She was awarded the Century III Leadership Award and won the Disney World "Dreamer & Doer" for the State of Utah. In addition, she is a talented musician and composed her school fight song.

In addition to her many scholastic achievements, Jenifer is the captain of the Cyprus High School girl's basketball, volleyball, and track teams, earning varsity letters in all three sports. She was selected as a member of the all-region basketball team, the all-State volleyball first team, and was awarded the outstanding distance runner.

Jenifer also participates in church and community events. She is the congregation organist at her church, founded the Piano Achievement Day, and is a member of the drug youth committee. In addition, she coordinated a youth conference at Utah State University.

Jenifer is now eligible to be one of the two national recipients of this award, and I am very happy that such an accomplished young woman is representing Utah.●

FAIR OR FOUL: BEYOND TODAY'S ELECTION IN NICARAGUA

● Mr. DURENBERGER. Mr. President, like umpires in a World Series baseball game, the whole world seems to be standing around polling places in Nicaragua this coming weekend, observing the election and getting ready to declare the results either "fair" or "foul."

The stakes are significant in making that declaration, but there are also pitfalls in overemphasizing the "fair" or "foul" call. Sandinista actions after the elections are perhaps even more important than the elections themselves.

Before acting hastily after declaring the elections fair or foul, U.S. policymakers would be wise to take a quick "time out"—at least long enough to survey the scene and resist the temptation to make rash judgments that might not bear the test of time.

Regardless of the outcome, Nicaragua's much touted elections are only one step in the long process of democratization. The elections are not the end objective. They represent one essential element in a much broader process of establishing a peaceful, democratic, open society.

Even if the Sandinistas win an election that international observers and the internal opposition consider to have met acceptable standards, and that victory is by no means assured, in no way does that imply that we will immediately return to fully normalized bilateral relations between the United States and Nicaragua. The singular, if significant, act of conducting a fair election process does not automatically grant Nicaragua lifetime membership in the family of democratic nations.

I support Secretary of State James Baker's recent statements regarding future directions of United States policy toward Nicaragua. Secretary Baker recently stated that the United States "would be prepared to improve relations with any government that wins a certifiably free and fair election in Nicaragua." He also stated, however, there would have to be a testing period, some period of time during which we can satisfy ourselves that they—the Sandinistas—have indeed stopped shipping SA-7 missiles and other military equipment to the Marxist FMLN guerrillas in El Salvador.

We must also acknowledge that our past policy of supporting the armed Nicaraguan Contras is dead in the water, no longer a credible option in a country that desperately wants peace and an opportunity to pick up the pieces and move on. If the elections are generally considered free and fair, we must be prepared to accept the election and then define those issues that really matter—issues that can be used to define a new, more constructive bilateral relationship between the United States and Nicaragua.

So, what comes next—regardless of who wins Sunday's elections? And, what do we—as U.S. citizens and policymakers—do on Monday morning?

Beyond evaluating the full range of assessments from the international observers, I'd suggest we watch both the winners and losers and see how they act, both in victory and in defeat.

If the Sandinistas lose, will they be the first government in Nicaraguan history to relinquish power in a peaceful transition? As either winners or losers, will they give up Sandinista party control of the army and police? If they lose, will they accept their role as a minority political party?

Regardless of the outcome, will the Sandinistas finally end their support for the FMLN guerrillas in El Salvador? Will they, in coordination with a Contra army demobilization, drastically cut the size of their military and security forces? Will they permit the political opposition to operate as a legitimate democratic force—a force that will not be abused, but will be consulted and respected?

This past year has marked an amazing watershed in world history—away from tyranny and repression and in the direction of freedom and economic opportunity. Nicaraguans deserve to cross that watershed, as well. In Central America, as elsewhere, there's a distinct and encouraging trend away from the authoritarianism represented by the first 10 years of Sandinista rule. Nicaragua is the final holdout.

And, while some will contend that Sunday's election will not live up to the standards set by Nicaragua's neighbors, we must be prepared to accept its results.

But, as Americans, we also have a responsibility to keep democracy from being defined by singular events, without considering the broader range of circumstances in the country.

The Nicaraguan elections can help define our future relations with a nation toward which we have shown heavyhandedness in the past. And, some might argue, the job of defining that new United States-Nicaraguan relationship is as simple as calling one election "fair" or "foul." It is not.

I would content today's vote represents much more—the opportunity for a new and more constructive policy. But, determining the full extent of that opportunity will take patience. And, it will take time.●

DEDICATION OF LA VERTA L. TERRY

● Mr. LUGAR. Mr. President, February marks the annual observance of National TRIO Day, enacted by a joint resolution of Congress which each year recognizes the contributions and importance of federally supported initiatives which work to assure equal opportunity in postsecondary education.

In Indiana, there are 26 such programs, including Upward Bound, Student Support Services, Talent Search, Educational Opportunity Centers, and the Ronald E. McNair Post Baccalaureate Achievement which annually oversees 10,000 Hoosier citizens.

On this occasion, I wish to acknowledge the dedication and commitment of a very special individual, Mrs. La Verta L. Terry, who has dedicated 22 years of her professional career in service to the students of Indiana.

Born on November 10, 1926, in Brasil, IN, La Verta entered the work force at the tender age of 10, working part time before and after school. During the summer, La Verta worked full time. Admitted to the Indiana University School of Music and the recipient of a merit scholarship, La Verta instead enrolled in Southern Christian College and went on to receive her baccalaureate degree from Jarvis College.

In 1963, La Verta began her career as a substitute teacher in the Monroe County School. A year later she accepted a full-time teaching position.

In 1968, she joined the staff of Indiana University as assistant to Dean Rozelle Boyd of the university division. Together they established what would become the Groups Program which still services hundred of Indiana University students each year.

"Ms. Terry," as she is affectionately referred to by her many students both past and present, now serves in the capacity of director of the Groups Program. In its over 20-year history the program has served well over 4,000 students and touched the lives of many others by providing that first opportunity for a postsecondary education for those who otherwise would not have attended college.

With a rare combination of talents that inspire, motivate, challenge, and encourage, La Verta Terry has served not only as a role model, but in many cases family to those individuals fortunate enough to participate in her program. Her work goes far beyond the routine 9 to 5, and she still spends countless hours devoting herself to individuals who find themselves in need of her counsel and advice. To this day, her former students remain in contact with their special mentor in Bloomington.

I ask my colleagues to join me in recognizing an outstanding Hoosier, La Verta L. Terry, for her many contributions to Indiana and the Nation.●

DENIAL OF SOVIET VISAS TO CONGRESSIONAL DELEGATION

● Mr. SIMON. Mr. President, this coming Saturday, February 24, the people of Lithuania will go to the polls in the first multiparty elections they have held since their nation was forcibly incorporated into the Soviet Union 50 years ago. It's a momentous occasion. And, for obvious reasons, it has become the focus of worldwide attention.

This is both the test and the promise of the much-discussed new thinking in Moscow. The central authorities have begun to allow glasnost and political perestroika to extend beyond the bounds of theory and debate and be put into actual practice. Lithuania's opposition parties are campaigning for seats in the national legislature. Because they haven't had any experience doing this in the past—political parties hardly have experience even existing in the open, let alone trying to run campaigns—they have looked to established parliamentary institutions, like ours, for some advice on how best to put their message before the voters. This is glasnost in action. And it is tremendously encouraging.

Unfortunately, mixed in with these examples of new thinking run some currents of old thinking. I learned last night that a bipartisan delegation of U.S. Congressmen, headed by my good friend and fellow Illinoisian DICK DURBIN, was denied a visa to enter the U.S.S.R. The purpose of their visit was straightforward: it was to have been a fact-finding mission to Lithuania, designed to give members of the U.S. Congress first-hand exposure to the changes in that Republic that are a direct result of President Gorbachev's reform policies.

But the Soviet authorities turned them down. And the visa refusal came not from a mid-level consular official, but from no less a body of stature than the U.S.S.R. Supreme Soviet. The decision stated that the presence of foreign legislators in the Soviet Union at this time was not desirable, because it is not possible to render them the necessary assistance and hospitality. This, despite the fact that a delegation from the Canadian Parliament had already arrived in Lithuania. And despite the fact that the United States Congress recently played host to a delegation from the same Supreme Soviet.

The real reason for the turndown could be found a little further down in the official Soviet statement. It said the invitation to the Congressman had been offered by an improper authority—namely, the Lithuanian Reform Movement Sajudis. Moscow, trying to safeguard its prerogative against the rising tide of decentralization, said such invitations could be offered only by the Supreme Soviet.

Mr. President, I am willing to make a small wager that if that invitation had been made by the Lithuanian Communist Party, and not Sajudis, the Supreme Soviet in Moscow could have found a way to endorse it, and visas would have been on the table in no time flat.

This episode is especially frustrating because it reminds me of a similar experience I had in 1985 during a visit to the Soviet Union. In the process of applying for Soviet visas I encountered a fair amount of foot-dragging whenever I mentioned my desire to visit the Lithuanian capital of Vilnius, where I planned to hold some informal meetings. Eventually I received the visa, but when I arrived in Leningrad and tried to fly to Lithuania, I was told there would be a delay of 2 weeks. Both the consulate general in Leningrad and the Embassy in Moscow made protests in my behalf, but the Soviet authorities would not be moved and I was not allowed to go to Vilnius.

That was, as I said, in 1985, not long after General Secretary Gorbachev came to power. In many areas there have been truly revolutionary changes since that time, as the upcoming election in Lithuania demonstrates. But as we can see from the regrettable and, in my opinion, misguided decision to deny visas to an official delegation of the U.S. Congress, in other important respects there has been little if any change at all. But I think the people of Lithuania are going to have the last word on that this Saturday.●

ORDERS FOR FRIDAY, FEBRUARY 23; MONDAY, FEBRUARY 26, AND TUESDAY, FEBRUARY 27, 1990

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I am about to propound a unanimous-consent request. I am advised by staff of the distinguished Republican leader that this is agreeable to him. Perhaps Senator HATCH might remain and confirm that with the staff. This involves the schedule through next Tuesday for the Senate.

RECESS UNTIL 10 A.M.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that when the Senate completes its business today, it stand in recess until 10 a.m. on Friday, February 23, and that on Friday, the Senate meet in pro forma session only, with no business conducted.

RECESS UNTIL 11:30 A.M. MONDAY, MORNING BUSINESS

I further ask unanimous consent that at the close of the pro forma session, the Senate stand in recess until 11:30 a.m. on Monday, February 26; that on Monday, following the time for the two leaders, there be a period for morning business until 12 noon, with Senators permitted to speak therein for up to 5 minutes each.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

CONSIDERATION OF S. 1430

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that at 12 noon on Monday, the Senate begin consideration of S. 1430, the National and Community Service Act of 1989.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

MOTION TO PROCEED TO CONSIDERATION OF SENATE JOINT RESOLUTION 212; VOTE ON CLOTURE MOTION

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I further ask unanimous consent that at 2:15 p.m. on Tuesday, February 27, there be 2 hours of debate, equally divided between Senators BYRD and DOLE on the motion to proceed to Senate Joint Resolution 212, and that at 4:15 p.m., the Senate proceed to vote on the motion to invoke cloture on the motion to proceed, with the live quorum having been waived.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, for the information of Senators, votes are possible Tuesday morning in relation to the national service bill.

PROGRAM

Mr. MITCHELL. For the information of Senators planning their schedules, let me summarize the schedule for the next several days. As I announced earlier, there will be no further rollcall votes today, and the Senate will be in pro forma session only tomorrow.

On Monday, the Senate will come in at 11:30 and then beginning at noon will go to the national service bill. There will be no rollcall votes on Monday, but it is anticipated that there will be debate, and if any Senator has amendments and is prepared to offer them, he or she should be prepared to do so at that time.

Any votes ordered on Monday will be stacked on Tuesday. It is possible, indeed, that there will be votes on Tuesday morning on that bill.

On Tuesday, after the party caucuses, at 2:15 there will be 2 hours of debate on the motion to invoke cloture on the motion to proceed to the Armenian resolution, and the vote on that cloture motion will be held at 4:15 p.m. on Tuesday, the mandatory live quorum having been waived by virtue of this unanimous consent agreement.

After that vote, if we have not finished the national service bill by then, we will return to it and I hope be able to complete it promptly thereafter.

Following that, and probably on Wednesday morning, we will return to the Clean Air Act. It is my expectation that by then, there will be a substitute to be offered either embodying an agreement reached between members of the committee and the administration, or absent that agreement, a substitute prepared by the committee incorporating some aspects of that agreement. And in any event, we will be back on clean air with the expectation that we will stay on that until we then finish it.

So, Mr. President, for the information of Senators, there will be no votes tomorrow or Monday. There will be votes Tuesday, including a cloture vote at the specific time of 4:15 on the Armenian resolution, and then we hope to finish national service and be on clean air until we finish that. I thank my colleague from Utah, and the distinguished Republican leader for his courtesy.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, does the distinguished Republican leader have any further statement to make or any business he would like to transact?

Mr. DOLE. Nothing further. I thank my colleague.

Mr. BYRD. I thank the Republican leader.

RECESS UNTIL 10 A.M. TOMORROW

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, if there be no further business to come before the Senate, I move in accordance with the order previously entered that the Senate stand in recess until the hour of 10 a.m. on tomorrow, Friday, February 23, 1990.

The motion was agreed to and, at 6:47 p.m., the Senate recessed until Friday, February 23, 1990, at 10 a.m.

CONFIRMATIONS

Executive nominations confirmed by the Senate February 22, 1990:

DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

ROBERT H. GENTILE, OF OHIO, TO BE AN ASSISTANT SECRETARY OF ENERGY (FOSSIL ENERGY).

THE ABOVE NOMINATION WAS APPROVED SUBJECT TO THE NOMINEE'S COMMITMENT TO RESPOND TO REQUESTS TO APPEAR AND TESTIFY BEFORE ANY DULY CONSTITUTED COMMITTEE OF THE SENATE.

IN THE COAST GUARD

COAST GUARD NOMINATIONS BEGINNING DAVID M. BERNSTEIN, AND ENDING MICHAEL L. WOOLARD, WHICH NOMINATIONS WERE RECEIVED BY THE SENATE AND APPEARED IN THE CONGRESSIONAL RECORD ON JANUARY 24, 1990.

COAST GUARD NOMINATIONS BEGINNING ROBERT L. DEYOUNG, AND ENDING JOHN J. FAGAN, WHICH NOMINATIONS WERE RECEIVED BY THE SENATE AND APPEARED IN THE CONGRESSIONAL RECORD ON JANUARY 24, 1990.

COAST GUARD NOMINATIONS BEGINNING DAVID L. POWELL, AND ENDING BARRY L. HIGGINS, WHICH NOMINATIONS WERE RECEIVED BY THE SENATE AND APPEARED IN THE CONGRESSIONAL RECORD ON FEBRUARY 5, 1990.

EXTENSIONS OF REMARKS

A TRIBUTE TO THE HONORABLE JAMES ERNEST WHARTON

HON. FRANK HORTON

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, February 22, 1990

Mr. HORTON. Mr. Speaker, as the dean of the New York congressional delegation, I want to pay tribute today to a former Member of this body, Congressman James Wharton of the State of New York. Representative Wharton died of a stroke on January 12, 1990, at his home in Summit, NY.

James Wharton served in this body from 1951 until 1965. I had the privilege of serving with Congressman Wharton when I first came to Washington in 1953. As a freshman, I looked to him for advice and guidance since he was one of the more senior members of the delegation. His departure after the elections in 1964 marked a significant loss to the House and to our State.

Congressman Wharton had a varied career outside of Congress. He fought in World War I and then attended Union University, and Albany Law School. After working in the insurance business for 7 years, he began his own private practice in 1929 in his hometown of Richmondville, NY. He also owned and operated a farm and worked in the real estate development business. During his career in public service, he served as district attorney of Scholarie County, as well as county judge and judge of the children's court.

On behalf of the Members of the New York congressional delegation, I send our condolences to his wife Marion, daughter Beverly Radez, and sister Lucy. My wife Nancy joins me in expressing our thoughts and prayers.

CRITICISM OF ISRAEL'S HUMAN RIGHTS RECORD—CHARLES KRAUTHAMMER CRITICIZES THE DOUBLE STANDARD USED TO JUDGE ISRAEL

HON. TOM LANTOS

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, February 22, 1990

Mr. LANTOS. Mr. Speaker, Israel has been unjustifiably singled out by the media with the release yesterday of the State Department's annual human rights report to the Congress. This morning's edition of the Washington Post is typical of the coverage. The report contains 1,641 pages, of which 23 pages are devoted to Israel, yet today's Washington Post devotes one article to general comments about the entire report and a second article of equal length to Israel alone.

The comments in the State Department report on Israel are generally positive and balanced:

Israel is a parliamentary democracy with a multiparty political system and free elections. * * * Since Israel's founding * * * it has been in a formal state of war with most of its Arab neighbors * * * Israel has experienced numerous terrorist incidents * * * Israeli citizens have a range of civil and other rights generally comparable to those in advanced Western democracies although Israel's Arab citizens have not shared fully in the rights granted to, and the duties levied on, Jewish citizens.

Compare that with the human rights report on Iraq:

Iraq's human rights record remained abysmal * * * the intelligence services engage in * * * torture and summary execution * * * problems include continuing disappearances and arbitrary detentions, lack of fair trial, widespread interference with privacy, excessive use of force against Kurdish civilians * * * the Government used chemical weapons against Kurdish civilians in 1989 as it did in 1988 * * * the Government has destroyed villages and relocated approximately 500,000 Kurdish and Assyrian inhabitants. * * * For years execution has been an established Iraqi method for dealing with perceived political and military opponents of the government * * * thousands of people arrested over the years by Iraqi security * * * have "disappeared" while in detention, with many feared executed * * * both physical and pyschological torture are used by authorities.

Mr. Speaker, I could continue these examples ad nauseam, but I believe my point is clear.

An excellent essay appeared in the February 26 issue of Time magazine by Charles Krauthammer entitled "Judging Israel." Mr. Krauthammer—senior editor at the New Republic, essayist for Time magazine, and the winner of the Pulitzer Prize for commentary in 1987—gives very knowledgeable insight into the double standard by which Israel is judged.

Mr. Speaker, Mr. Krauthammer's excellent essay provides a much needed perspective on the Israeli human rights record. I ask that it be placed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, and I urge my colleagues to give it careful and thoughtful attention.

[From Time magazine, Feb. 26, 1990]

JUDGING ISRAEL

(By Charles Krauthammer)

Jews are news. It is an axiom of journalism. An indispensable axiom, too, because it is otherwise impossible to explain why the deeds and misdeeds of dot-on-the-map Israel get an absurdly disproportionate amount of news coverage around the world. If you are trying to guess how much coverage any Middle East event received, and you are permitted but one question, the best question you can ask about the event is: Were there any Jews in the vicinity? The paradigmatic case is the page in the International Herald Tribune that devoted seven of its eight columns to the Palestinian uprising. Among the headlines: "Israeli Soldier Shot to Death; Palestinian Toll Rises to 96." The eighth column carried a report that 5,000 Kurds died in an Iraqi gas attack.

Whatever the reason, it is a fact that the world is far more interested in what happens to Jews than to Kurds. It is perfectly legitimate, therefore, for journalists to give the former more play. But that makes it all the more incumbent to be fair in deciding how to play it.

How should Israel be judged? Specifically: Should Israel be judged by the moral standards of its neighborhood or by the standards of the West?

The answer, unequivocally, is: the standards of the West. But the issue is far more complicated than it appears.

The first complication is that although the neighborhood standard ought not to be Israel's, it cannot be ignored when judging Israel. Why? It is plain that compared with the way its neighbors treat protest, prisoners and opposition in general, Israel is a beacon of human rights. The salient words are Hama, the town where Syria dealt with an Islamic uprising by killing perhaps 20,000 people in two weeks and then paving the dead over; and Black September (1970), during which enlightened Jordan dealt with its Palestinian intifadeh by killing at least 2,500 Palestinians in ten days, a toll that the Israeli intifadeh would need ten years to match.

Any moral judgment must take into account the alternative. Israel cannot stand alone, and if it is abandoned by its friends for not meeting Western standards of morality, it will die. What will replace it? The neighbors: Syria, Jordan, the P.L.O., Hamas, Islamic Jihad, Ahmed Jabril, Abu Nidal (if he is still around) or some combination of these—an outcome that will induce acute nostalgia for Israel's human-rights record.

Any moral judgment that refuses to consider the alternative is merely irresponsible. That is why Israel's moral neighborhood is important. It is not just the neighborhood, it is the alternative and, if Israel perishes, the future. It is morally absurd, therefore, to reject Israel for failing to meet Western standards of human rights when the consequence of that rejection is to consign the region to neighbors with considerably less regard for human rights.

Nevertheless, Israel cannot be judged by the moral standards of the neighborhood. It is part of the West. It bases much of its appeal to Western support on shared values, among which is a respect for human rights. The standard for Israel must be Western standards.

But what exactly does "Western standards" mean? Here we come to complication No. 2. There is not a single Western standard, there are two: what we demand of Western countries at peace and what we demand of Western countries at war. It strains not just fairness but also logic to ask Israel, which has known only war for its 40 years' existence, to act like a Western country at peace.

The only fair standard is this one: How have the Western democracies reacted in similar conditions of war, crisis and insurrection? The morally relevant comparison is not with an American police force reacting to violent riots, say, in downtown Detroit. (Though even by this standard—the standard of America's response to the urban riots of the '60s—Israel's handling of the intifadeh has been measured.) The relevant comparison is with Western democracies at war: to, say, the U.S. during the Civil War, the British in Mandatory Palestine, the French in Algeria.

Last fall Anthony Lewis excoriated Israel for putting down a tax revolt in the town of Beit Sahour. He wrote: "Suppose the people of some small American town decided to protest Federal Government policy by withholding their taxes. The Government responded by sending in the Army . . . Unthinkable? Of course it is in this country. But it is happening in another . . . Israel."

Middle East scholar Clinton Bailey tried to point out just how false this analogy is. Protesting Federal Government policy? The West Bank is not Selma. Palestinians are not demanding service at the lunch counter. They demand a flag and an army. This is insurrection for independence. They are part of a movement whose covenant explicitly declares its mission to be the abolition of the state of Israel.

Bailey tried manfully for the better analogy. It required him to posit 1) a pre-glasnost Soviet Union, 2) a communist Mexico demanding the return of "occupied Mexican" territory lost in the Mexican War (Texas, New Mexico, Arizona, Utah, Nevada and California) and 3) insurrection by former Mexicans living in these territories demanding secession from the Union. Then imagine, Bailey continued, that the insurrectionists, supported and financed by Mexico and other communist states in Latin America, obstruct communications; attack civilians and police with stones and fire bombs; kill former Mexicans holding U.S. Government jobs ("collaborators"); and then begin a tax revolt. Now you have the correct analogy. Would the U.S., like Israel, then send in the Army? Of course.

But even this analogy falls flat because it is simply impossible to imagine an American in a position of conflict and vulnerability analogous to Israel's. Milan Kundera once defined a small nation as "one whose very existence may be put in question at any moment; a small nation can disappear and knows it." Czechoslovakia is a small nation. Judea was. Israel is. The U.S. is not.

It is quite impossible to draw an analogy between a small nation and a secure superpower. America's condition is so radically different, so far from the brink. Yet when Western countries have been in conditions approximating Israel's, when they have faced comparable rebellions, they have acted not very differently.

We do not even have to go back to Lincoln's Civil War suspension of habeas corpus, let alone Sherman's march through Georgia. Consider that during the last Palestinian intifadeh, the Arab Revolt of 1936-39, the British were in charge of Palestine. They put down the revolt "without mercy, without qualms," writes Middle East scholar Fouad Ajami. Entire villages were razed. More than 3,000 Palestinians were killed. In 1939 alone, the British hanged 109. (Israel has no death penalty.)

French conduct during the Algerian war was noted for its indiscriminate violence and systematic use of torture. In comparison, Israeli behavior has been positively restrained. And yet Israel faces a far greater threat. All the Algerians wanted, after all, was independence. They were not threatening the extinction of France. If Israel had the same assurance as France that its existence was in no way threatened by its enemies, the whole Arab-Israeli conflict could have been resolved decades ago.

Or consider more contemporary democracies. A year ago, when rioting broke out in Venezuela over government-imposed price increases, more than 300 were killed in less than one week. In 1984 the army of democratic India attacked rebellious Sikhs in the Golden Temple, killing 300 in one day. And yet these democracies were not remotely as threatened as Israel. Venezuela was threatened with disorder; India, at worst, with secession. The Sikhs have never pledged themselves to throw India into the sea.

"Israel," opined the Economist, "cannot in fairness test itself against a standard set by China and Algeria while still claiming to be part of the West." This argument, heard all the time, is a phony. Israel asks to be judged by the standard not of China and Algeria but of Britain and France, of Venezuela and India. By that standard, the standard of democracies facing similar disorders, Israel's behavior has been measured and restrained.

Yet Israel has been treated as if this were not true. The thrust of the reporting and, in particular, the commentary is that Israel has failed dismally to meet Western standards, that it has been particularly barbaric in its treatment of the Palestinian uprising. No other country is repeatedly subjected to Nazi analogies. In no other country is the death or deportation of a single rioter the subject (as it was for the first year of the intifadeh, before it became a media bore) of front-page news, of emergency Security Council meetings, of full-page ads in the New York Times, of pained editorials about Israel's lost soul, etc., etc.

Why is that so? Why is it that of Israel a standard of behavior is demanded that is not just higher than its neighbors', not just equal to that of the West, but in fact far higher than that of any Western country in similar circumstances? Why the double standard?

For most, the double standard is unconscious. Critics simply assume it appropriate to compare Israel with a secure and peaceful America. They ignore the fact that there are two kinds of Western standards, and that fairness dictates subjecting Israel to the standard of a Western country at war.

But other critics openly demand higher behavior from the Jewish state than from other states. Why? Jews, it is said, have a long history of oppression. They thus have a special vocation to avoid oppressing others. This dictates a higher standard in dealing with others.

Note that this reasoning is applied only to Jews. When other people suffer—Vietnamese, Algerians, Palestinians, the French Maquis—they are usually allowed a grace period during which they are judged by a somewhat lower standard. The victims are, rightly or wrongly (in my view, wrongly), morally indulged. A kind of moral affirmative action applies. We are asked to understand the former victims' barbarities because of how they themselves suffered. There has, for example, been little attention to and less commentary on the 150 Palestinians lynched by other Palestinians during the intifadeh. How many know that this year as many Palestinians have died at the hands of Palestinians as at the hands of Israelis?

With Jews, that kind of reasoning is reversed: Jewish suffering does not entitle them to more leeway in trying to prevent a repetition of their tradegy, but to less. Their suffering requires them, uniquely among the world's sufferers, to bend over backward in dealing with their enemies.

Sometimes it seems as if Jews are entitled to protection and equal moral consideration only insofar as they remain victims. Oriana Fallaci once said plaintively to Ariel Sharon, "You are no more the nation of the great dream, the country for which we cried." Indeed not. In establishing a Jewish state, the Jewish people made a collective decision no longer to be cried for. They chose to become actors in history and not its objects. Historical actors commit misdeeds, and should be judged like all nation-states when they commit them. It is perverse to argue that because this particular nation-state is made up of people who have suffered the greatest crime in modern history, they, more than any other people on earth, have a special obligation to be delicate with those who would bring down on them yet another national catastrophe.

That is a double standard. What does double standard mean? To call it a higher standard is simply a euphemism. That makes it sound like a compliment. In fact, it is a weapon. If I hold you to a higher standard of morality than others, I am saying that I am prepared to denounce you for things I would never denounce anyone else for.

If I were to make this kind of judgment about people of color—say, if I demanded that blacks meet a higher standard in their dealings with others—that would be called racism.

Let's invent an example. Imagine a journalistic series on cleanliness in neighborhoods. A city newspaper studies a white neighborhood and a black neighborhood and finds that both are messy, the black neighborhood is cleaner. But week in, week out, the paper runs front-page stories comparing the garbage and graffiti in the black neighborhood to the pristine loveliness of Switzerland. Anthony Lewis chips in an oped piece deploring, more in sadness than in anger, the irony that blacks, who for so long had degradation imposed on them, should now impose degradation on themselves.

Something is wrong here. To denounce blacks for misdemeanors that we overlook in whites—that is a double standard. It is not a compliment. It is racism.

The conscious deployment of a double standard directed at the Jewish state and at no other state in the world, the willingness systematically to condemn the Jewish state for things others are not condemned for—this is not a higher standard. It is discriminatory standard. And discrimination against Jews has a name too. The word for it is anti-Semitism.

DANIEL ORTEGA—FATHER OF DESPAIR

HON. BOB McEWEN

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, February 22, 1990

Mr. McEWEN. Mr. Speaker, today marks the birthday of George Washington, the Father of our Country.

George Washington led America in peace and prosperity for 8 years. He could have remained in office for a third term but rejected any notion that a democracy should be controlled by one man. For two centuries, the Presidency and the Nation have flourished by following the good advice and example of George Washington, and the tradition of the peaceful transfer of power.

What a contrast we have in Nicaraguan President Daniel Ortega, who assumed power by deceit, retained power by force and terror, stole the 1984 Nicaraguan Presidential election, and is ready to steal another election.

For those of us who have bothered to take note, Danny Ortega is running again this weekend.

The Sandinista Party's platform calls for at least 4 more years—

Four more years of violent repression of dissenting voices;

Four more years of maintaining a huge army to strong-arm Nicaragua's peaceful neighbors;

Four more years of economic blight;

And 4 more years of Marxism in our hemisphere.

Freedom-loving people everywhere must demand a fair election. A fair election is unlikely in a nation where the Sandinistas are intimidating opposition candidates, forcing them to abandon their campaigns, and threatening the democratic opposition's election observers.

This body must repudiate Daniel Ortega, the father of Nicaraguan misery and despair. We must recognize and condemn his calculated, violent effort to ensure his reelection. Nicaragua deserves to be free.

IN HONOR OF FRANK R.J. WHITTAKER

HON. VIC FAZIO

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, February 22, 1990

Mr. FAZIO. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to honor Frank R.J. Whittaker, past chairman of the Sacramento Neighborhood Housing Services' board of trustees, for his numerous contributions to assure the success of this grassroots organization through its formative years.

Mr. Whittaker, a native of Scotland, came to Sacramento in 1985, at the request of the late C.K. McClatchy, to become general manager of the Sacramento Bee, a position he filled until he was named president of the newspaper this year.

When a number of Sacramento's elected officials, business leaders, and I organized Neighborhood Housing Services in 1986, we asked Frank to help, and he agreed without hesitation.

Because Sacramento Neighborhood Housing Services was excluded from receiving funds from a statewide consortium of lending institutions, it became necessary to find alternative sources of operating income to assure the delivery of program services. In 1987, a Board of Trustees, comprised of major public and private sector representatives, was organized to conduct an annual fund-raising campaign. Since that time, Frank Whittaker has given leadership to not one, but two, successful fund raising campaigns.

His dedication to the Neighborhood Housing Services' public, private, and resident partnership has been an inspiration to other business leaders who have joined in providing the financial resources to deliver neighborhood services for the past 3 years.

The contributions Frank made as chairman of Sacramento Neighborhood Housing Services' board of trustees have set a standard for all future chairmen and members of this organization. It is indeed my pleasure to recognize Frank R.J. Whittaker for his service to the entire Sacramento community through his exemplary leadership of the Sacramento Neighborhood Housing Services.

A CONGRESSIONAL SALUTE TO J.T. McKINNEY IN HONOR OF HIS SELECTION AS MAN OF THE YEAR

HON. GLENN M. ANDERSON

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, February 22, 1990

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Speaker, it is my pleasure today to pay tribute to my very close friend, J.T. McKinney, who is to be honored as the California Pools for the Handicapped, Inc.'s, "Man of the Year." I have the distinct pleasure of using this opportunity to express my personal appreciation for his tremendous commitment to his fellow man and years of service to our community.

J.T. was born in Texas, raised in Oklahoma, and came to sunny California in 1954. A man of humble beginnings, J.T. started making his name in the world with a $200 loan from his sister, with which he acquired one truck and embarked on his career in the transportation industry. Typically though, J.T. not only paid attention to his own affairs but to the needs of his industry through involvement in its principal organizations. He was chairman of the board of the California Truck Rental and Leasing Association [CATRALA], founding board member of the National Truck Rental and Leasing Association [TRALA], a founding member of the Alliance of State TRALA's, a board member of the American Truck Leasing Network [AMATRALEASE], and a board member of the Pico Rivera Chamber of Commerce, where he was named Man of the Year one year.

J.T.'s accomplishments extend well beyond his line of business. He is currently on the board of trustees of St. Mary's Hospital, a member of the board of directors of the Long Beach civil light opera, on the board of trustees of California Pools for the Handicapped, on the men's hospice action committee, and on the board of directors of the Rancho Dominquez Bank. I can't think of a more impressive list of life accomplishments.

My wife, Lee, joins me in extending our heartfelt congratulations to this intensely dedicated man. His continuing dedication to the needs of the community make him a worthy recipient of this distinguished honor. To no finer man could we have the pleasure of extending the deserved title, "Man of the Year." He is truly a man for all years. Lee and I wish him all the best in the years to come.

TRIBUTE TO AFRICAN AMERICANS' CONTRIBUTIONS TO AMERICAN BUSINESS

HON. C. THOMAS McMILLEN

OF MARYLAND

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, February 22, 1990

Mr. McMILLEN of Maryland. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to express my appreciation for the important contributions that African-Americans and especially African-American business organizations have made to America's stability and growth. In the 200 years since Richard Allen formed the Free African Society in Philadelphia to provide Americans of African descent with a forum within which they could give one another assistance and support, much has been accomplished.

Society as a whole has benefits from the innovative and entrepreneurial spirit of African-Americans. Inventions patented by African-Americans have raised the comfort level of each of us and enhanced the quality of life in America. Charles Drew discovered blood plasma, Jan Matzeliger revolutionized shoemaking with his lasting machine, Norbert Rilieux revolutionized the sugar industry, Lewis Latimer made important applications to the principles of electricity, and the list goes on, and on.

Despite the odds, organizations such as the National Business League, which was founded by Booker T. Washington 100 years ago and predates the U.S. Chamber of Commerce by 12 years, were the foundation for much of the process we realize today. I believe that special tribute is to go to former Congressman Parren T. Mitchell. He's someone for whom I hold a great deal of respect and someone I regard as Booker T. Washington's contemporary counterpart.

Thanks to Congressman Mitchell's foresight and determination, there is a Small Business Administration that offers technical assistance and support to both minority and smaller businesses. Within the Fourth Congressional District, I would like to recognize the dedicated work of Ms. Joanne Jackson, minority business enterprise coordinator for Anne Arundel County, and Mr. Dennis Brownlee, minority business enterprise coordinator for Prince Georges County, for their efforts to bring African-Americans in general and minority businesses in particular, closer to our shared goal of economic equality.

THE GLORIETA BATTLEFIELD

HON. BILL RICHARDSON

OF NEW MEXICO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, February 22, 1990

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, in May of each year thousands of dedicated Civil War enthusiasts and a broad range of interested observers travel to Glorieta, NM to witness a reenactment of the "Battle of Glorieta," the decisive battle of the Civil War in the Far West.

The Battle of Glorieta, often called the "Gettysburg of the West," occurred on March 28, 1862, at Glorieta Pass in northern New Mexico. Approximately 1,000 Texas Confederate troops engaged in a pitched battle against Union troops at Pigeon's Ranch on Glorieta Creek. The Confederates hoped to take Fort Union, a major Union supply point, and the last Union stronghold before Colorado. Although the Confederate forces eventually won the battle, the Union forces destroyed the Confederate supply train which was left 6 miles back at Johnson's Ranch. This forced the Confederates to retreat down the Rio Grande back to Texas. The Battle of Glorieta prevented the expansion of the Confederacy into the rich mining fields of Colorado and California. Except for fighting in eastern Kansas, the Civil War in the West ended at Glorieta Pass.

The significance of the Glorieta site was recently underscored by the discovery of a mass Confedrate gravesite containing the remains of at least 34 Confederate soldiers and numerous Civil War artifacts. The director of the Museum of New Mexico described the gravesite as "extraordinarily significant and very, very important historically." This discovery will greatly increase our knowledge of this pivotal battle and facilitate a great appreciation of the site by the general public.

Today, I am introducing legislation that would authorize the National Park Service to acquire approximately 753 acres of the Glorieta battlefield including the Pigeon's Ranch and Johnson's Ranch, by donation, exchange, or purchase. The Secretary's authority to acquire lands through condemnation would be limited to the 121 acres included in the core of the Pigeon's Ranch.

Mr. Speaker, most of the residents in the area I have described are already willing to sell or exchange their lands. The battlefield will be an important addition to the Nation's public park system. I urge my colleagues to support this legislation so that the Glorieta Battlefield may be preserved for the enjoyment of future generations.

BLACK HISTORY MONTH—HONORING IDA B. WELLS

HON. ILEANA ROS-LEHTINEN

OF FLORIDA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, February 22, 1990

Ms. ROS-LEHTINEN. Mr. Speaker, in February of 1926, Dr. Carter G. Woodson established "Black History Month" in order to honor the invaluable contributions made by black men and women to the culture and history of the United States. Over the years, our fine Nation has paused each February to honor these contributions which have furthered the cause of our Nation's ideals of "life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness." This occasion should not limit us to only recognize the contributions made on our continent, it also affords us the opportunity to recognize those made by black men and women across the globe. This is a month of bittersweet celebration, for it reminds us how far we have come on this journey, as well as how far we have yet to go.

One of the many significant figures deserving recognition for her contributions is Ida B. Wells, a civil rights activist in the late 1800's. Wells was born in 1862 into a society divided by racial hate and oppression, seeing first hand the sad effects of racial discrimination. Ms. Wells was secretary of the National Afro-American Council and was the first president of the Negro Fellowship League in Chicago and in 1909, she helped establish the NAACP. Through her tireless dedication and efforts in these organizations, she educated people about the horrors of discrimination and lynchings. Her heroic contributions to the civil rights movement influenced the easing of racial tensions at the beginning of this century, which in turn, made possible the needed reforms of the sixties.

Her actions educated the ignorant who sought to hold fast to their racial prejudices. Ms. Wells is being honored on a commemorative stamp in the black heritage series for the impact she had on the civil rights movement. The stamp features a portrait of Wells with a picket line in the background which symbolizes her perseverance to bring an end to the racially divided society. During this month rich in history, we should all take time to educate ourselves of the tremendous contributions Afro-Americans have made. Through the contributions of all Americans such as Ida B. Wells, we have furthered ourselves as a society which maintains its excellence through diversified achievements.

THE 1990 CELEBRATION OF NATIONAL TRIO DAY IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

HON. WALTER E. FAUNTROY

OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, February 22, 1990

Mr. FAUNTROY. Mr. Speaker, I am honored to rise in this noble Chamber to recognize that unique group of programs known as TRIO on the occasion of its National Day.

Talent Search [TS], Upward Bound [UB], Student Support Services [SSS], the Educational Opportunity Center [EOC] and Ronald E. McNair programs are federally funded educational opportunity programs that enhance postsecondary access, retention and graduation for minority and low-income citizens of this country. Together these programs serve as advocates for more than 450,000 low-income students (youth and adults) and work to eliminate perceived and realistic barriers to higher education. Admissions and financial aid guidance, career counseling, tutoring, pre-GED testing and cultural enrichment programs are but a few of the services offered by these programs to facilitate personal growth and prepare students for the future.

The 1990 celebration of National TRIO Day is especially significant in that this year marks the 25th anniversary of two of the programs, Talent Search and Upward Bound, both funded under the original Higher Education Act of 1965.

In the District of Columbia we have been extremely fortunate to have had two of the TRIO programs for 25 and 23 years respectively, Upward Bound at Howard University (1965) and the Educational Opportunity center (1967) in southeast (formerly Project O.P.E.N.) In addition to these two, we have an Upward Bound Program at Trinity College (1968) and Student Support Services Programs at Gallaudet University (1972), Howard University (1973) and the University of the District of Columbia (1971).

Each year TRIO programs in the Nations Capital help more than 4,000 low income, first generation and physically disabled residents begin or continue a program of postsecondary education.

TRIO Programs are educational opportunity programs that help low-income, disadvantaged students enter and succeed in college. They were established by Congress and are funded under title IV of the High Education Act of 1965.

While student financial aid programs are designed to help students overcome financial barriers to higher education, TRIO Programs help students overcome class, cultural and academic barriers to higher education. They provide information, academic instruction, counseling, tutoring and assistance in applying for financial aid.

For the foregoing, I celebrate the history of the D.C. TRIO Program, and pray God's continued blessing on the leadership and the fruit of their collective labors.

YOUNG ISRAEL OF PARKCHESTER, BRONX, NY

HON. JAMES H. SCHEUER

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, February 22, 1990

Mr. SCHEUER. Mr. Speaker, I rise in recognition of Young Israel of Parkchester, an orthodox synagogue that is marking its golden anniversary on February 25. For 50 years, Young Israel has kept faith with the Jewish community in the Parkchester section of the Bronx. It continues to serve as a center of Jewish life—for prayer, Jewish study, and social activity.

Keeping Jewish traditions alive in the East Bronx through dedicated and devoted service to Jews of all ages has been the mission of Young Israel of Parkchester since its inception in 1940. As Rabbi Seymour Schwartz, the spiritual leader of Young Israel, has stated: "The building of a sanctuary does not end with the physical structure alone, it continues in the daily life of the Jew residing in our community, reaching out, stretching forth a hand to all who seek the spiritual nourishment provided by our synagogue."

Although its congregation, like that of many other tradition-bound religious institutions, has diminished in size, Young Israel remains as a beacon for those seeking spiritual guidance, be they congregants or unaffiliated Jews. Young Israel has retained its commitment to fostering an active Jewish communal life. The synagogue's efforts have helped instill in young people a deeper understanding of, and appreciation for, their faith and their heritage. Those in their golden years—who comprise the bedrock of Parkchester's Jewish community—have been well served by a senior center operated under the auspices of Young Israel of Parkchester. The synagogue's Sabbath meal programs have brought the spirit of Shabbat to those who might not otherwise have experienced this religious ritual.

Through its highly successful adult education program, outreach to youth, women's league and men's club-sponsored Sunday morning breakfast programs, daily minyans, and special holiday programs and festivities, Young Israel is helping to keep the spirit of Judaism and of community alive in Parkchester.

All this obviously could not have been possible without the active support of a group of dedicated men and women committed to disseminating their spiritual values of orthodoxy. Among this synagogue's dedicated founders were Max and Ruth Spielberger. At its 50 anniversary dinner on February 25, the congregation of Young Israel of Parkchester will fittingly pay tribute to the Spielbergers for their untiring, noble efforts in building, supporting, and vitalizing their synagogue. The couple remain active congregants today and Max continues to raise needed funds with an uncommon fervor. Says one fellow congregant, "Max, in his quest for donations, makes a tax collector appear like a timid soul."

To Young Israel of Parkchester and to Max and Rose Spielberger, we say "mazel tov" on this important occasion and extend our best wishes for the future.

POPULATION ASSISTANCE

HON. CLAUDINE SCHNEIDER

OF RHODE ISLAND

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, February 22, 1990

Ms. SCHNEIDER. Mr. Speaker, we have all heard the predictions that the 1990's are destined to be known as the decade of the environment.

As signs of democracy flourish in East Europe and the Soviet Union there is great opportunity for shifting dollars now spent on troops and weaponry, to doing battle on the global environmental perils confronting us.

The industrialized world is responsible for a disproportionate share of fouling the global nest, and we are long overdue in moving from needless polluting to thoughtful stewardship practices.

Considerable environmental degradation also emanates from the developing world, and these problems will get worse because of the enormous growth in population projected for the coming decades.

Enforcement of rigorous environmental standards may be the most appropriate action for the highly industrialized nations, but the first line of defense against environmental destruction in the developing world is the stabilization of population growth.

The Third World is adding to the planet the equivalent of the U.S. population every 36 months, or the equivalent of China's population every 12 years.

It is precisely in these poorer nations where population pressures have taken the greatest toll. There is simply no way to isolate environmental problems from population growth.

In the developing world, firewood is still the primary source of fuel and will be for years to come. But firewood requires cutting down trees, which leads to soil erosion, flooding, and a cycle of resource degradation that, for most of the world's poorest countries, severely undermines economic development.

The National Academy of Sciences recently notified President Bush that population growth is threatening local and global environmental integrity.

World Bank President Barber Conable has repeatedly called upon all countries to increase funding for family planning services, warning that a burgeoning population will overwhelm even the mose successful development assistance.

The World Health survey of the World Health Organization estimates that if universal voluntary family planning services were provided to women who want fewer children, births would drop by one-third in Latin America and Asia, and by one-fifth in Africa.

It is noteworthy that abortions would decline in the wake of more extensive family planning services. Currently, a large fraction of deliberately terminated pregnancies result from women lacking access to modern birth control methods.

The bottom line is that voluntary family planning services make good sense. U.N. studies show that each dollar expended on these services reaps a sevenfold return on the taxpayers' investment in the form of improved maternal and infant health, and improved productivity.

Therefore, it stands to reason that the U.S. must get back into the effort, alongside other industrialized countries, to assist the less developed world in establishing a more equitable balance between its population, its environment, and its resources.

We have been, in effect, a sideline observer rather than a participant since some Government officials put forward the incredulous position some 5½ years ago that population growth does not have an impact on development one way or another.

Nothing could be further from the truth, and that is why I join with my colleague, Representative PETE KOSTMAYER, in introducing the International Voluntary Family Planning Act, which calls for $500 million per year for U.S. international population assistance—roughly a doubling from current U.S. expenditures.

This is a fiscally prudent investment that buys us more development for our tax dollars than virtually any other international assistance program.

Until quite recently population experts were telling us that by substantially accelerating family planning information, education, and services worldwide, global population could be stabilized at 8 billion.

Today, the U.N. estimates that unless immediate action is taken to significantly increase family planning, a stabilization will not be achieved until our human numbers reach 14 billion or more.

The net result of our past neglect combined with our continued neglect will be a world with nearly double the population than it might have been.

For the next 30 to 40 years, let us hope that the world will not be divided into teams playing demographic roulette. The game is much too dangerous, with our quality of life and the planet's health very much at stake.

MEDICAID AIDS AND HIV AMENDMENTS OF 1990

HON. HENRY A. WAXMAN

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, February 22, 1990

Mr. WAXMAN. Mr. Speaker, over the past year, one message has come through loud and clear about AIDS: The epidemic is not over yet. And, as far as health care costs and hospital programs, the worst is yet to come. For some time, we have all looked at numbers like 100,000 cases or 1 million infected Americans or averages of 2 to 3 hospitalizations per patient.

But now we are facing what those numbers really mean. They mean hospitals near bankruptcy. They mean overflowing emergency rooms. They mean rising public health care costs. They mean morbidity and mortality, death and disease among some of our youngest citizens and among many who have no access to health care at all.

AIDS is creating a crisis in access to health care, in financing health care, and in delivering health care. None of these problems is new. All of them are, however, made much worse and much more immediate and unforgiving with the tidal wave of patients that now need and will continue to call upon hospitals and community providers for help.

Medicaid has become a principal source of financing for this help. The Health Care Financing Administration estimates that 40 percent of all AIDS patients at some point become Medicaid beneficiaries. This comes about for a variety of reasons. Most common is that people with AIDS often lose their jobs and thus their insurance and quickly become poor in an effort to pay their health bills. In addition, the number of women and children with AIDS is growing and the disease is increasingly concentrated among many people who are the poorest of the poor, even before they became sick.

Today I am joining with a number of my colleagues in introducing legislation to make Medicaid respond more effectively to this epidemic. I hope to deal with a basic problem of getting early intervention drug services to poor patients while such services are still useful. I hope to assist those hospitals that are struggling with an overwhelming case load of AIDS patients who depend on Medicaid. I hope to begin to use Medicaid dollars to slow the shift of private insurance responsibilities onto public programs. And I hope to provide good home care for children with AIDS.

The first, and most far reaching, of these proposals is to give States the option to expand the eligibility for Medicaid to provide access to early intervention prescription drugs to low-income HIV-infected people.

Medicaid is not available to all poor people in the United States. In order to be eligible, a person must meet two requirements. First, the individual must meet the means test—both in terms of annual income and total personal assets—established by the State.

Second, the individual must also fall into one of three basic categories: he or she must be over 65 or be a member of a family with dependent children or be totally disabled. Even if the individual is poor enough to meet the means test, if he or she does not meet one of these three criteria, then the individual is not eligible for Medicaid.

While some impoverished AIDS patients are undoubtedly eligible for Medicaid as elderly people or as mothers or children, most impoverished people with AIDS who are on Medicaid are eligible because they are disabled. In general, however, the Social Security Administration requires that a patient have full AIDS before he or she is considered disabled; patients with such a full AIDS diagnosis are presumed to be disabled.

Medicaid is not available for payment for early intervention drugs and services for HIV-infected people with no symptoms or with early mild symptoms. Since these people are not disabled yet, they cannot meet the standard for eligibility, no matter how poor they may be. If, however, they develop one of the opportunistic infections or conditions, they will be considered disabled and thus Medicaid eligible.

Thus, a person who is HIV-infected and has a severely compromised immune system (e.g., T-cells under 200) is recommended by National Institutes of Health [NIH] to be taking pneumonia prophylaxis and early AZT to prevent illness. That person is not, however, eligible for Medicaid assistance to purchase these early intervention drugs or to pay for physician visits or laboratory services for diagnosis.

When this person develops pneumonia, however, he or she meets the Centers for Disease Control [CDC] definition for AIDS, is presumed by the Social Security Administration to be disabled, and is eligible for Medicaid assistance to pay for the inpatient hospital care that is needed to treat the AIDS-related pneumonia.

The obvious problem is that while prescription drugs are available to slow or prevent disabling immune deficiency and its accompanying illnesses, most of the people eligible for Medicaid assistance are those who already have such immune deficiency and illnesses. The parallel financial problem is that while early intervention drugs cost less than hospital care, most HIV-infected people become eligible for Medicaid only when early intervention is too late and hospitalization is needed. (E.g., the cost of pneumonia prophylaxis is $1,100 per year; the average cost of hospitalizing an AIDS patient with pneumonia is $17,000 per admission.)

With such limitations, the Medicaid program serves poor HIV and AIDS patients badly, requiring them to get sick almost to the point of no return before assisting them with their health care. Similarly, the program serves hospitals badly by crowding them with AIDS patients whose pneumonia and other illnesses might have been prevented if early intervention had been provided. And, obviously, the program limits serve no financial interests, short-changing less expensive prescription drug care and thus driving up the need for costly inpatient hospital care.

The second proposal that we are making is to improve the Medicaid payment to hospitals that serve a large number of AIDS patients. It has been demonstrated that AIDS patients cost more for hospitals to care for than the Medicaid program in most States will pay. Recently published studies by the National Association of Public Hospitals show that, on average, revenues for AIDS patients are almost 20 percent below the costs of delivering inpatient care for those patients.

If we hope for hospitals to stay in business—not just to provide care for AIDS patients but also to provide acute care to all patients—then we have to make sure that the rising number of AIDS patients and their associated costs does not overwhelm the hospitals. We must, at a minimum, assure that the Medicaid program does not contribute to the problem.

The third proposal that we are making is to allow States to use Medicaid dollars to pay for Medicaid beneficiaries' continuation coverage under COBRA. By making it an allowable Medicaid expenditure for States to pay this premium for people who are otherwise eligible for Medicaid, we allow people to retain their full private health insurance at a savings to both State and Federal governments.

The final proposal is to allow States to use Medicaid dollars to provide home- and community-based care to children with AIDS. Long-term hospitalization for these children is clearly not the most therapeutic or even humane way of caring for them. If we can make it possible for parents, for foster families, or for charitable organizations to care for these sick children outside of such high-tech settings we should do so.

Clearly these proposals are not a panacea for the health care delivery problems that the epidemic is posing. Clearly we could do more for long-term care, for improvement of primary care, for psychosocial services, and for home- and community-based services for adults. But this is a starting point. If we can begin by making these changes to the financing system, it will prolong lives, save dollars, keep financially strapped hospitals afloat, and improve care for people with AIDS and all Americans. If we do not, our whole public health care system may be flooded with sickness, death, and bad debt, and the communities it serves will be devastated.

We must make the start.

I've included a summary of the provisions of the bill:

Optional Medicaid Coverage of HIV-Related Services for Certain HIV-Positive Individuals. States would be allowed to offer Medicaid coverage for certain services for low-income individuals infected with the HIV virus. If a State elects this option, it must cover the following services, to the extent that they relate to treatment of infection with the HIV virus or treatment for (or prevention of) opportunistic diseases relating to AIDS: (1) prescribed drugs; (2) physicians' services, outpatient hospital services, rural health clinic services, and Federally-qualified health center services; (3) laboratory services; (4) clinic services; and (5) case management services. To qualify for this coverage, an individual would have to meet the following criteria: (1) the individual has tested positively to be infected with the HIV virus and has an abnormally low immune function for which medical intervention is indicated to prevent decline in such function or to prevent opportunistic diseases related to AIDS; and (2) the individual's income and resources could not exceed the maximum amounts allowed, respectively, under the State's Medicaid program for a disabled individual. Unless they were otherwise eligible for Medicaid, these HIV-positive individuals would be eligible only for the services specified, and not for inpatient hospital care. This option would be effective January 1, 1991.

Adjustment in Payments to Hospitals for Individuals with AIDS. States would be required to increase payments for inpatient services delivered to Medicaid-eligible individuals with AIDS by hospitals serving high volumes of persons with AIDS. Hospitals meeting the following criteria would qualify for the payment adjustments: (1) the hospital qualifies as a Medicaid disproportionate share hospital under the State plan; (2) during the most recent calendar year the hospital's inpatient admissions with AIDS exceeded the lesser of 250 or 20 percent of its total admissions; and (3) the hospital has made a reasonable effort to reduce hospitalization of persons with AIDS by making arrangements to coordinate the care of these individuals with at least one of a number of specified outpatient service providers (such as community health centers, TB or STD clinics, or AIDS service demonstration projects). The payment adjustment would apply only to inpatient hospital services provided to Medicaid-eligible individuals with AIDS. The amount of the adjustment would have to equal at least 25 percent of the amount the hospital would otherwise be paid (including its Medicaid disproportionate share adjustment). States would have the option of broadening the eligible class of hospitals or increasing the payment adjustments. This requirement is effective July 1, 1991.

Providing Federal Medicaid Assistance for Payments for Premiums for "COBRA" Continuation Coverage for HIV-Positive Individuals. Under the Consolidated Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1986 (COBRA), as amended by the Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1989, employers with more than 20 employees are required to offer employees who lose their jobs (and their families) the option of continuing coverage under the employer's group health insurance plan at the employer's group rate. If the employee was disabled at the time he or she lost his job, the employee may continue coverage for up to 29 months. During the first 18 months, the employee must pay 102 percent of the employer's group premium rate; from the 19th through the 29th month, the employee must pay 150 percent of the employer's rate. The bill would allow States to use Federal Medicaid funds, at their regular matching rates, to pay the premiums for "COBRA" continuation coverage on behalf of certain individuals. These individuals must (1) have tested positively to be infected with the HIV virus, (2) be entitled to elect COBRA continuation coverage, (3) have an income at or below 100 percent of the Federal poverty level ($5,980 for an individual in 1989), and (4) have countable resources (other than the home) that do not exceed twice the amount allowed under the SSI program ($4,000). The option would be effective January 1, 1991.

Optional State Coverage of Home or Community-Based Services to Certain Children With AIDS. Under current law, States can obtain from the Secretary of HHS a waiver of limitations on the use of Federal Medicaid funds to enable them to purchase home- and community-based services to individuals with AIDS who are at risk of hospital or nursing home care. In order to receive this waiver, States must demonstrate budget neutrality. Under this provision, States would be allowed to offer Medicaid coverage for home and community-based services to low-income children under age 18 who have been diagnosed as having AIDS without obtaining a waiver or demonstrating budget neutrality. Home and community-based services would include case management, supervision or additional services for foster children or their parents, personal care, and respite care. The income and resource standards would be the same as those that would apply under the State's Medicaid plan if the child were in a hospital. This option would be effective January 1, 1991.

TRIBUTE TO FULLER E. CALLAWAY, JR.

HON. RICHARD RAY

OF GEORGIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, February 22, 1990

Mr. RAY. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pay tribute to Mr. Fuller E. Callaway, Jr., a gentleman who has helped to make the Third District of Georgia such a great place to live. Mr. Callaway has spent his entire career with an eye toward helping others become established in business. He has done this by creating educational grants, endowing research projects, and offering financial incentives. Through his generosity, countless others have benefitted.

Mr. Speaker, I am proud to announce that a new magazine has recently come to life in the third district; it is called LaGrange magazine. By the quality of the first issue I am sure that it will be very successful. It is fitting that LaGrange magazine chose to honor Mr. Callaway with a picture on the cover of the first issue and by offering an excellent account of his life. I would now like to insert into the RECORD that article:

LAGRANGE FRIEND AND BENEFACTOR

(By Ed Crouse)

Neither the history of LaGrange nor the history of the Callaway family could be written without many references each to the other. To talk with the elder Callaways is to get an often exciting, often homespun glimpse into a mutually benevolent past.

If ever a city could be said to have a heart and spirit, it is LaGrange. And the heart and spirit of LaGrange is the Callaway family. For over fifty years, the city has been the beneficiary of Callaway largesse to an extent that literally boggles the mind. Schools. Parks. Hospitals. Churches. Band uniforms. Law enforcement. Charitable organizations. Medical research. Social programs. And on and on.

The patriarch of the family is Fuller Earle Callaway, Jr., ably assisted by his gracious wife, Alice Hand Callaway. Now in their golden years, Mr. Fuller and Miss Alice can look out from their gracious home on Vernon Street onto a city whose civic, educational, religious and cultural assets are a direct result of the Callaway generosity and belief in the strength and durability of their fellow citizens.

Mr. Fuller created the Callaway Foundation in 1943 to carry on in an orderly fashion the charitable work he no longer could do personally because of tax laws and legal restrictions. From that time until September 1988, the Foundation has made contributions from income to recognized religious, charitable and educational purposes, or the acquisition of facilities for those purposes, of over $120 million. Traditionally, most of that support has gone to the benefit of projects and people in LaGrange and Troup County. Over time, the Foundation has contributed, in unusual circumstances or degree of need, to deserving causes elsewhere in Georgia and throughout the United States. But, by and large, it is the local community that enjoys the greatest consideration.

Mr. Fuller is the son of Fuller E. Callaway and Ida Cason Callaway. He is Georgia born and educated and has been a local resident all his life.

"I was born in a house on West Haralson that my father bought for $1,250 cash. Even when I was a litte lad in school, my father was teaching me the lessons I would need for the years ahead. Not by preaching, but by example and experience.

"When I was fourteen, he took me with him on a business trip to Europe. We visited many countries. So I would learn different currencies, he made me treasurer for the trip.

"And one day he said to me, 'Baby,' (Since I was six, he called me Baby. Later on, our hands called me Mr. Baby.) 'Baby,' he said, 'I'll give you ten cents a week if you'll keep my shoes shined.' I agreed. I was always eager to earn hard money.

" 'But there are conditions,' he said 'That ten cents is not all yours. One penny belongs to the Lord. One penny is yours to go into savings. And the other eight cents is yours to spend wisely.' That's a lesson and a formula I've lived with all my life."

Young Fuller grew up in a home always warm and always busy. Allowances were unknown, but hard money for hard work was the norm. He idolized his mother, Ida, and loved and respected the father who was the foundation of the home.

"My father was a hard worker and a smart businessman, even though he never went further than a one-room, one-class schoolhouse. He earned his first hard money—five cents—when he was eight, as a waterboy at a barn raising.

"In town, he bought three spools of thread for that nickel and sold them to farm women in the community for five cents each. He was practicing what I learned later is 'place utility' in economics. With his fifteen cents, he bought nine spools and sold them.

"As he grew older, he walked the county with a pack on his back, having added to his household items. When he was twelve, he rented a farm with his own money . . . and worked it. Then he moved into town and worked at Bradfield's Store and saved five-hundred dollars, a fortune back then, by the time he was eighteen. Then he opened his own store in a rented building where Mansour's now stands on the square."

Mr. Fuller enjoys recounting stories about his father, who was an instinctive salesman, practicing clever merchandising programs as unknown then as they are common today. And Fuller, Sr. was aggressive.

On one occasion, when he was eighteen and legally unable to borrow money to operate his store, he personally lobbied the legislature in Atlanta to pass a resolution declaring he was of legal age! Armed with that document, affixed with the Great Seal of Georgia, he wheedled a thousand-dollar line of credit from Mr. Abrams, a local banker.

"Father didn't realize it, but he was operating on the British banking system, working with a line of credit rather than an outright loan so he didn't pay interest until he used the money. As I grew older, and entered the financial arena, I have done the same thing."

Fuller, Sr. was an eminently successful storekeeper. Very quickly, he adopted the concept of mass marketing. From a young German metalsmith named Conklin, he bought a freight car of kitchen utensils to bolster his standard inventory of goods. He sold out. Then from a Mr. Jim Cannon, who built the first terrycloth towel factory in North Carolina, Fuller, Sr. bought two carloads of towels. He sold those, too. Then he bought twelve carloads of a new kind of canning jar from a man named Mason in Indiana. Again, he sold out.

"Father believed in advertising. He once bought the whole front page of the newspaper and ran an ad saying, 'I sell everything a man needs to eat, to wear or to wash his face!' He had two big events every month in the store—a grand-opening sale and a great liquidation sale. Cheapest advertising in the world. Father's store had a lot to do with LaGrange's early growth. At the time Mountville and Greenville were bigger, as I recall. But a lot of families came to town on Saturdays 'to see what Callaway has.' "

Fuller Callaway, Sr.—still a young man not yet thirty—went on to build or buy and expand the Callaway group of companies that was to carry out virtually every phase of textile production. The name Callaway was recognized throughout the United States and Europe as a force in the industry.

"When my father was twenty-nine, he told his bookkeeper to figure out what he was worth. His net worth. The man did. It was a considerable figure. Father said, 'That's enough. No man needs any more. Every year that we exceed that figure, we will give away the difference.' That was the beginning of the Callaway Foundation."

HIS ADULT YEARS

Mr. Fuller followed in his father's footsteps practicing both the business acumen and philosophy of giving that was to add to both the family wealth and the Callaway philanthropies. Following graduation from the Georgia School of Technology (Georgia Tech) in 1926, he took employment at Valley Waste Mills, one of several dozen small, autonomous mills owned by Callaway. At one time or another, he served—often simultaneously—as an officer of all the Callaway facilities, including the Fuller E. Callaway Foundation that had been founded in 1923 as the Relief Association.

"Father used to help build churches out of his own pocket. He had a rule: anyone—white, black or spotted—who wanted to build a church in the LaGrange area would be given a plot of land and half the cost of the building. He wouldn't support the church's operation; that was up to the congregation. The people had to come up with half of the construction costs and they were on their own. After income taxes came in, he couldn't do that. That's when Father set up the Relief Association."

After the untimely death of Fuller Earle Callaway in 1928, elder brother Cason and Mr. Fuller undertook management of the far-flung Callaway interests. In 1932, they brought all the Callaway facilities under one umbrella; they consolidated and streamlined and formed Callaway Mills, the entity that became a leader in the world textile industry. Its research and design specialists broke new ground in production, machinery, operations, products and sales. Still determined to follow his father's philosophy of giving, Mr. Fuller conceived the Institute of Textile Technology in Charlottesville, Virginia.

Mr. Fuller shocked his business associated by announcing he would, at age forty, take a ten-year leave of absence from the Callaway enterprises "to charge up my batteries and get a fresh perspective on what was important to me." He turned control of Callaway over to his old friend and confidant, Arthur B. Edge, Jr., and looked to interests outside the company. He tinkered with electronics. He took up painting and produced a good number of excellent seascapes, nature scenes and still-life oils. He took up the beef-cattle business and assembled a large herd of prize horned Herefords.

HIS UNIVERSITY TIES

Mr. Fuller has worked hard over the years to repay his "debt" to Georgia Tech. In 1946, with two other alumni, he founded the Georgia Tech Research Institute. With only three-thousand dollars seed money, the Tech Research Institute prospered and last year turned over to Tech over $100 million dollars.

"I was in my young twenties when I got interested in research. It is a foundation stone for a prosperous industry. I learned later that Georgia Tech, being a tax-supported state institution, could not do research. So three of us put in a thousand dollars each and founded the Georgia Tech Research Institute. Hired a young Tech graduate named Harry Baker to run it. We told him how long the job lasted depended on how good a job he did. He did extremely well. Made a career of it. Harry's dead now. The institute will turn over another $100 million this year. It supports all nineteen branches of science. Harry did extremely well."

Mr. Fuller kept his word and stepped back into harness in 1958. Under his leadership, the company thrived. Then, ten years later, after friendly negotiations, Callaway Mills Company was sold—for cash—to Roger Milliken, a strong and respected textile-empire builder of Spartanburg, South Carolina.

It is interesting to note that since Callaway Foundation was organized in 1943, no member of the family has ever received one penny in compensation or expenses from its coffers. But Foundation beneficiaries—most of them in and around LaGrange—have been awarded over $120 million!

Today, Mr. Fuller and Miss Alice enjoy the good life at their home on Vernon Street. The house was begun in 1914 and completed in 1916 on land bought from the Ferrell Estate by Fuller, Sr. He tore down the Ferrell house and built the mansion on the same spot to take full advantage of a grand five-acre boxwood garden planted originally in 1841 by Mrs. Ferrell. The original Mrs. Ferrell tended the garden meticulously until her death in 1903. Mr. Fuller's mother took up the garden in 1914, followed by Miss Alice, who admits the garden is "a love of my life."

Mr. Fuller is particularly proud of the fact that Georgia Tech now has in the design state a dramatic, ultramodern research building that will be named after him. Due largely to the support of the Georgia Tech Research Foundation and the support of industrial giants such as Southern Bell, IBM and Standard Oil, the university now is considered to be among the leaders in research and Number One in research in electronics and solar energy.

"They told me they wanted to name the building after me. My father always said, 'If you never name a thing for anyone that's alive, you'll never be sorry you did.' I said, 'You better wait till I'm dead.' But they said they'd do it whether I wanted it or not. I'm pleased. There is a building already on campus named for my father and another for my son, Fuller Earle Callaway, IL. He died in 1971."

To meet and talk with Mr. Fuller today is to enjoy a man who has lived long, accomplished much and given bountifully. He loves to reminisce. He tends to denigrate his contributions to his town—almost embarrassed when you mention them. He will tell you stories endlessly about his father and about his own adventures in business. And he appreciates the elements that have allowed him to succeed.

"I have always said if you could ever choose anything to inherit, it should be luck. You can be right in every way and have bad luck . . . and you're gone! You can be wrong in every way and have good luck . . . and you have it made! The second choice would be humor. I would rather have humor than an extra leg. Fortunately, I had two Irish great-grandmothers. Got a good helping of luck and humor from them."

And we all have benefitted.

THE DIGITAL AUDIO TAPE RECORDER ACT OF 1990

HON. ROBERT W. KASTENMEIER

OF WISCONSIN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, February 22, 1990

Mr. KASTENMEIER. Mr. Speaker, the Digital Audio Tape Recorder Act of 1990, which is being introduced today, has many significant implications for the copyright laws. The Judiciary Committee Subcommittee on Courts, Intellectual Property, and the Administration of Justice, which I chair, has jurisdiction over these laws. I speak here today to express my concern that because of the way the bill has been drafted, it will apparently not be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary for consideration of those copyright issues.

Copyright law represents a balance between the rights of creators and the interests of the public. This bill squarely and significantly implicates that balance, and in particular the issue of home-taping, which has been a controversial issue before my subcommittee for many years.

On the one hand, a digital audio tape [DAT] machine provides considerable benefits for consumers. It will enable them to make perfect copies of sound recordings that are in digital form. The Digital Audio Tape Recorder Act will, in certain important respects, limit the ability of consumers to use DAT machines to copy.

On the other hand, DAT technology poses serious concerns for holders of the copyrights in the underlying works. The recording industry has argued that consumers who are able to make perfect copies will no longer be interested in buying the underlying works from retail outlets; they will simply obtain them from other sources and copy them. The result will be a decrease in purchases, in financial rewards to creators, and in the ability of the copyright holders to financially support the creation of new works.

Hardware manufacturers have disputed this argument, contending that home-taping has stimulated the interest of music lovers, and has motivated them to buy more music than they otherwise would have. Studies commissioned by these parties have invariably contradicted each other. This situation led Senator DECONCINI, the chairman of the Senate Judiciary Subcommittee on Patents, Copyrights, and Trademarks, and me to request the Office of Technology Assessment to conduct its own study. That study, released last October, concluded that while the ultimate impact of home-taping on consumers and the affected industries is difficult to determine, the costs to the public of a ban might outweigh any offsetting losses to the music industry.

I am always concerned about the impact of new technology on the copyright laws, and about the availability of that technology to consumers. The Constitution authorizes the enactment of copyright laws that encourage the creative process by granting creators a limited monopoly. The ultimate goal is to promote "the progress of science and useful arts," and thereby ensure that the American public has access to these creative works. New technologies may enhance consumer access, or they may threaten to limit it. The Congress must review these innovations and, when necessary, must act to fulfill its constitutional mandate.

The proposed bill requires that a "serial copy management system" [SCMS] be incorporated into DAT machines. This system would permit consumers to make digital-to-digital first-generation copies of prerecorded music, but would prevent them from making digital-to-digital subsequent-generation copies of the copies. Certain exceptions are created, such as for noncopyrighted materials, and first and second-generation digital copying of analog material is permitted. Analog copying as a whole is not covered by the bill.

Last Congress, the recording industry supported legislation that would have required a copy-code scanner to be inserted into all digital audio tape machines imported into this country. The purpose of the scanner was to prevent taping of copyrighted music under certain circumstances. This was a controversial measure, with some opponents contending that the system would degrade the quality of the underlying music, would prevent taping when it should permit it, and would permit it when it should have precluded it. Senator DECONCINI and I requested the National Bureau of Standards to test the copy-code scanner; NBS concluded that these concerns were legitimate and that the system in fact suffered from these defects. I opposed the legislation, which died at the end of the 100th Congress.

Despite the failure of the copy-code scanner proposal, I strongly encouraged the parties, both proponents and opponents, to try to negotiate their differences. In Athens, Greece, last spring and summer, representatives of the software and hardware manufacturers gathered for extensive negotiations that resulted in this bill. For the first time that I can recall, they are united in their strong support for legislation on the issue of taping of sound recordings. They deserve praise for their efforts to negotiate a solution to what seemed an intractable problem.

Even so, the proposal is not without controversy. SCMS is a purely technical solution. It does not address the issue of royalties for the copying of copyrighted material. Music publishers and songwriters, therefore, strongly oppose it. They argue that a technical solution is insufficient to protect their rights, and that any proposal must include a provision for royalties. In addition, they argue that the SCMS system is inadequate because any losses from home-taping stem from the very first-generation taping that SCMS permits, and not from the subsequent generation taping that it limits.

My subcommittee has considered the debate over royalties for many years. It is, both intellectually and politically, a difficult issue, and supporters of the idea have to date not been successful in convincing the Congress of its merits. In particular, consumers who would have to pay those royalties have objected strenuously.

I do not know whether the political tenor on the issue of royalties has changed and therefore express no opinion about it. I certainly understand the arguments of the opponents of this legislation, and believe that they must be thoroughly aired in hearings before the Judiciary Committee, which has the experience and expertise to consider these issues.

In addition, I have my own questions about the specifics of the SCMS proposal. For example, as I have noted, I have always had concerns about technical limitations on new technologies, supporting full access by consumers to those innovations. In addition, the SCMS agreement is intended to be worldwide in scope. The Congress must therefore make sure that its actions are consistent with those of its counterparts elsewhere in the world. I am aware, however, that the proposal is not without strong dissenters in Europe, and that royalty proposals are gaining strength there. Third, the bill incorporates by reference a lengthy technical document, prepared by the parties supporting the legislation. It does not set forth all required conduct within the statute itself. This raises delegation of authority, notice, and technical drafting questions. Finally, the Congress should consider whether it makes sense to enact legislation on a technology-by-technology basis, or whether a comprehensive approach to the issue of home-taping is more appropriate.

I also believe, however, that the parties to this agreement should be rewarded for their efforts. This proposal deserves consideration by the Congress. I have no doubt that the committee or committees that will receive referral will do an excellent job of considering the issues within their jurisdiction. I believe, however, that consideration of this bill is incomplete without a full and expert review of the copyright issues it raises.

THE FEDERAL CUSTODIAL RESPONSIBILITY PROTECTION ACT OF 1990

HON. SILVIO O. CONTE

OF MASSACHUSETTS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, February 22, 1990

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to introduce legislation that would release Federal agencies from Superfund liability whenever they buy in collateral at a foreclosure sale in order to hold the property in a custodial manner until resold. My bill, The Federal Custodial Responsibility Protection Act of 1990, seeks to remedy an adverse situation created for Federal departments, agencies, or instrumentalities under the Comprehensive Environmental Response, Compensation and Liability Act of 1980, better known as CERCLA or Superfund, in which Federal agencies who exercise their fiduciary responsibilities in order to minimize the Government's loss on a default may be held responsible for environmental cleanup costs.

The Federal Custodial Responsibility Protection Act of 1990 simply amends section 101(20)(A)(iii) of CERCLA to include a Federal department, agency, or instrumentality in exemption from the definition of "owner or operator" for purposes of liability whenever title or control is conveyed due to bankruptcy, foreclosure, tax delinquency, or abandonment. I am pleased to state that two of my distinguished small business colleagues, ANDY IRELAND and IKE SKELTON have joined with me in introducing this critical legislation.

Mr. Speaker, I first became aware of this problem when the Small Business Committee held a hearing on Superfund liability and its impact on financing for small business. This hearing, which was chaired by our distinguished chairman, JOHN LAFALCE, determined that lending institutions are unwilling to finance businesses located near possible contaminated sites because under CERCLA they can be held liable for the entire cost of the cleanup plus damages even if they were not a direct party to the waste problem. Chairman LAFALCE has introduced legislation, H.R. 2085, of which I am the first original cosponsor, that would allow banks to foreclose without CERCLA liability. H.R. 2085 would also exempt the fiduciary from exposing its own assets to CERCLA liability. Passage of H.R. 2085 would restore lender confidence in the value of land and greatly aid small businesses, whose greatest collateral is frequently land, in obtaining financing necessary for growth and competition.

A key panelists at that hearing was Sally B. Narey, General Counsel, U.S. Small Business Administration who discussed the issue of CERCLA implications for the SBA, indeed all Federal agencies. My bill, The Federal Custodial Responsibility Protection Act of 1990, was introduced as a direct result of her testimony. With a minimum of words and a lawyer's understanding of the complexity of the issue she presented testimony that succinctly addresses the problem. I enclose for the RECORD a copy of her testimony and urge all my colleagues to join with me and my small business colleagues ANDY IRELAND and IKE SKELTON in cosponsoring The Federal Custodial Responsibility Protection Act of 1990.

STATEMENT OF SALLY B. NAREY, GENERAL COUNSEL, U.S. SMALL BUSINESS ADMINISTRATION

I want to thank the Committee for the opportunity to address the issues raised by Chairman LaFalce in his recent letter to Administrator Engeleiter. At the request of the Administrator, it is my privilege, as General Counsel of SBA, to appear before this Committee today on behalf of the Agency. The focus of this hearing is of great interest. The Small Business Administration has heard from small businesses about the problems which have arisen for them and their lending institutions under the Comprehensive Environmental Response, Compensation and Liability Act of 1980, or, as it is more commonly known, CERCLA or Superfund. They have also expressed complaints about similar problems created by other related federal laws, and by numerous environmental statutes which have been adopted by the states. These problems are of significance to SBA because they directly impact upon our programs of financial assistance to small businesses. It is clear that solutions to these problems are urgently needed.

IMPLICATIONS FOR LENDERS AND SMALL BUSINESSES

Under Section 107(a) of CERCLA, among those persons who may be held to be liable for the cleanup costs of a hazardous waste site, are the owner or operator of that site. The application of that provision in the lending context has caused such concern among lenders to small businesses that it has diminished their interest in making financing available. It has resulted in a growing reluctance by lenders to extend loans to small businesses out of the fear that if a small business should fail, and its lender take possession of the debtor's assets through foreclosure, settlement, or a bankruptcy proceeding, the lender, as an "owner" under CERCLA, is likely to be required to bear the costs of any necessary environmental cleanup.

Because of this potential liability, a prudent lender will often request an environmental audit of the potential borrower's property upon submission of a loan application. This can cost several thousand dollars. Small businesses, certainly those seeking SBA financial assistance, generally do not have sufficient funds to incur the cost of such audits and may be deprived of the opportunity for financing. On the other hand, if lenders finance these audits, it is likely that interest rates on loans to small businesses will rise to offset the cost. If this should occur, some otherwise creditworthy small businesses may simply not be able to bear the costs of higher periodic loan payments and, as a result, may not be able to afford financing.

Additionally, small businesses, especially fledgling enterprises, are likely to benefit from their lender's financial and entrepreneurial advice after a loan has been made. The lenders also want to keep an eye on such businesses. Yet, out of concern that they may be viewed as participating in the day-to-day operation of the borrower to such a degree as to be considered an owner or operator liable under CERCLA, lenders may determine that it is best not to offer advice to inexperienced small businesses. If unable to protect their investments, these lenders may simply decide not to extend financing.

Finally, many small businesses have little collateral beyond land, buildings, machinery and equipment. But those are the very items of collateral most likely to be tainted if hazardous waste is, or becomes, present on the property. Once again, a lender may seek to avoid involvement in a loan to a small business for fear that the collateral obtained to secure such a loan is likely to become tainted and, ultimately, become valueless or give rise to cleanup costs should the lender take ownership of the collateral. As you are aware, cleanup liability can be imposed without any degree of fault on the part of the lender. This potential outcome may be sufficient to dissuade many lenders from ever getting involved in loans to small businesses.

IMPLICATIONS FOR SBA

If a small business cannot obtain a loan from a bank, it may seek an SBA-guaranteed or direct loan. SBA itself does not have the expertise or funds to conduct environmental audits to determine the propriety of Agency involvement in a particular loan transaction. Similarly, if a participating lender asks SBA to honor its guaranty and buy its share of a guaranteed loan, SBA has no ability to determine if the bank has acted prudently in its treatment of environmental issues. Nor is SBA able to discern if the collateral for the loan has become tainted during the life of the loan. Finally, we note that at least one court case has raised the issue of potential cleanup liability as a result of advice provided a borrower by SBA employees.

SBA is currently faced with potential cleanup liability once it buys in collateral at a foreclosure sale upon default of an SBA borrower. When SBA honors a guaranty the collateral for the loan is assigned by the lender to SBA and either the Agency or the lender, acting at the request of the Agency, proceeds to liquidate the collateral. When SBA liquidates a direct loan it proceeds on its own with respect to its collateral. Often it is deemed appropriate by SBA that it buy in collateral at foreclosure in order to hold the property in a custodial manner for future resale in order to minimize the government's loss on the default.

Under CERCLA and other similar laws, it is possible that such buy ins by SBA may make it the owner of the subject property and, as a result, potentially liable for cleanup costs. Even though the SBA is a government lending agency, mandated to become involved in risky loans, mandated to attempt to minimize the government's loss upon a borrower's default, and certainly not motivated by profit, SBA may be found to be a party responsible for Superfund cleanup costs.

SBA does not buy in property for the purpose of building up a portfolio. SBA does not hold property for proprietary reasons. SBA takes possession of collateral and holds it in a custodial manner in an effort to secure a later recovery for the government. SBA attempts to sell such bought in property as quickly as possible.

Mr. Chairman, the problems I have outlined are very real. SBA is presently finding itself involved in hazardous waste sites around the country as a result of its loan programs. In one situation, where SBA obtained collateral through foreclosure, we are now being sued by a state environmental agency. SBA now faces the possibility of sending unknown amounts of money for site cleanups simply because of foreclosure actions taken to minimize the government's loss following the default of a small business borrower. We have apprised EPA of our concerns, and we are pleased to have the opportunity to express them to you today.

This concludes my prepared remarks. I will be pleased to answer any questions you may have.

THE CONGRESS MUST CONDEMN THE OUTRAGE OF ANTI-SEMITISM IN THE SOVIET UNION; SUPPORT HOUSE CONCURRENT RESOLUTION 264

HON. TOM LANTOS

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, February 22, 1990

Mr. LANTOS. Mr. Speaker, the astounding changes which are taking place in the Soviet Union—which have brought democracy, pluralism, and much-needed economic, social, and political reform to Eastern Europe—have been welcomed by peoples around the world. But those same changes have unleashed forces within the Soviet Union that are cause for serious alarm, not only for enlightened Soviet citizens, but for friends of human rights everywhere. The greater openness in the Soviet Union and the instability and uncertainty produced by the changes taking place under Mikhail Gorbachev have encouraged the rise of an assertive and extremist right-wing, which has led to a most disturbing and destructive revival of Russian anti-Semitism.

In the Washington Post of February 18, Vitalii I. Goldanskii, a prominent Soviet scientist, director of the Semenov Institute of Chemical Physics of the prestigious Soviet Academy of Sciences, and a member of the Soviet parliament and its foreign relations committee expressed his serious concern in terms that demand our attention:

Too little attention has been given, until now, to the special dangers posed by the growing aggressiveness in the Soviet Union of extreme right-wing, virulently anti-Semitic groups that seek to subvert perestroika, to blame the country's past and present problem on the Jews, and (as some of their propaganda states explicitly) to "finish what Hitler started."

According to Professor Goldanskii,

These extremists are flourishing in the climate of spite, envy, scapegoating, and hatred,

And they

Openly and widely condemn the Jews as the main culprits in all the troubles of Russia from the October revolution of 1917 up until the present—including the genocide against the Russian people in the form of the millions of Russian deaths in civil war, collectivization and various purges. . . . They even accuse the Jews of ritual murders and a worldwide conspiracy against humankind, making reference to the disgraceful hoax, "The Protocols of the Elders of Zion."

The best known of these extremist Russian nationalist groups, Pamyat—which academician Goldanskii refers to an "equivalent to Hitler's SA and SS"—refers to Jews by the insulting term zhidy [yids] and has been organizing well-attended meetings throughout the Soviet Union to call for pogroms. In addition to anti-Semitic rallies, the extremists have desecrated Jewish cemeteries and disrupted meetings of intellectuals.

Mr. Speaker, in view of these vicious anti-Semitic actions by growing numbers of individuals and groups in the Soviet Union, it is essential that we unequivocally go on record as being opposed to these racist outrages. A few days ago with my distinguished colleague from Colorado, Mr. BROWN, I introduced House Concurrent Resolution 264 condemning popular anti-Semitism in the Soviet Union. I urge my colleagues to join us as a cosponsor of this legislation.

In view of the appalling rise of anti-Semitism in the Soviet Union, we must go on record against these outbursts. Our Nation—which has been the leading advocate for human rights and respect for the dignity of all men—must take all action necessary to stop these acts of harassment and violence.

Mr. Speaker, I insert the text of our resolution in the RECORD, and I urge my colleagues to join in supporting its passage:

H. CON. RES. 264

Whereas the emergence of popular anti-Semitism in the Soviet Union is of great concern to the United States;

Whereas the more than 2,000,000 Soviet Jews constitute the third largest Jewish community in the world;

Whereas throughout the Soviet Union, anti-Semitic sentiment, including demonstrations by Pamyat, a nationalist anti-Semitic organization, statements by electoral candidates, threatening phone calls and letters, and harassment of Jews, is becoming commonplace in certain Soviet cities;

Whereas on January 18, 1990, a Moscow writers' meeting was disrupted by a group of individuals shouting anti-Semitic statements;

Whereas many Soviet Jews live in fear of violence, intimidation, and harassment;

Whereas the Anti-Defamation League conducted an 11-day investigation into anti-Semitism in the Soviet Union, and has concluded that the situation poses a serious threat to the Soviet Jewish community; and

Whereas the Soviet Government has not responded forcefully to the rise in popular anti-Semitism: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That it is the sense of the Congress that the President of the United States should urge President Gorbachev of the Soviet Union to—

(1) publicly condemn the emergence of popular anti-Semitism in the Soviet Union; and

(2) take whatever measures are necessary to protect Soviet Jews from acts of harassment and violence.

A TRIBUTE TO IMOGENE GERLACH

HON. BOB McEWEN

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, February 22, 1990

Mr. MCEWEN. Mr. Speaker, it is with great pleasure that I rise today to recognize Imogene Gerlach of Wheelersburg, OH, who on Monday, February 26, is celebrating her 50th anniversary as an employee of GTE North Inc. I join with all of her coworkers at GTE in Portsmouth by expressing pride in her years of tireless effort to serve her community.

Mrs. Gerlach began her career as an operator with the Portsmouth Home Telephone Co. in 1940. She later became an assistant chief operator with the Ohio Associated Telephone Co., and she now serves as an office assistant in the outside plant engineering department of GTE in Portsmouth.

Mr. Speaker, though telecommunications has been one of the fastest growing and most technical industries in our country over the past half-century, we must all remember that it was the service and dedication of people like Imogene Gerlach that made our phone system the best in the world. I urge my colleagues to join me today in commending Mrs. Gerlach for her dedicated and tireless service as a phone company employee for the past 50 years.

IN HONOR OF COL. JOHN THOMAS LAWELL

HON. VIC FAZIO

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, February 22, 1990

Mr. FAZIO. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pay tribute to Col. John Thomas Lawell who is retiring after 30 years of dedicated service to the U.S Air Force.

Originally from Indiana, Colonel Lawell was commissioned into the Air Force in 1960 through the Air Force Reserve Officers Training Program immediately upon graduation from Indiana University with a bachelor's degree in business administration. He entered pilot training at Bainbridge AFB, GA, and completed his training at Reese AFB, TX. Upon completion of pilot training, Colonel Lawell was assigned to Travis AFB, CA, where he was a C–124 pilot, a C–141 pilot, and he also piloted the C–5A aircraft. In 1969, he went to Wake Island as the air operations officer and then returned to Travis AFB in 1970 serving first as chief of aircraft maintenance quality control and then as commander of the organizational maintenance squadron.

In 1974, Colonel Lawell was assigned to Lajes Field in the Azores where he served as chief of maintenance. In 1976, Colonel Lawell earned his master's degree in management and supervision from Central Michigan University and, in the same year, attended the Air War College. He was reassigned in 1977 to Scott AFB, IL, where he served as the chief of the avionics systems division and then as the chief of the weapons systems division. His next assignment was at the Pentagon in May 1979 where he served as chief of the combat aircraft branch and then as chief of the maintenance policy division.

Colonel Lawell became the deputy commander for operations at the 437th Military Airlift Wing at Charleston AFB, SC, in 1981. Later that same year, he assumed the position of deputy chief of staff for operations at the headquarters of the 21st Air Force at McGuire AFB, NJ, and subsequently became the commander of the 438th Military Airlift Wing at McGuire AFB. In 1983, he was appointed deputy chief of the combat logistics division in the directorate of logistics plans and programs in the office of the deputy chief of staff for logistics and engineering at the headquarters of the U.S Air Force.

In June 1985, Colonel Lawell became the inspector general at the Sacramento Air Logistics Center. In August of that same year, he became the first director of Environmental Management, the first dedicated environmental organization in the U.S. Air Force. Under his direction, McClellan AFB's Office of Environmental Management has excelled and became a leader within the Air Force and the Department of Defense.

In response to a serious threat to local ground water supplies and private wells on the northwest side of McClellan AFB, Colonel Lawell, through his work with the McClellan Ground Water Task Force in 1986, initiated a hookup of over 560 off-base residents to a local city water supply. In addition, he oversaw the implementation of a state of the art ground water extraction-treatment system in 1987 to contain the contamination under the base.

Colonel Lawell has also managed the development and implementation of a base hazardous waste minimization program which has achieved a 57-percent reduction in hazardous waste generation in only 5 years. As a result of this successful program, McClellan AFB was selected as the Air Force winner of the Gen. Thomas D. White Award for Environmental Quality.

Colonel Lawell led the Air Force in signing the first ever interagency agreement between three Air Force bases, the Environmental Protection Agency, and the State of California. He also coordinated the implementation of a chemical reduction program which reduces the amount of hazardous chemicals brought onto the base, manages and tracks all hazardous chemicals used at McClellan, and incorporates an innovative system to calculate all hazardous air and water emissions.

Colonel Lawell has demonstrated his extraordinary leadership skills by providing extensive support of Air Force operations, in managing the environmental responsibilities for one of the Air Force's oldest and largest industrial facilities, and by excelling as a command pilot with over 6,000 flying hours in the C–124, C–131, C–141, C–5A, T–33, and T–37 aircraft. In addition, Colonel Lawell has received the Department of Defense Meritorious Service Medal, the Air Medal with one Oak Leaf Cluster, the Air Force Commendation Medal with three Oak Leaf Clusters, the Air Force Humanitarian Service Medal, and the Combat Readiness Medal. The superb leadership, outstanding dedication, and ceaseless efforts of Col. John Thomas Lawell culminate a distinguished career in the service of his country.

A CONGRESSIONAL SALUTE TO SISTER MARY LUCILLE DESMOND IN HONOR OF HER SELECTION AS HUMANITARIAN OF THE DECADE

HON. GLENN M. ANDERSON

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, February 22, 1990

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pay tribute to a dear friend and outstanding citizen, Sister Mary Lucille Desmond, in honor of her selection by the California Pools for the Handicapped, as "Humanitarian of the Decade." It has been an absolute pleasure and privilege to have known Sister Mary Lucille the past few years and I can think of no individual more deserving of this prestigious award. By virtue of her kindness toward others, her commitment to the needs of the sick, and her unflinching dedication to the betterment of mankind, Sister Mary Lucille stands as an inspiration to all those who have ever known her. It is for this reason, I would like to tell you a little about her.

Sister Mary Lucille was born in County Cork, Ireland, the Isle of Saints and Scholars and I believe dedicated nuns, and entered the congregation at age 16. Pursuant to completing 1 year of initial spiritual studies, she went to the Motherhouse in Houston for completion of religious formation and theological studies.

After making religious perpetual profession of vows in the congregation, she attended Loyola University in New Orleans to finish work on her doctorate in hospital pharmacy. She later served as director of pharmacy in congregational health-care facilities both in Houston and in Lake Charles, LA. In the late 1960's she was sent to study hospital administration at St. Louis University and on completion of those studies became president and CEO at St. Patrick Hospital, Lake Charles, LA, and subsequently, CEO of St. Mary Medical Center in Long Beach, where she continues to be very active in the community.

My wife, Lee, joins me in extending our heartfelt congratulation to Sister Mary Lucille Desmond and we wish her all the best in the years to come.

MARYLANDERS CONTRIBUTE TO BLACK HISTORY

HON. C. THOMAS McMILLEN

OF MARYLAND

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, February 22, 1990

Mr. McMILLEN of Maryland. Mr. Speaker, as we commemorate Black History Month, I would like to take this opportunity to bring your attention to the rich contributions made to black history by Marylanders. Residents of my State and the Fourth Congressional District have contributed to the achievements, the heritage, and to the character of American history and black history in particular.

As Marylanders, we don't have to look long or far for the accomplishments and great deeds of black Americans from our State. In fact, three of the most noted black Americans in history, Benjamin Banneker, Frederick Douglass, and Harriet S. Tubman, all hail from Maryland. Christian Fleetwood, a "free man of color" and college graduate was the recipient of a Congressional Medal of Honor for his bravery during the Civil War. Henry Blair, of the Eastern Shore, inventor of a seed planter, was the first black American to receive a patent from the U.S. Office of Patents.

The list of contributions made by black Marylanders is extensive and due in part to the fact that by 1830, our State had the largest number of free blacks than any State in the Union. By 1860, blacks constituted one-third of the State's population. The Maryland Abolition Society, formed in 1789, was only the fourth such society organized in this country. Its work made a significant impact on the dismantling of that system here in our State in 1864, as well as nationally.

There's a great deal of local history in Anne Arundel County as well. Kunta Kinte, made famous through Alex Haley's book "Roots," arrived in the Port of Annapolis on the Lord Ligonier in September 1767. The area we now call Historic Annapolis was the hub of activity for many black artisans and businessmen. Following the Civil War, the former Camp Parole became a popular settlement area for newly freed men and is still one of the most stable and respected communities in the city of Annapolis today.

The first school for blacks in the county, the Freedmen's Bureau, was established in 1865 on Muddy Creek Road in south Anne Arundel County. Supported by Federal funds, it founded the Stanton School in the Parole area of Annapolis in 1867. When the original school closed in 1870, black residents rallied to save the Parole site, purchasing land and moving it to West Washington Street in Annapolis. The original Freedmen's Bureau is now the site of the Ralph Bunche Community Center, and the former Stanton School now a community recreation center. The Free School had the distinction of being the oldest school in continuous use for the blacks in the county and was never a part of the public school system.

Over the span of our Nation's history, black Marylanders have made enormous contributions to our heritage. By remembering their achievements over the past 200 years, we are reminded of how far we've come as a nation.

INTRODUCTION OF THE UNITED STATES-PANAMA FREE TRADE BILL

HON. BILL RICHARDSON

OF NEW MEXICO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, February 22, 1990

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, the nascent democratic Government of Panama is struggling to rebuild its devastated economy and democratic institutions. As Panama rises from the depths to which it was taken by Manuel Noriega, our two nations' close historical ties dictate that the United States play a critical role in Panama's revival. For this very reason, I am today introducing legislation directing the President to pursue negotiations to initiate a free trade agreement with the Government of Panama.

Six years of Noriega's corruption-infested rule, coupled with the damage of United States sanctions and invasion, and subsequent looting, have left Panama's economy, particularly the private sector, in ruins. The final years of Noriega's rule saw economic production decline by as much as 25 percent. Similarly, fully one-quarter of the population is unemployed. To make matters worse, Panama's foreign debt, which stands at $4 billion, is one of the world's largest per capita. These numbers only hint at the task which lies ahead of the Panamanian people and the government of President Guillermo Endara.

The United States has already taken important steps toward aiding Panama. On February 7, the House and Senate approved a package of $42 million in aid and removed sanctions, imposed in 1988, making Panama eligible for loans and investment credits. President Bush will soon present Congress with a larger package of aid for Panama, totaling nearly $500 million. Both of these packages are critical to Panama's future. I am most heartened that Congress is addressing the Panamanian situation on a level of high priority.

But it is important to understand that United States economic assistance packages will not immediately "jump start" the Panamanian economy, particularly the private sector. Our aid will primarily be used to repair Panama's dilapidated infrastructure. For example, of the $42 million package recently approved, nearly $30 million will go to build housing and public works projects. In light of Noriega's neglect and damages incurred during the invasion, these projects are badly needed and have high priority. Their effect, however, will not immediately impact the private sector. Not until public works projects are well underway or completed will Panama's private sector reap the benefits of United States aid.

A free trade agreement would assure Panama's private sector grows and develops simultaneously with Panama's public sector. Such a free trade agreement would quickly begin to pay dividends. Due to its unique tax, banking, and corporate laws, foreign investors long poured capital into Panama until Noriega's actions isolated the country both politically and economically. Duty-free status for Panamanian goods headed to the United States would again make Panama an attractive center for foreign investors.

Increased foreign investment, in turn, would help address two of Panama's other major problems; unemployment and foreign debt. The private sector, fueled by foreign capital and unimpeded access to U.S. markets, will undoubtedly grow and provide the jobs Panama's young and growing population desperately needs. As more of its citizens are employed and the private sector strengthens, the Panamanian Government would be better able to resolve its balance of payments crisis without neglecting the needs of its people.

Mr. Speaker, Panama is at a critical juncture in its history. We must do all that is possible to assure Panama benefits from a growing and stable economy. We would expect economic stability and growth to translate into political stability—a growing economy would help Panama avoid the problems of Latin America's other fledgling democracies, desperately attempting to consolidate democratic institutions in the face of economic disaster.

The United States has already moved to restore Panama to the generalized system of preferences and the Caribbean Basin Initiative. While these programs are tremendously important, my legislation calls for a more comprehensive agreement between our two nations. Under the Omnibus Trade Act of 1988 the President was given the authority to enter into negotiations with nations to reduce trade tariffs and other barriers. The legislation I am introducing today encourages the President to exercise that very authority with the nation of Panama.

Mr. Speaker, United States foreign assistance will be critical to Panama's economic revitalization. By coupling this assistance with a free trade agreement, we would give Panama's private sector similar assistance and, in effect, help the Panamanians help themselves.

IN MEMORY OF GEORGE SAENZ

HON. ILEANA ROS-LEHTINEN

OF FLORIDA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, February 22, 1990

Ms. ROS-LEHTINEN. Mr. Speaker, I wish to speak today about the war on drugs from a perspective which is slightly different than that which is usually discussed. The unusual battlefield which the war is being fought upon is not acknowledged and recognized.

In the particular battlefield to which I refer, the combatants are usually anonymous, and for good reason. Anonymity is necessary to protect their identity because of the particular way they must fight the war. I am talking about the drug war being waged in the skies over our borders by the U.S. Customs Service. Without fanfare, but effectively, the Customs Service Aviation Operation has been serving notice on airborne smugglers that if they try to bring drugs into our country by air, they are going to get caught and be prosecuted. And they have been caught and prosecuted. But, regrettably, not without a price. At times that price has been tragically high.

Today, I recognize and pay tribute to a fallen warrior in the war on drugs. His name is George Saenz, a pilot for the U.S. Customs Service Miami Aviation Operations Branch.

On November 2, 1989, George Saenz entered a Customs enforcement operation from which he never returned. At about 9:30 p.m. on that fateful evening, a Black Hawk helicopter on an enforcement mission crashed into the Atlantic Ocean. Six crewmen were aboard; five were rescued. The sixth man, copilot George Saenz, could not be accounted for and was listed as missing. A massive air/sea rescue effort was launched. All possibilities were explored. The missing pilot was never found—a catastrophic result of the war on drugs.

Few of us in this esteemed body knew George Saenz personally. As a Customs Service pilot in Miami, he was well known as a member of a distinguished group of dedicated professionals who, voluntarily, have taken on the deadly responsibility of stopping airborne smugglers in their quest to enslave for profit.

George Saenz was exemplary of the American tradition that says we see a situation that is hurting the American people, their children, their families, their futures. It must be stopped. George Saenz accepted his commission with all of its risks, as Customs Service pilots do, day after day. Unfortunately, he paid the ultimate price.

I had the high honor of knowing George because he was the pilot during a demonstration interception mission of the U.S. Customs Service which I participated in this summer. He was a man of much integrity and devotion to his job and he is sorely missed by all of the fine men and women of Homestead Air Force Base.

I would like to take this moment and extend my personal condolences to Mr. Saenz's wife, Laurie, their two beautiful children, Melanie and Elaine, and all of the members of his family. There is no more noble calling than to dedicate one's life to the service for his country and his countrymen. George Saenz will be missed dearly, but not forgotten. We must never forget the fallen soldiers in the war on drugs.

THE 1990 HISTORICAL HERITAGE CELEBRATION

HON. WALTER E. FAUNTROY

OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, February 22, 1990

Mr. FAUNTROY. Mr. Speaker, I rise to bring to the attention of the Congress the fact that on Monday, February 26, 1990, the annual Heritage Symposium will be held in the Blackburn Auditorium at Howard University in Washington, DC.

The symposium is being organized by the Heritage of Afro-American Beauty and Barber Industry, Inc. The Heritage was established and incorporated in the District of Columbia on July 11, 1988. The symposium, an annual event, will focus on promoting unity, education, history, culture, and economic development. This focus is consistent with the goals of the symposium; to chronicle the history of the Afro-American beauty, barbering, and manufacturing industry, while being dedicated to research, study, and the dissemination of historical information to schools, libraries, archives, and museums.

The symposium promises to be informative and fascinating. There will be presentations on the historical origin of beauty, barbering, and manufacturing from ancient to modern times. There will be displays of historical artifacts and information about early pioneers in the industry.

Proud Lady Cosmetics and Products will present a film and an exhibition. Many notables will be in attendance, including officials from the Education Bureau of the Embassy of Egypt. Models will feature fashions, hairstyles, and makeup from early to modern times. The event will be an exciting exploration into the rich historical past of an industry which traces its roots back thousands of years to the beginning of time.

I urge all Members to consider this program which seeks to "Link the past—with the present—for the future."

NATHAN KOLODNEY HONORED FOR HIS COMMUNITY SERVICE

HON. JAMES H. SCHEUER

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, February 22, 1990

Mr. SCHEUER. Mr. Speaker, we all believe that education and community service are valuable pursuits, and I would like to take this opportunity to recognize a citizen of my district, Nathan Kolodney, who has dedicated his life to both.

Nathan Kolodney is completing his 11th year at the Bronx House Jewish Community Center and his 10th year as its vice president. Bronx House serves as an important cultural and educational organization in our community and under Mr. Kolodney's leadership, its programming has been expanded and enhanced. It has not been easy. Private and public bureaucracy are not always immediately amenable to the achievement of goals, even those as noble and necessary as those of Bronx House. But patience and hard work have prevailed, and Nat will continue for at least another 10 years to persevere in helping all the residents of the Pelham Parkway community. In addition to his work at Bronx House, Mr. Kolodney is a founding member and chairperson of the Bronx Council of United Jewish Appeal Federation agencies and a founding member and officer of the Neighborhood Initiatives Development Corp.

This weekend we honor Mr. Kolodney for his current efforts to raise funds through Bronx House to support the postelementary education of Jewish children in Yeshivas and Hebrew schools throughout the Bronx. Very recently, hundreds of Russian Jewish immigrant families have settled in our Pelham Parkway community. Recognizing the importance of Jewish education in preserving their cultural and religious heritage, these families want very much to enable their children to receive Jewish educations. However, this education is very expensive and few families can afford it, making scholarship assistance essential if this proud tradition is to continue. Through Nathan Kolodney's current fundraising efforts at Bronx House, this dream will become a reality for many in our Pelham Parkway community.

On behalf of the citizens of my district, I take this opportunity to personally thank and honor Mr. Kolodney for his lifetime of selfless and generous work.

A TRIBUTE TO ART ST. GERMAIN

HON. C. THOMAS McMILLEN

OF MARYLAND

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, February 22, 1990

Mr. McMILLEN of Maryland. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pay tribute to one very special member of my community in recognition for his years of service and commitment to the Provinces Civic Association [PCA] of Anne Arundel County. I wish to congratulate Art St. Germain as this year's recipient of the PCA's Citizen of the Year Award in recognition for his 14 years of dedication and service for that association.

Art has served on the Provinces Civic Association board of directors since 1976 when he undertook the role of vice president while at the same time he remained a full-time student at the University of Maryland. Since then, Art has served in every capacity on the board of directors. He currently holds the position of president and represents a community of more than 900 homes. Art has served on the Anne Arundel County Housing Code Violations Review Board, been a delegate to the United Council of Civic Associations, and was the youngest nominee at age 21 for the Outstanding Young Marylander Award sponsored by the Glen Burnie Jaycees.

It is with great pride that I offer my congratulations to Art St. Germain on his many achievements and extend best wishes for his continued success in the future as he leaves the board to pursue other interests. I know that my colleagues will be pleased to join me in this well-deserved tribute.

RESTORING U.S. LEADERSHIP IN POPULATION ASSISTANCE

HON. PETER H. KOSTMAYER

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, February 22, 1990

Mr. KOSTMAYER. Mr. Speaker, the cold war, which had preoccupied world leaders for more than 40 years, appears on the brink of a permanent thaw. We stand at the threshold of rare opportunities and singular challenges.

The dramatic events now occurring in Eastern Europe could not have been predicted a year, or even 6 months, ago. But these events could lead to even more dramatic changes in global policies and perspectives.

For too long, the priorities of both East and West have been based on fear and distrust. As Vaclav Havel told us yesterday, for too long, we have been contestants engaged in a dangerous and debilitating arms race rather than partners striving to improve the quality of life for the human race.

Our generation has the responsibility of writing a new world agenda. We must reorder world priorities. These priorities may determine our very survival.

Mr. Speaker, the bill I am introducing today, along with nearly 100 members of the House, addresses a vital issue for the new global agenda. In fact, former Secretary of Defense and World Bank President Robert McNamara ranked it as second in importance only to the threat of thermonuclear war. Former Secretary of State George Schultz asserted that this issue underlies all poverty and deprivation in the Third World. The issue is rapid population growth.

Today's world population of 5.3 billion increases at the rate of more than 90 million a year—a number equal to the population of Mexico. Virtually all of that growth is in the poorest countries of the world. Within the next generation, 3 billion young people—the equivalent of the entire world population in 1960—will enter their reproductive years and 90 developing countries are projected to double their populations.

Given these facts, the amount proposed by this legislation—$500 million for voluntary family planning assistance with $60 million earmarked for the United Nations Population Fund—is fully warranted and constitutes a direct investment in global peace and security. Furthermore, this kind of assistance is cost-effective and will save much money that would otherwise be used for disaster and famine relief, while helping to promote social and political stability, and natural resource protection in developing nations. More realistic family planning aid will help make economic growth a more likely possibility for the poorest nations of the world, and it will help to vastly reduce the number of abortions worldwide—something we all support.

Some 20 years ago the issue of population stabilization was considered controversial. It is no longer controversial except in a very small number of countries, one of which, unhappily, is the United States.

Five or six years ago the antichoice movement here, smarting from a series of defeats on the domestic front, turned its attention to U.S. foreign assistance. The movement convinced some in Congress that the United Nations Population Fund had forfeited its right to U.S. funds. Why? Because the UNFPA provides assistance to the National Family Planning Program or the People's Republic of China—a program that allegedly condones forced abortions.

The fact is that the UNFPA has never funded a single abortion—forced or voluntary—in the People's Republic of China or anywhere else. The aid that the UNFPA has given to population efforts in China has been primarily assistance with the census undertaken there in the past decade. UNFPA opponents overlook or ignore the fact that the current assistance rendered by the UNFPA to the family planning efforts in China is concentrated primarily on the improvement of maternal and child health and on the manufacture of safer contraceptive methods.

Even if the allegations against China's population program are assumed to be true, it is both irrational and unconscionable for the United States—once the industrialized world's foremost leader in international population assistance—to turn its back on the U.N. Population Fund.

The UNFPA is the largest multilateral organization providing population and family planning assistance to the developing world. The United States was instrumental in establishing UNFPA 20 years ago, and U.S. leadership in the UNFPA is critical to the success of worldwide population efforts. Can anyone be surprised to learn that, until 5 years ago, the United States was the leading contributor to UNFPA?

Not one single donor country has followed the lead of the United States in refusing to contribute to UNFPA. Not Great Britain. Not Canada. Not West Germany. Not Japan. Not one single traditional ally of the United States has turned its back on UNFPA, as has the U.S. Government. In fact, most of our best friends in the industrialized world have actually increased their contributions to the United Nations Population Fund.

A proposal to provide funding for UNFPA was vetoed by the President last December, because the White House wants to play politics with this critical issue to placate its friends in the antichoice movement. That is certainly its prerogative, but this Congress is obligated to approve responsible legislation and to disapprove legislation that is irresponsible. By vetoing the bill last year that called for restoring U.S. funds to UNFPA, the President of the United States said, in effect, everyone else is out of step but us.

According to President Bush, it is OK to continue to sell state-of-the-art fighter planes to China, but it is not OK to fund a multilateral organization that spent a mere $10 million in China last year helping to improve maternal and child health. I urge my colleagues who understand the importance of the voluntary family planning effort and who voted less than 3 months ago for the resumption of U.S. funds for the UNFPA to stand with us again.

This bill will allow the United States to resume its leadership in international population assistance, and to resume its partnership with the most important multilateral organization in this field. It will begin to compensate for the 5 years in which the United States has not contributed to the United Nation Population Fund and it, once again, will not provide any funds to the Chinese Population Program in order to accommodate those who object to the Chinese Program.

The bill preserves intact the prohibition against the use of any United States population assistance funds for abortion, coercive or otherwise, in China or in any other country that receives United States funds. Moreover, those funds contributed to the UNFPA must be maintained in a segregated account and shall not be available for the People's Republic of China. Any agreement entered into by the United States and the UNFPA must expressly state that the full amount granted to the UNFPA by such agreement will be refunded to the United States if any United States funds are used for any family planning programs in China or for abortions in any country. The U.N. Population Fund provides support to programs in more than 130 countries around the world while the U.S. Government provides bilateral population aid to less than 40.

Finally, world population stablization based on voluntary family planning activities will not be achieved at the lowest possible total cost so long as each country goes its own separate way. Stabilization will be achieved only through a cooperative and concerted effort—an effort undertaken by the most affluent nations, such as the United States, working in harmony with the organizations that have the most experience and the best infrastructure, such as the UNFPA.

Balancing the world's population with its resources and environment involves the entire international community—nations large and small, wealthy and poor. The task encompasses a wide ideological, cultural and political spectrum. If we make the right decisions in reordering global priorities, the beneficiaries will be our children and grandchildren. If we do not, the brunt of the consequencs—from environmental deterioration, economic stagnation, famine and political chaos—will victimize all of us.

RECYCLERS URGE CONGRESS TO SUPPORT THEIR CAUSE

HON. RON MARLENEE

OF MONTANA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, February 22, 1990

Mr. MARLENEE. Mr. Speaker, with all the current hype about the need to recycle everything from bottle caps to washers, I am shocked that a major piece of legislation currently under consideration by the House Energy and Commerce Committee threatens to decimate the existing recycling industry.

Has Congress gotten so caught up in a stampede to churn out environmental legislation that it would destroy an entire industry that for years has played a vital role in environmental protection through its market of recyclable materials. That's sheer lunacy. How can Members of Congress ride the current recycling bandwagon, but support legislation that so clearly deals a fatal blow to the recycling industry? Where I come from, we call that double-talk, pure and simple.

H.R. 3735's devastating impact on recyclers is detailed in a letter from one of my constituents. Allow me to quote from that letter:

DEAR CONGRESSMAN MARLENEE: The Energy and Commerce Committee is considering legislation which will treat recyclers, including most scrap metal processors, as hazardous waste handlers and make it much more difficult and far more expensive to recycle most metals. If left unchanged this legislation has the potential to close many scrap recycling operators and, for those that continue, create new costs to be assumed in the manufacturing of ferrous and non-ferrous metals.

The bill, H.R. 3735, was introduced by Rep. Thomas Luken of Ohio, a member of the House Energy and Commerce Committee and Chairman of the Subcommittee on Transportation and Hazardous Materials. That Subcommittee will begin to work on the bill in the next few weeks. Among its many provisions, the bill requires that anyone handling discarded materials which contain 0.1 percent or more of nickel, silver, chromium, cadmium, beryllium, lead, or mercury be classified as a hazardous waste facility. It would define common household items such as stainless steel flatware, or durable goods such as automobile and refrigerator components as hazardous wastes. Recyclers of such materials would have to obtain a hazardous waste permit, purchase new liability insurance or post a large bond, install groundwater and other environmental monitoring, provide for closure and post-closure care of the facility, and be subject to EPA controls on manufacturing and handling procedures for hazardous waste.

In 1988, recyclers processed over 57 million tons of discarded material which H.R. 3735 would classify as hazardous. In so doing, the legislation will prevent many recyclers from handling metals at all, requiring both increased land disposal and increase production of virgin inputs.

Congress should instead promote recycling and treat recyclers, their suppliers and their customers differently from solid and hazardous waste operators. After all, a material in the recycling process isn't a waste. To be a waste means disposal; material in the recycling process means reuse.

Please oppose the imposition of hazardous waste handler status on scrape recyclers, and support amending H.R. 3735 to remove materials in the recycling process from the definition of solid and hazardous waste. Let the Subcommittee on Transportation and Hazardous Materials know the impact this legislation will have on recycling. If you need any further information, please let me know. The survival of the recycling industry as we know is at stake.

With high freight costs and low population density, it is marginal to work in Montana. Imposition of this type will tend to raise the cost of doing business and the end result will be losses of jobs in Montana.

Help us stay in business and continue to be a responsible employer. Unneeded extra regulation is bad for us, bad for Montana and bad for the country!

Best personal regards.

Very truly yours,

JERROLD A. WEISSMAN,
President.

URBAN MARSHALL PLAN

HON. CHARLES B. RANGEL

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, February 22, 1990

Mr. RANGEL. Mr. Speaker, I would like to bring to your attention and to the attention of my colleagues, an interesting and thought-provoking article by John Jacob, president of the National Urban League, about an urban Marshall plan that would help keep America competitive in the 21st century.

I believe in the whole concept of an urban Marshall plan and feel it would benefit our society tremendously.

Here is the article by John Jacob which appeared in the Carib News on January 23, 1990:

URBAN MARSHALL PLAN

The revolution sweeping eastern Europe has led to calls for a new Marshall Plan and for a new Economic Development Bank to help those countries back on their feet.

Those ideas may make sense, but what about an Urban Marshall Plan to help our own cities and an Urban Investment Bank to invest in our own human and physical resources?

That makes even more sense.

It's not a new idea, either. Back in 1963, Whitney Young and the National Urban League called for a Domestic Marshall Plan. That plan would have rebuilt our cities and invested in developing the human resources of poor people shunted off to the margins of society.

Had that call been implemented, we would not have the devastation we see in our inner cities today and despair would long ago have been replaced by hope and opportunity.

In 1990, we have another chance to implement a peaceful revolution of progress in our own country. The experts say that the end of the Cold War means today's $300 billion defense budget could be safely cut in half.

The $150 billion savings is the much-derided "peace dividend" that many claim doesn't really exist. But it does—if we have the political will to use it wisely.

Some people say the peace dividend should be applied to balancing the federal budget, but that is not inconsistent with funding an Urban Marshall Plan.

Up to $100 billion could go to cutting the deficit. Economists say that would bring interest rates down to around five percent, which would stimulate investment and productivity. There would be a growth in sales and tax revenues that would further close the budget gap.

The remaining $50 billion or so should fund an Urban Marshall Plan that is essential to keeping America competitive in the 21st century.

An Urban Marshall Plan would have as its primary goal bringing people at the margins of society into the mainstream to become productive citizens in a productive society.

Some of the Urban Marshall Plan funds would go to repairing our neglected infrastructure—the base of our economy. America's roads, bridges, water supply and other key infrastructure sectors are in desperate need of modernizing.

That would create blue-collar jobs and put many of our ailing industries back on their feet, while creating conditions necessary for future prosperity.

Part of the Urban Marshall Plan would targeted to developing our neglected human resources by providing the job training, health care, and housing people need to function at peak levels.

All of America's poor would greatly benefit, but the most immediate impact would be on minorities, who lagged far behind the majority population in the go-go 1980s.

Education is one obvious area where greater public investment in minority and poor children will pay off in a productive future workforce.

Right now we're competing against countries like Japan, where 95 percent of all their people are high school or technical school graduates. We're not doing a good job of meeting the Japanese challenge—and we won't until 95 percent of our school children get the same solid education that theirs get.

Without the public investments of an Urban Marshall Plan, we'll be well on our way to become a second-rate power in an age where national strength is measured by brainpower and skills, and not by bombs that can't be used without committing suicide.

INTRODUCTION OF APRIL 1990, AS NATIONAL WEIGHT LOSS MONTH

HON. THOMAS M. FOGLIETTA

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, February 22, 1990

Mr. FOGLIETTA. Mr. Speaker, today I am introducing a resolution declaring April 1990 as "National Weight Loss Month." I invite my colleagues to recognize the health hazards of being overweight by joining me in cosponsoring this bill. For their benefit and for the American public, I would like to insert the text of this resolution at this point in the RECORD:

H.J. RES. 484

Whereas it is estimated that 68,000,000 adult Americans, one in every four, are overweight (defined as being 5 to 19 percent above one's ideal weight) and 34,000,000 adult Americans are obese (defined as being 20 percent or more above one's ideal weight);

Whereas overweight adult men and women are from all races, lifestyles, and economic and social strata;

Whereas the Report on Nutrition and Health, prepared by the Public Health Service, cites overconsumption of fats and certain other foods as a major national health problem;

Whereas obesity can cause serious illnesses, such as heart disease, high blood pressure, hypertension, strokes, diabetes, and some forms of cancer;

Whereas the Council on Scientific Affairs of the American Medical Association has determined that a comprehensive approach to weight loss and weight control must include a nutritionally balanced diet, behavior modification, and exercise; and

Whereas it is estimated that 43,000,000 adult Americans are making a serious attempt to control their weight: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That April 1990 is designated as "National Weight Loss Month". The President is authorized and requested to issue a proclamation calling upon the people of the United States to observe that month by learning more about the health problems associated with being overweight and attempting to become more conscious of the importance of proper diet and exercise.

MEDIA DISTORTION OF ISRAEL'S HUMAN RIGHTS RECORD

HON. TOM LANTOS

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, February 22, 1990

Mr. LANTOS. Mr. Speaker, yesterday the State Department's annual report to the Congress—"Country Reports on Human Rights Practices"—was released. Media reports on the contents of the document have given disproportionate attenton to Israel and its efforts to maintain order in the face of a Palestinian insurrection.

As we in the Congress consider this report, I would like to call to the attention of my colleagues an excellent article which appeared in yesterday's edition of the Wall Street Journal, which provides an extremely helpful perspective to some of the media coverage we are seeing regarding Israel's human rights record. The article—"The Intifada You Don't See on TV"—was writiten by Steven Emerson, formerly an editor at U.S. News and World Report and a well-known journalist who has authored a number of important books.

As Mr. Emerson points out, some 150 stories about violence in the West Bank and Gaza were broadcast by American television networks last year, but only half a dozen focused on the brutal phenomenon of Palestinians killng other Palestinians—despite the fact that nearly one-third of all Palestinians killed last year in the West Bank and Gaza were murderd by their fellow-Palestinians.

Media coverage not only distorts reality through its selective reporting on events in the occupied Territories, but also its very presence creates events which it then can cover. We have a communications media counterpart to science's "Heisenberg Uncertainty Principle"—the very presence of Western journalists and television cameras distorts the events they seek to report.

Mr. Speaker, Steve Emerson's excellent article helps to provide balance and perspective on the Israeli Government's efforts in this whole area. In the context of yesterday's publication of the State Department's human rights report, I ask that his article be placed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, and I urge my colleagues to give it careful and thoughtful attention.

[From the Wall Street Journal, Feb. 21, 1990]

THE INTIFADA YOU DON'T SEE ON TV

(By Steven Emerson)

Nearly one-third of all Palestinians killed last year in the West Bank and Gaza were murdered by fellow-Palestinians. Palestinian death squads roam the West Bank and Gaza, torturing and executing not only "collaborators," but also political rivals, moderates, criminals and women they consider promiscuous. The annual human rights report the State Department scheduled for release today might be expected to mention these facts. It does not. While the report devotes some 13 detailed pages to Israeli human rights abuse, it can spare just four paragraphs for Palestinian human rights abuses.

Perhaps the State Department has been watching too much television. It is from television that most Americans get their image of the intifada. And the U.S. networks have been complicit in a massive deception about the West Bank conflict.

U.S. reporters have acquiesced in Palestinian control over what gets filmed. "Fundamentalist groups never allowed us in certain areas in Gaza," says Amos Aynor, an Israeli crewman who has worked for CBS. Tali Goder, an Israeli cameraman who has also worked for U.S. networks, is even more blunt: "Every time a crew came to film the Palestinians, the rule was 'Once you are here, you will cover what we want. You will not dig too much.' We know that if we aim the camera at the wrong scene, we'll be dead."

These apprehensions are not unrealistic. A November CBS story about death squads in the Arab town of Nablus was one of the few television pieces to show the reign of terror imposed by Palestinian gangs. Soon afterward, Israeli troops raided the casbah, killing several gang members and capturing others alive. The Israeli Army passed a warning to CBS bureau chief, Michael Rosenbaum, that radical Palestinians had issued a death threat against the CBS crew. CBS did not report the warning.

NOT NEWSWORTHY

If reports of threats by Palestinian gangs against a network's own crew are not newsworthy, it is perhaps unsurprising that other sorts of Palestinian violence have been ignored. Since the beginning of the uprising in December 1987, more than 175 Palestinians have been killed by fellow Palestinians. More than 25 have been burnt to death; another 20 have been strangled, lynched or suffocated; and others have been decapitated, dismembered and otherwise mutilated. More recently, the ears of "collaborators" have been cut off. Israeli soldiers have killed 25 Palestinians in Gaza since September; Palestinian gangs have killed 47 Palestinians, according to Israeli military sources.

Israeli officials admit that one-third of the Palestinians killed by other Palestinians have assisted the authorities; the rest are people considered "impure" by the leaderships of the West Bank gangs or are people who have merely done business with Jews. In October, a Palestinian father of seven was knifed to death in Jericho for "collaboration." He had sold floral decorations to religious Jews building a ritual Succah.

"Death sentences" are kangaroo court killings by Palestinian gangs made up of classical juvenile delinquents and social outcasts who have suddenly found a legitimate way to kill. Homosexuals are frequent targets. Women who wear "too much" makeup or short skirts have been raped or burned with acid, if not killed outright. Yet in the more than 150 stories filed by U.S. networks from the West Bank last year, only half a dozen focused on the internecine killing of Palestinians by other Palestinians.

Amnesty International found the killing of Palestinians by other Palestinians so disturbing that in November it issued a strong condemnation of the "killing of alleged collabortors," noting that many had been "interrogated and tortured" by "special squads of Palestinians." Furthermore, Amnesty said, "Palestinians leaders have endorsed or failed to condemn the killing of collaborators."

Documents intercepted by Israeli intelligence—and whose authenticity has been confirmed by Palestinians themselves—indicate that the Palestine Liberations Organization approves and directs the killings of other Palestinians.

While Palestinian political terror on the West Bank fails to make the news, utter fabrications about Israeli brutality are reported uncritically. At the beginning of the intifida, for instance, the U.S. networks were called to el-Mokkasad hospital in Jerusalem to film a dying 15-year old Palestinian boy named Rami el Aluk. His Palestinian doctor showed the boy hooked up to life-support tubes, and claimed that he had been savagely beaten by Israeli troops.

The networks gave the story wide publicity. On Feb. 8, 1988, Peter Jennings introduced ABC's piece by announcing, "In the Middle East today, United Nations officials say that the Israelis have beaten another Palestinian to death in the occupied territories." CBS said the boy had "received a blow to his head," and then quoted his doctor: "I think he will die soon." NBC reported on a "doctor's helplessness and a father's despair as the 15-year-old dies of head injuries received in a riot."

But the story wasn't true.

According to the pathology records of Rami's autopsy and other medical records, the boy died of a cerebral hemorrhage caused by high blood pressure. He had been sick for more than a year.

Another example is the story of Amjad Hussein Jabril, a 14-year-old Palestinian-American. He was found shot to death in El-Bireh on the West Bank last August. CNN quoted Palestinians charging that the boy had been lost with Israeli soldiers. When his body was found, it showed signs of torture and mutilation.

Despite the army's denials, the State Department pressured the Israeli government into a formal investigation. The family refused to turn over the corpse, so the army exhumed the body. An independent Scottish pathologist selected by the boy's family performed an autopsy. No evidence was found of any torture whatsoever. Amjad had died of a single gunshot wound in the back—from a low-calibre, low velocity gun. The Israeli Army regularly uses military high-velocity rifle bullets and high-calibre pistols.

The autopsy records for these and other Palestinian killings are kept in the Institute for Forensic Medicine, in Jaffa. After reviewing a number of reports, I asked its director Dr. Yehuda Hiss whether any American reporters had ever come to interview him. "None." Even human rights organizations have not bothered to ask for his files. The International League for Human Rights sent two lawyers to interview him on an investigation into Israeli brutality. But Dr. Hiss said, "they came without any lists or names and left after an hour."

The networks prefer to get at truth by more dubious means. In the past year they have handed out at least 15, and perhaps as many as 25, Super-8 video cameras to Palestinians. These "cameramen" make their videos on their own and provide the networks with footage of riots, strikes and funerals. The cameras, according to a senior American television newsman "were distributed to the Palestinians on the basis that they bring us action. But I would be lying to you if I didn't admit that the whole thing makes me feel uneasy."

Asked about the practice of providing video cameras to Palestinians, ABC spokesman Scott Richardson said, "ABC will not confirm or deny that we give out cameras to Palestinians. However our general policy in the world is that from time to time, we have given out equipment to local citizens for safety, legal or political considerations."

In fact, except for Eastern Europe—where fewer than five cameras were given out and each for only a limited period—the networks have distributed cameras nowhere else in the world.

Because few if any American television journalists speak Arabic, it is only natural that the networks seek out Palestinians who speak the language and who can help supply stories. But according to Israeli court records, many of the Palestinian journalists on staff or consultants to the American networks are active participants in the intifada. There is absolutely no way to insure the authenticity of what is filmed nor is there any way to stop the cameras from being used as a tool to mobilize a demonstration.

"Cameras don't lie" is the familiar refrain issued by reporters when confronted with criticism about their coverage. And there is no disputing that cameras have shown Israeli soldiers viciously beating and shooting Palestinians, sometimes without justification.

ABC News broadcast in December footage showing Israeli troops wounding "Palestinian stone throwers" without firing warning shots, contradicting the Israeli Army's version of the episode. The Israeli Army later suspended the troops.

STRICT GUIDELINES

Yet the networks also realize that cameras can distort events. It is not well-known, but each network has strict guidelines that are supposed to guide the use of cameras in civil disturbances.

CBS's Production Standards, which are typical of those used by every network, say that if "your presence is clearly inspiring, continuing or intensifying a dangerous, or potentially dangerous disturbance, cap your cameras and conceal your microphones regardless of what other organizations may do."

Furthermore, the guidelines warn reporters not to report "as factual, rumors, 'eyewitness' reports or statements by participants unless and until their accuracy has been separately and authoritatively confirmed."

In practice, television crew members concede, the guidelines are ignored. "When cameras are taken out, the crowd performs for us. The Palestinians know that we are their lifeline," says Mr. Aynor. "And the guidelines are good until your competitor gets the story you didn't. Then, it's get the story at all costs, forget the guidelines." ABC, in its guidelines, says it "would rather miss a story than mis-report it." If only ABC, or the other networks, truly meant what it said.

NATIONAL DRUG AND CRIME EMERGENCY ACT

HON. BOB McEWEN

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, February 22, 1990

Mr. McEWEN. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of the National Drug and Crime Emergency Act which is being introduced today by my esteemed colleaged from Georgia. I am proud to be an original cosponsor of this needed legislation.

The American public has made it clear that drug use poses a major threat to our Nation. There is no doubt that we face an emergency caused by an enemy that is eating away at the core of our morals and values. Nowhere is that more visible than here in our Nation's Capital. Drug use rips apart the fabric of society and can no longer be tolerated.

This bill answers the call of the public for tough measures against the tyranny of drugs. This bill addresses both supply and demand. It sends a clear message that drug use—all illicit drug use is wrong—and that drug use will have negative consequences. All of the scientific evidence is not enough if we do not have the needed weapons to defend our family values and morals.

So-called casual users will think more than twice when they know the cost of using drugs could be loss of their driving license or their college grant.

And for those drug traffickers who are preying on our communities, this bill sends an unequivocal message. You will pay. You will do time. You will not escape from paying for your crime.

A CONGRESSIONAL SALUTE TO JUDY REVIS IN HONOR OF HER SELECTION AS PARENT OF THE YEAR

HON. GLENN M. ANDERSON

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, February 22, 1990

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure to pay tribute to Judy Revis who will be honored on February 23, 1990, as the California Pools for the Handicapped, Inc.'s, Parent of the Year. This occasion gives me the opportunity to express my personal appreciation for her years of commitment and dedication to her son, Michael, and the rest of the handicapped community.

Unless you are the parent of a handicapped child, it is difficult to imagine the commitment that is made. Judy Revis, as the mother of an autistic child, knows firsthand. For 2 years she has brought Michael to the California Pools for the Handicapped on a weekly basis, missing only when illness struck. During the delivery of her third child, Ashley, now 11 months, Judy missed bringing Michael to rehabilitative swimming for only 1 week. No small feat for a woman recovering from a pregnancy.

It is not just to her son Michael that she is a shining example of motherhood; she also divides her time among two other children, Lyndsi and Ashley, and her husband, Larry. Her busy schedule centers around her family and includes duties relating to Brownies, dance, and sports for her oldest daughter; therapy, speech, and swimming for her son; meeting the needs of a small infant daughter; and babysitting. She also finds time to be a member of both the Parents of Teachers Organization at Lyndsi's school, and the Parents Teachers Association at Michael's school. From her listed activities as a parent, it is not hard to see why Mrs. Revis has been selected as the California Pools for the Handicapped, Inc.'s Parent of the Year.

My wife Lee, joins me extending our heartfelt congratulations to this caring and giving woman. She has dedicated her life to ensure the happiness of those around her. We wish, Judy, her husband, Larry, and their children, Lyndsi, Michael, and Ashley, all the best in the years to come.

TRIBUTE TO LEONARD BLACKSHEAR AND JOHN PETTY

HON. C. THOMAS McMILLEN

OF MARYLAND

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, February 22, 1990

Mr. McMILLEN of Maryland. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pay tribute to Mr. Leonard Blackshear and Mr. John Petty, two very special members of my community, who have demonstrated their dedication and commitment to the preservation and promotion of African-American business development.

Mr. Blackshear and Mr. Petty have followed in the footsteps of earlier innovators such as Richard Allen who established the Free African Society in 1787 to promote self-help and support opportunities, and Booker T. Washington who organized the National Business League, which was the forerunner to the U.S. Chamber of Commerce, pre-dating it by 12 years. Through their various activities, both Mr. Blackshear and Mr. Petty have influenced the ways that minority businesses are developed and ultimately perceived.

For years to come, the dedication and commitment of both Mr. Blackshear and Mr. Petty will be remembered. Leonard Blackshear is the founder and president of Associated Enterprise Inc., in Annapolis, MD. As an officer with the National Business League of Southern Maryland, he was instrumental in structuring the reform of the organization's national focus and scope, shaping new directions which will put it on the cutting edge of the future. Mr. Petty, through his position with the State of Maryland Office of Minority Affairs, his chairmanships of the membership committee of the Minority Business Advisory Board for PortAmerica and the economic development committee for the Southern Coalition on Black Affairs, is making a difference and making inroads for African American entrepreneurs across the State.

Mr. Speaker, I commend these two gentlemen for their outstanding work and unprecedented commitment to justice and economic equality.

TRIBUTE TO BRAVE MILITARY DEPENDENTS IN PANAMA

HON. CLAUDINE SCHNEIDER

OF RHODE ISLAND

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, February 22, 1990

Ms. SCHNEIDER. Mr. Speaker, we have all heralded the bravery of our Armed Forces in Panama. Americans in uniform, however, were not the only citizens who took risks to ensure a successful operation in Panama. Today I wish to recognize those civilian dependents of military personnel in Panama who also showed great bravery.

The contribution and sacrifices of American military dependents all over the world are frequently overlooked. They are placed on the front lines of many dangerous situations without the equipment or training to protect themselves. Yet time and time again, these family members prove themselves to be worthy of our respect.

The courage of the American military dependent is perhaps the most overlooked contribution of any military mission. I feel it is appropriate to acknowledge their contributions to the mission in Panama. The bravery of military dependents deserves to be recognized.

One particular story has come to my attention by a Rhode Island constituent. Kathleen Crowley, wife of Capt. Stephen Crowley, spent the night of the attack on Fort Amador just a few hundred yards from the military target lying on the floor of her room.

An early evacuation of the civilians would have made a surprise attack impossible. I think it is appropriate to take this moment to thank those citizens who may have been overlooked, but should not go without mention.

Congratulations to Kathleen Crowley and others like her for their contribution to a successful operation in Panama.

CLAY INTRODUCES HOUSING TRUST FUND BILL

HON. WILLIAM (BILL) CLAY

OF MISSOURI

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, February 22, 1990

Mr. CLAY. Mr. Speaker, today I am introducing legislation to permit the establishment through collective bargaining of housing trust funds.

On December 1, 1988, local 26 of the Hotel and Restaurant Employees International Union and Boston's unionized hotels negotiated a provision providing for a jointly administered trust fund to assist employees and their families in meeting housing costs. The housing trust fund would provide financial assistance to employees to reduce downpayments, buydown the interest rate on mortgages, provide collateral for loans, and provide assistance for initial rental costs. The contract provisions establishing the housing trust are dependent, however, on the Congress acting by May 31, 1990, to permit the establishment of jointly managed housing trust funds.

On November 22, 1989, the Senate unanimously passed legislation, S. 1949, amending the Labor Management Relations Act [LMRA] to permit the establishment of housing trust funds as a permissive subject of collective bargaining. That legislation was jointly sponsored by Senator KENNEDY and Senator HATCH. The bill I am introducing today is identical to the bill passed unanimously by the Senate. I am pleased to be joined in this effort by the entire Massachusetts delegation as well as other Members of this body. It is my intention to seek House action on this legislation this spring.

The LMRA—also known as the Taft-Hartley Act—includes provisions intended to prevent unwarranted collusion between union officials and management by restricting the ability of employers to provide financial assistance to unions and their officers. Exemptions to this general prohibition permit the establishment of certain enumerated employee benefits that may be provided through trusts jointly administered by unions and employers. As labor and management have sought to address issues of importance to workers, these provisions have been periodically expanded to provide for joint trusts to address emerging concerns. Current law permits the establishment of health benefits, life insurance, retirement benefits, vacation benefits, severance benefits, apprenticeship programs, scholarship funds, and child care assistance. The bill I am introducing will further amend the law to permit the establishment of housing trusts to address the increasing difficulty workers face in obtaining affordable, decent housing.

This legislation does not impact Federal revenue. Further, establishment of housing trust funds would be a permissive, voluntary subject of collective bargaining. As such, the subject could be raised at the bargaining table only when both parties were willing to discuss it. Neither party would be permitted to bargain to impasse or engage economic pressure over the establishment of a housing trust fund. Finally, such trusts would not only be jointly managed by labor and management, but would be fully subject to the regulatory requirements of the Labor Management Reporting and Disclosure Act—Landrum-Griffin Act—and the Employee Retirement Income Security Act [ERISA] as it relates to any other welfare plan.

As Senator KENNEDY stated during Senate consideration of this legislation:

Labor and management in Boston have agreed on an effective approach to better housing. They need no money from Congress for this trust fund to become a reality. All they require is permission to do so under the Labor Management Relations Act.

Mr. Speaker, in my view enactment of this very modest bill will further important public policies. The previous administration's neglect and abuse of public housing programs has jeopardized the ability of the Federal Government to address America's housing needs. Today, half a million Americans are homeless and in many areas of the country rising housing costs are placing the ability of workers to own their own homes beyond reach. This legislation promotes a private sector solution to the increasing difficulties workers face in obtaining affordable, decent housing. It deserves the support of the Members of the House.

I want to share with my colleagues an editorial from the February 6, 1990, issue of the Boston Globe and a letter from the Massachusetts delegation in support of this legislation.

The editorial and letter follows:

[From the Boston Globe, Feb. 6, 1990]

HOTEL WORKERS' HOUSING NEEDS

A pioneering housing plan by the Boston hotel workers' union needs help from Congress. The House should pass a law quickly so the hotel workers can get the housing they urgently need.

The plan, negotiated with the hotels a year ago, diverts five cents for every hour worked into a Housing Trust Fund. The money, already up to $1 million, is idle because the federal Taft-Hartley Law prohibits this kind of benefit.

Members of hotel workers Local 26 knew about that, but thought it would be easy to persuade Congress to amend the law. They set a contract deadline of May 30, 1990, little knowing of the lawmakers' leisurely pace.

Thanks to prodding by Sen. Edward Kennedy, the bill cleared the Senate in November. It must pass the House within the next four months to do any good.

Rep. Joseph Moakley has promised to help, but no one from Massachusetts sits on the Labor and Education Committee, which oversees the legislation. Committee members need to move the bill quickly, even though it does not immediately affect their constituents.

Although the bill will first help members of Local 26, its long-range impact could be as a precedent for contract negotiations in any community where housing prices have soared beyond the reach of union members.

The trust fund would provide the seed money to get hotel workers into housing most appropriate for their needs. Money from the fund will be used for counseling on the intricacies of home buying, as security deposits, or to reduce the interest rate on loans.

Unions are supposed to negotiate contracts that help meet the changing needs of their members—whether for higher wages, medical care or housing. Local 26 and the hotels deserve praise for setting up the Housing Trust Fund, and a helping hand from Congress to ensure it takes effect promptly.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, DC, February 7, 1990.

Hon. WILLIAM CLAY,
Chairman, Subcommittee on Labor-Management Relations, Rayburn House Office Building, Washington, DC.

DEAR CHAIRMAN CLAY: We, the undersigned members of the Massachusetts delegation, respectfully request that the Subcommittee on Labor-Management Relations initiate legislation which would amend Section 302(c) of the Taft-Hartley Act to allow for the negotiation of housing trust funds. Further, we offer our strong and active support of such an initiative and we ask to be included as original cosponsors.

We support a companion bill to S. 1949 which was passed by the Senate in November 1989 under the sponsorship of Senator Edward M. Kennedy. As you know, S. 1949 amends Section 302(c) of the Taft-Hartley Act to allow parties engaged in collective bargaining to negotiate for the establishment and administration of housing trust funds which can provide financial assistance for employee housing.

We submit our request on behalf of both union and management representatives of the Boston hotel industry. In December 1988, Boston hotel workers, represented by Local 26 of the Boston Hotel and Restaurant Employees, negotiated a contract which provided for the financing and implementation of a housing trust fund for direct financial assistance for eligible members.

As Congressional representatives of these workers, we applaud the efforts of Local 26 and commend this example of union-management cooperation. We believe that this innovative and unprecedented benefit represents an effective and tax-free method of attacking the serious problem of the lack of affordable housing. Moreover, the successful implementation of this trust fund at the local level will encourage its duplication nationwide and could become an integral part of a national strategy for addressing the urgent need for more affordable housing.

It is urgent that this matter be given immediate consideration to ensure the viability of this program. The union's original contract agreement imposes a deadline of May 31, 1990 for this adjustment. Without it, the money deposited into the trust fund will be diverted to cover traditional employee benefits. Since affordable housing is one of the most critical issues facing working men and women today, we sincerely hope that this severe time limit will not jeopardize the realization of this housing trust fund.

We thank you in advance for your cooperation and offer any assistance we could provide.

Sincerely,

Edward J. Markey, Barney Frank, Richard E. Neal, Gerry E. Studds, Joseph P. Kennedy II, Silvio O. Conte, John Joseph Moakley, Brian J. Donnelly, Chester G. Atkins, Nicholas Mavroules, and Joseph D. Early.

LET'S RECOGNIZE THE IMPORTANCE OF COMMUNITY COLLEGES

HON. LES AuCOIN
OF OREGON
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, February 22, 1990

Mr. AuCOIN. Mr. Speaker, today I am introducing legislation to advance the cause of community colleges across this country by increasing their profile in the U.S. Department of Education. A companion bill is being introduced in the Senate by my colleague from Oregon, Senator MARK O. HATFIELD.

Our bill will establish an Office of Vocational and Adult Education and Community Colleges within the Department of Education, to be administered by an Assistant Secretary of Vocational and Adult Education and Community Colleges.

The new office will replace the current Office of Vocational and Adult Education. It will administer Federal programs relating to vocational education, adult technical-vocational education, adult basic education, community colleges, and technical institutions. It will also serve to coordinate programs which address adult rural education and rural family education.

In changing the name of this office, Mr. Speaker, I intend more than a cosmetic change at the Department of Education. I want to change the reality. The fact is that the Department has failed to recognize the critical role community and junior colleges have come to play in building a competitive work force for the United States now and in the 21st century.

Why should the Department of Education pay more attention to community colleges? Between 1965 and 1975 enrollment in community colleges more than tripled as communities across the country built institutions to answer to the exploding demand. Since then enrollment has increased steadily to the present level of over 5 million students. In my district, Portland Community College now has a larger total enrollment than all of Oregon's 4-year institutions combined.

In growing as rapidly as they have, community colleges have responded to needs which are easily recognizable as basic requirements of a competitive work force and a strong economy. Basic education, technical training, upgrading of skills, and small business expertise are critical to our ability to deal with a rapidly changing world economy and world of work. Business leaders and their employees are sensitive to these changes and community colleges have been quick to offer programs at costs affordable to middle income and working people.

Community colleges have come to play a leading role in cooperating with secondary schools to enhance vocational education. They have contracted with industry to train and upgrade the skills of employees. They incubate small businesses. They increasingly offer services to Government agencies for training welfare recipients and underemployed workers so they can become more productive. As more women entered the work force many chose community colleges as their training point of entry; women now make up more than half of all community college enrollments. In many rural communities they are the only source of higher or technical education available to the local population. There is every sign that they are—and will continue to be—a major player in meeting the challenges and solving the problems which confront our society.

To recognize the increased role of community colleges does not in any way discount the importance of other institutions of higher education—universities, colleges, and graduate schools. Educating our citizens and our work force in a changing world is the job of many different kinds of institutions. But we need to recognize, and—where we can—enhance the contribution of community colleges to these major challenges. And I say this as trustee of one of the finest private universities in the country, my own alma mater.

Mr. Speaker, the bill we are introducing today will, I hope, be a first step toward the kind of recognition community colleges deserve from officials charged with shaping Federal education policy to address the needs of a 21st century work force. I urge my colleagues to support this effort.

In closing, I would like to submit for the RECORD testimony of Mr. Keith Skelton, chairman of the board of Portland Community College about the need for this legislation. Mr. Skelton presented this testimony to a hearing held by the U.S. Department of Education in San Francisco on November 15, 1989, on reauthorization of the Higher Education Act. The testimony follows:

TESTIMONY OF KEITH SKELTON

My name is Keith D. Skelton and I appear here as a representative of Portland Community College in Portland, Oregon, where I am Chair of the elected Board of Directors. I also appear representing and as a member of the Board of the Oregon Community College Association, a group made up of 16 community colleges having a student population of over 300,000 attendees. I commend the federal Department of Education for the timing of these hearings. These forums give all partners in the programs covered by the Higher Education Act, and especially in the Title IV programs, an opportunity to share ideas and problems that should be addressed in the reauthorization process.

I believe this procedure shows good faith on the part of the Department to meet college leaders in the field through this process, so that we may discuss the mounting difficulties colleges face in their good faith efforts to make the programs work under the multitude of massive regulations promulgated by your department.

I am a relative newcomer to the community college arena, having spent most of my life in 4 years college classrooms and courtrooms. I became involved in community colleges when my own son, a Navy veteran who appeared on the civilian scene with service acquired afflictions of alcohol and drugs, through the caring counselling and education of devoted faculty members in the community college I now serve he became a productive and valued member of main stream society, and that sold me on community colleges.

When I became aware of the national picture, however, I soon found that the immense federal Department of Education had no special area of application reserved for community colleges; so far as I can see, no person, group, or section in the Department speaks for our displays interest in the specialized area of community colleges. We have our detractors, especially involving default loans; however, I have yet to find any special pleaders among the 4 year college devotees who populate the offices and payrolls of the Department. I have resolved, therefore, that I will do what I can to see that Community Colleges are recognized in the Act, and if it takes legislation I am prepared to go that route if necessary. I am getting support from community colleges throughout the nation, and I believe that in the near future we will see a new interest in community colleges displayed in the Department of Education.

It is no secret that the community, technical and junior colleges of the United States are displeased with the general absence in the Department's executive ranks of professionals from two years colleges. This was, unfortunately, true in the U.S. Office of Education, and nothing much has changed since the Department was established. Moreover, we have yet to see any initiative of change today in the year of the President of Education.

What has made the omission all the more egregious in recent years, and all the more detrimental to both the department and our communities, is the fact that community colleges now have the largest enrollment of any segment of higher education. Let me remind you; community colleges today are not glorified high schools; we now serve the majority of American students starting college, and the proportion of total enrollment continues to grow. In Maryland, for instance, in the Departments own back yard recent data shows that ¾ of Maryland's freshman and sophomores are enrolled in community colleges. In Oregon the figure is well above 50%, and the college I represent has a larger total enrollment than all of the Oregon 4 year institutions combined.

In the Bush Administration, no official of presidentially nominated rank comes today from the recent ranks of community college professionals. Since the department has seen little disposition to rectify this omission we think it should be addressed in the reauthorization. I am sure that I speak for community colleges throughout this land when I urge here today that the reauthorization establish an Office of Assistant Secretary to manage community and technical college affairs, with responsibility for all postsecondary programs of subbaccalaureate level, including postsecondary and adult technical-vocational education, cooperative education, and adult basic education.

Such an office should play a vital role in helping mold federal training and educational programs into the kind of national human resource strategy that gives the nation a world class work force by the turn of the century. In addition to the irreplaceable role they play in providing 2 year transfer education, community colleges constitute the nation's largest network of formal adult training and retraining on technical skills levels, and yet they do not begin to be effectively utilized as they should be in meeting the employment challenge of global competition. Blame for this underutilization is federal Department of Education, as well as the Labor Department and the economic development agencies of the varous states.

Thank you for this opportunity to present my views and my proposal regarding increasing the role which community colleges play in the Department. I hope you will recommend my proposals to the Secretary.

DIGITAL AUDIO TAPE RECORDER ACT OF 1990

HON. HENRY A. WAXMAN

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, February 22, 1990

Mr. WAXMAN. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to join my colleagues Messrs. SWIFT, COOPER, BOUCHER, OXLEY, FIELDS, RITTER, BRUCE, BARTON, and TAUKE on the Energy and Commerce Committee in introducing the Digital Audio Tape Recorder Act of 1990.

Digital audio tape [DAT], like compact discs, was developed with the state-of-the-art digital technology that has revolutionized the quality of music recordings available to consumers. While compact discs only allow prerecorded music to be played back, DAT goes one step further and allows it also to be recorded. And, unlike copies on analog tape, DAT copies, whether they are the first or thousandth generation, have the same master copy quality as the original recording.

This recording technology, which was developed a number of years ago in Japan and is just now being introduced to the United States market, has reignited the debate on copyright protections for creators and owners of music. Neither Congress nor the courts have addressed this issue. But as taping has increased, the men and women who write music have effectively lost their ability to protect their creative works. This is wrong. Congress must pass legislation that protects copyrighted material and properly compensates writers and artists when it is taped.

To understand the threat DAT poses to copyright holders, we need only look at the impact current recording technology has had on the music industry. Since cassette recorders were introduced more than 10 years ago, blank tape sales have grown by 345 percent. The recording industry estimates losses of approximately $1.5 billion annually in lost sales.

In 1987 I introduced H.R. 1384, the Digital Audio Recorder Act, to address the threat to copyright holders of the imminent entry of DAT machines into the United States. H.R. 1384 would have required all DAT machines sold in the United States, for one year after the bill's enactment, to contain a copy-code scanner system to prevent copies of prerecorded music from being made. This bill would have given Congress time to consider the best way to balance the benefits of home taping with the rights of copyright holders. Key provisions of H.R. 1384 were included in the omnibus trade bill but were removed for procedural reasons before it was considered by the full House.

After H.R. 1384 failed to pass, many Members of Congress encouraged the consumer electronics and recording industries to work to resolve their differences on copyright issues. Representatives of these industries worked together for almost 2 years to find a common legislative solution to copyright problems.

The negotiators could not agree on much. They did not agree, for instance, on whether consumers have a right to tape prerecorded music. Nor could they agree on whether a royalty system should be created to compensate copyright holders when their works are taped. They did, however, reach agreement on one major issue; The problem of serial copying, that is, copying from copies on DAT recorders. They also made joint recommendations to world governments on the format for DAT. The Digital Audio Tape Recorder Act, which my colleagues and I are introducing today, embodies this landmark compromise.

The Digital Audio Tape Recorder Act would require all DAT recorders to contain a serial copy management system [SCMS]. This technology would not prevent a DAT recorder from making first-generation digital-to-digital copies of original prerecorded music, but it would prevent serial copying. Home taping on conventional analog tape recorders would not be subject to this legislation.

Some members of the creative community have expressed concern that the enactment of the DAT agreement could implicitly establish a legal right to first-generation home taping. To allay these concerns, this legislation explicitly states that no new taping rights are created, and that this bill will have no effect on existing copyright laws as they pertain to home taping.

I have been a longstanding supporter of a royalty system as the fairest and most efficient way to compensate creators and owners of music for their copyrighted work. I know that many in the creative community are deeply disappointed that this bill contains no such system. I share that disappointment and wish a compromise were in hand. Unfortunately, it is not.

It may be that Congress will be ready to enact a royalty system in the near future. I certainly will do all I can to make that a reality. But in the interim, I believe this bill provides real and important protection to copyright holders. It is not a comprehensive solution, but it does guarantee that the creative community will be protected against unauthorized serial DAT copies of their copyrighted musical works.

The Digital Audio Tape Recorder Act represents the first time, after many years of debate, that the recording and consumer electronics industries have found some common ground on intellectual property rights. It also demonstrates that the protection of intellectual property can be possible without impeding the development of new recording technologies. I urge my colleagues to join me in cosponsoring this important legislation.

SECTION-BY-SECTION DESCRIPTION OF THE DIGITAL AUDIO TAPE RECORDER ACT OF 1990

Section 1 sets forth the title of the bill.

Section 2 sets forth certain findings that help put the legislation in perspective. Most of the findings describe the development of the serial copy management system (SCMS) for digital audio tape (DAT) recorders and how this system works. Other findings indicate that—

Enactment of the legislation will fulfill the constitutional power of Congress to promote the progress of science and the useful arts by encouraging the development of new technologically advanced products while providing protection for creators of copyrighted works;

Congress expects representatives of the consumer electronics and music industries to discuss copyright issues resulting from new technologies, including recordable and erasable compact disc players, to study possible approaches, and to make legislative recommendations for applying SCMS or another system with greater copying restrictions than SCMS to these new technologies; and

Enactment of the legislation will not address or affect the legality of private home copying under copyright law and will not prejudice consideration of whether or not royalties should be levied for private home copying of copyrighted music.

As a group, the findings provide background helpful for interpreting the SCMS standards and specifications mandated for DAT recorders and help put congressional consideration of the legislation into context.

Under SCMS, the circuitry which controls the functions of a DAT recorder will be programmed to read certain coding information accompanying the source material and, based on the particular combination of codes it reads, will not prevent unrestricted copying, will not prevent copying but label the copy with a code to restrict further digital-to-digital copying, or disallow such copying. Under this system, a DAT recorder will not prevent the making of first-generation digital-to-digital copies of original prerecorded music and other material from compact discs, prerecorded DAT cassettes, digital broadcasts, and other digital sources entering through a digital input, but will prevent the making of second-generation digital-to-digital copies of the copies. In recognition of the fact that a DAT recorder is presently unable to determine whether original prerecorded music or other material entering through an analog input has been coded for copyright protection, a DAT recorder will not prevent the making of a first-generation and a second-generation digital-to-digital copy of the source material, but will prevent the making of a third-generation digital-to-digital copy of the second-generation copy. In the even that technological developments permit the circuitry of a DAT recorder to identify copyrighted material entering through an analog input, equivalent limitations on digital copies of copies should apply, but there will be no limitation on serial digital copying of analog material not coded for copyright protection.

Home taping on conventional analog tape recorders will not be subject to SCMS. Thus, home taping on analog tape recorders will remain unaffected by this legislation.

Section 3 governs the manufacture and distribution of DAT recorders and phonrecords. Subsection (a)(1) provides that no person may manufacture or distribute a DAT recorder or digital audio interface device that does not conform to the standards and specifications to implement SCMS set forth in the technical reference document or established under an order by the Secretary of Commerce. (For purposes of this section, "manufacture or distribute" is defined broadly in subsection (f) to mean to manufacture, assemble, sell, resell, lease, or distribute in commerce, or to offer to do any of these in commerce.)

Subsection (a)(2) provides that, if the Secretary of Commerce approves standards and specifications under section 4(b)(3) to implement SCMS for source material in the analog format, then no person may manufacture or distribute a DAT recorder or digital audio interface device that fails to conform to such standards and specifications. At present, a DAT recorder is unable to determine whether original prerecorded music or other material entering through an analog input has been coded for copyright protection. Industry representatives are at work, studying the technical feasibility of implementing a system that would carry the copyright code in the analog, as well as the digital, format. If they develop a technical solution and if the Secretary then makes the required determination, future models of DAT recorders will have to implement the new technology before they may be sold in the United States.

Subsection (b) proscribes circumvention of SCMS. It provides that no person may manufacture or distribute a device, or offer to perform a service, the primary purpose or effect of which is to avoid, bypass, remove, deactivate, or otherwise circumvent any program or circuit that implements, in whole or in part, SCMS in DAT recorders. Thus, the legislation is aimed at the sale of so-called "black boxes" and computer programs that will defeat the system, as well as at persons operating a service to circumvent the system.

Subsection (c) exempts professional model DAT recorders from the coverage of the legislation. This subsection contains a number of criteria for determining whether a particular device qualifies as a professional model. The intent is threefold: to ensure that recording professionals, such as musicians, recording studio engineers, broadcasters, and cable operators, may purchase DAT recorders that are not limited in their recording ability; to provide manufacturers with guidance for designing and marketing models for use by recording professionals; and to ensure that this exception does not become a loophole by which the unscrupulous seek to market "professional" models to consumers through traditional consumer outlets.

Subsection (d) provides that no person may encode a phonorecord of a sound recording with inaccurate information relating to the category code, copyright status, or generation status of the source material so as to improperly affect the operation of SCMS. This provision, however, does not require any person to encode a phonorecord so as to claim copyright protection. That remains a decision for each copyright holder to make.

Subsection (e) provides that a person who transmits or otherwise communicates to the public in digital form the copyright status of a sound recording must do so accurately. This provision does not require broadcasters or cable operators to transmit sound recordings in a particular digital format or to otherwise transmit information about the category code, copyright status, or generation status of a sound recording. Rather, it only requires that information about the copyright status of a sound recording be accurate if it is transmitted or othewise communicated.

Section 4 sets forth the mechanisms for implementing SCMS in DAT recorders and digital audio interface devices. Subsection (a) provides that within 10 days following enactment of the legislation, the Register of Copyrights must publish the technical reference document in the Federal Register. The proposed text of this document is attached to this section-by-section description. It is a technical reference document that adopts certain of the standards proposed to the International Electrotechnical Commission (IEC) in "IEC 958: Digital Audio Interface" and "IEC XXX Part 6: Serial copy management system for consumer audio use DAT recorders." Irrespective of how the proposals are treated by the IEC, the standards and specifications set forth in the technical reference document are intended to be determinative for purposes of defining the technical requirements of this legislation.

The technical reference document establishes two sets of standards and specifications. The first set governs the composition and specifications. The first set governs the composition of digital audio signals being sent to and received by a DAT recorder, known as the "Digital; Audio Interface Standard." The second set governs the recording functions of consumer model DAT recorders, to be known as the "Serial Copy Management System Standard" or the "SCMS Standard."

Subsection (b) contains three "safety valve" mechanisms, all triggered upon petition of an interested party, to implement SCMS differently than provided for in the technical reference document. Upon receipt of a petition and before issuing an order under this provision, the Secretary of Commerce must consult with the Register of Copyrights. The first mechanism provides the Secretary with the authority to issue an order permitting in commerce DAT recorders that possess the functional characteristics of SCMS and are compatible with SCMS as prescribed under the technical reference document, but which do not meet all of the standards and specifications set forth in the technical reference document. The intent is to have a mechanism by which the Secretary can remedy any technical problems that develop in implementing SCMS using the technical reference document and to permit other technologies which may be developed which implement SCMS in some other way. The second provision gives the Secretary the authority to issue an order permitting in commerce DAT recorders that meet a new set of standards and specifications to implement SCMS, in the event that the overall standards for DAT recorders or digital audio interface devices are no longer applicable and are revised in the future. The third provision provides the Secretary with the authority to approve standards and specifications for applying SCMS to source material in the analog format in an equivalent manner as source material in the digital format.

Section 5 establishes remedies for violations of the legislation. Subsection (a) provides that an aggrieved person or the Attorney General may bring a civil action to redress a violation of section 3. Subsection (b) provides the court with authority to grant injunctions, award damages, direct the recovery of costs, and grant such other equitable relief as it may deem reasonable.

Subsection (c) sets forth mechanisms for calculating damages, subject to a limit of $1 million per judgment as established under paragraph (1). An aggrieved person has the option of recovering actual damages or statutory damages, subject to this limit. Paragraph (2) provides the court with the authority to make an additional award of damages, up to a maximum of an additional $5 million, if it determines that a violation of section 3 was committed willfully and for purposes of direct or indirect commercial advantage or private financial gain. Paragraph (3) gives the court the discretion to lower the damage award to $250 if it finds that the violator was not aware and had no reason to believe that his or her acts constituted a violation of section 3.

Subsection (d) provides the court with authority to impound devices that the court has reasonable cause to believe do not comply with section 3.

Subsection (e) limits the authority of a court to issue a temporary or preliminary injunction against the distribution of DAT recorders labeled as professional models. The court only may do so if it finds that the labeling and distribution of the devices by a manufacturer were without a reasonable basis or not in good faith. The intent is to permit a manufacturer to continue to distribute devices in commerce pending resolution of the case, unless it is clear that it could not reasonably or in good faith have labeled and distributed a device as a professional model.

Subsection (f) permits the court to order the remedial modification of any device or phonorecord that does not comply with section 3. The court also is given authority to order destruction of any device or phonorecord that does not comply with section 3.

Section 6 defines terms used in the legislation. Of these definitions, the most important one defines a DAT recorder. The intent is to limit the applicability of this legislation only to devices that are intended or marketed to consumers for the primary purpose of making a sound recording in a digital format on magnetic tape. The "primary purpose" test is intended to ensure that only those products expected to be used principally for making audio recordings contain the circuitry or program to implement SCMS. In addition, by stating that the legislation covers devices included with or as part of some other device, the bill is intended to cover devices like "boom boxes" and to ensure that the requirements of the legislation may not be avoided merely by incorporating a DAT recorder into another device.

The bill defines a digital audio interface device as any machine or device, whether or not developed as of the date of the enactment of the Act, and whether or not included with or as part of some other device, that supplies a digital audio signal through a "non-professional interface" as that term is used in the Digital Audio Interface Standard in Part I of the technical reference document or in an order of the Secretary of Commerce pursuant to section 4(b)(1) or (2).

For drafting simplicity, the bill refers to the "technical reference document," the document appearing in the Congressional Record that sets forth the standards and specifications for implementing SCMS in DAT recorders and digital audio interface devices.

Finally, this section states that all other terms in the bill will have the same meanings as those set forth in the Copyright Act of 1976, as amended. Such terms as "phonorecord" and "sound recording" appear throughout the bill. These and other terms have developed particular meanings through statutory amendments to the law and through judicial precedent. This provision preserves the interpretations developed under the Copyright Act.

Section 7 provides that the legislation is not intended to affect any right or remedy, or any limitation on any such right or remedy, held by or available to any person under the Copyright Act of 1976, as amended. Section 7 also provides that nothing in the legislation creates or affords any greater or lesser rights with respect to private home copying of a copyrighted work than any rights afforded under the Copyright Act.

Section 8 amends the Copyright Act to include the language set forth in section 7 in statutory form.

Finally, section 9 of the bill establishes the date of enactment as the effective date for the legislation, but specifies that the requirements for implementing SCMS do not apply to devices or phonorecords manufactured or assembled prior to that date. Thus, all devices and phonorecords currently in the hands of consumers or in the chain of distribution prior to enactment of the legislation will not be subject to it.

DIGITAL AUDIO TAPE RECORDER ACT OF 1990

HON. AL SWIFT

OF WASHINGTON

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, February 22, 1990

Mr. SWIFT. Mr. Speaker, I take great pleasure in joining my friend and colleague Mr. WAXMAN and our House colleagues in introducing the Digital Audio Tape Recorder Act of 1990. He and I came to this proposal from different directions, but we agree that it is both necessary and important.

Two years ago we were on different sides of a knock-down, drag-out legislative battle. Ultimately, we did not legislate on DAT in the 100th Congress. However, as a result of our activity, several House Members, including my friend, the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. KASTENMEIER], suggested to the recording and consumer electronics industries that perhaps the best legislative approach to DAT might be arrived at through negotiation between these two industries. We were not the only ones. In the other body and, indeed, around the world, leaders of government and industry made the same request: Won't you please work something out on DAT?

I am pleased to be able to join my colleagues in introducing a bill based on the compromise that these industries reached. The heart of this compromise is agreement that a circuit called the Serial Copy Management System, or SCMS, should be legally required to be built into every DAT manufactured after the effective date of the legislation. Very simply, the SCMS would not interfere with the ability of DAT's to make pure digital copies of albums, but would not allow these copies to be themselves copied digitally. This provides protection from chain-letter type duplication of the recording industry's very valuable digital master tapes, but, in my view does not materially interfere with the legitimate needs of consumers. I say this as an avid home taper myself.

I very much hope we can pass this legislation this year. While the technology is a bit complicated, I think expert testimony will show that for engineers it is fairly straightforward and quite feasible. I think there has been regulatory uncertainty about DAT long enough. Consumers are entitled to the newest technology while it is still new.

Some who applauded my stand 2 years ago have wondered why I should support any legislation now. After all, they point out, the restrictive legislation of 2 years ago never passed. Why regulate a product that I believe is already legal?

First, even if DAT's with SCMS built in may soon be available for purchase, the only sound course is to support this bill. What this product needs is confidence and stability. The only agreement between these industries was to recommend measures to governments. If the compromise is never officially adopted, there is nothing to prevent either its lawful circumvention by those who would sell machines without SCMS protection, or the ultimate adoption of measures inconsistent with SCMS. Moreover, consumers might be hesitant to invest in a format that remains controversial.

Second, we should recognize that while this bill is very narrowly drawn so as to regulate DAT only, its significance extends well beyond its scope. For years, we in Congress have held hearings and commissioned studies about the march of technology and our inability to keep the law abreast of it. In this instance we asked the industries that developed the techology to work out a reasonable compromise on some very difficult issues, and they actually have done so. They did it in a commendably specific way: This bill does not change the copyright law as it pertains to any product, including DAT; nor does it theoretically or specifically impinge on other advanced technologies. In other words, this bill represents a noble yet safe experiment. Those who care about applying the law to advanced technologies have every reason to wish it to succeed.

I look forward to working with my colleagues to have this legislation expeditiously enacted into law.

ANTI-SEMITISM: THE RETURN OF A RUSSIAN NIGHTMARE

HON. TOM LANTOS

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, February 22, 1990

Mr. LANTOS. Mr. Speaker, last Sunday the Washington Post published an outstanding article on the rise of anti-Semitism in the Soviet Union. The author is Vitalii I. Goldanskii, a prominent Soviet scientist and the director of the Semenov Institute of Chemical Physics of the Soviet Academy of Sciences. Academician Goldanskii is also a member of the Council of People's Deputies—the Soviet parliament—and a member of the parliament's foreign relations committee. To my knowledge, this article is the sharpest public criticism thus far of the alarming rise of anti-Semitism in the Soviet Union.

Mr. Speaker, I ask that this outstanding article be placed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, and I urge my collegues to give it serious and thoughtful attention. We in the Congress must take the lead in criticizing, condemning, and calling the attention of the world to this inhuman, racist violence against innocent men, women, and children. This article is an important first step in publicizing this vicious, spiteful, and dangerous nightmare.

[From the Washington Post, Feb. 18, 1990]

ANTI-SEMITISM: THE RETURN OF A RUSSIAN NIGHTMARE

(By Vitalii I. Goldanskii)

Supporters of President Gorbachev's perestroika are increasingly alarmed by the possibility that this program of restructuring and reforms may collapse. Should this occur—and it cannot be ruled out even in the near future—it would be a disaster not only for the Soviet Union but for all humankind.

Many of the difficulties being encountered by perestroika are well known outside the Soviet Union, as are some of the potential consequences if perestroika fails. But too little attention has been given, until now, to the special dangers posed by the growing aggressiveness in the Soviet Union of extreme right-wing, virulently anti-semitic groups that seek to subvert perestroika, to blame the country's past and present problems on the Jews, and (as some of their propaganda states explicitly) to "finish what Hitler started."

These extremists are flourishing in the climate of spite, envy, scapegoating and hatred associated with the increasingly severe difficulties in the Soviet economy and growing ethnic tensions. They are perhaps already the strongest, and certainly the fastest growing, of the divisive forces pushing the country toward bloodshed and civil war.

The extremist groups go by a variety of innocuous-sounding names, of which the best known outside the Soviet Union is the "National Patriotic Front Pamyat" (pamyat means "memory"). A number of them recently entered into a confederation under the title of "Bloc of Social-Patriotic Movements of Russia." I prefer to call them Russian monarcho-Nazis (or monarcho-fascists), to reflect their combination of deep reverence for the autocratic csarist Russian empire and ferocious hatred of Jews.

Incredibly, the Russian monarcho-Nazis openly and widely condemn the Jews as the main culprits in all of the troubles of Russia from the October Revolution of 1917 up until the present—including genocide against the Russian people in the form of the millions of Russian deaths in civil war, collectivization and various purges; destruction of tens of thousands of Russian churches and historical monuments; and spiritual poisoning of the people through the introduction of decadent and corrupt Western culture alien to Russian tradition. They even accuse the Jews of ritual murders and a worldwide conspiracy against humankind, making reference to the disgraceful hoax, "The Protocols of the Elders of Zion."

There is striking similarity, in fact, between the views, programs and intentions of the Russian monarcho-Nazis and the original Nazi platform as laid out in Hitler's "Mein Kampf" and other infamous documents of the German Nazi period. This similarity, and the resemblance of the general situation in the Soviet Union in 1988-90 to that in Germany in 1931-33, have been publicized by progressive Soviet mass media. The newspaper Soviet Circus, for example, has printed a point-by-point comparison of Pamyat's manifesto with the program of the Nazi Party of the 1930s.

The main organization serving as a coordinator of the monarcho-Nazi forces is the Union of Writers of the Russian Federation (RSFSR). As outlets for their propaganda they have at their disposal such newspapers and journals as "Literaturnaya Rossiya"

(Literary Russia), "Nas Sovremennik" (Our Contemporary), "Molodaya Gvardija" (Young Guards) and "Moscow." The leaders of this movement include many notorious writers, some scientists, some artists and others.

The Nazi-type speeches and publications of these groups are becoming routine features of everyday life in the Soviet Union. Their form and content were analyzed by Prof. Herman Andreyev from Mainz University in West Germany in a recent issue of the weekly magazine Ogonyok. He concluded that in Western European countries such statements would be treated as unconstitutional, the persons propagating them would be called to account and the organizations supporting them would be dissolved.

Yet the monarcho-Nazis seem to be meeting no serious opposition—indeed, more often sympathy and connivance—from important party and government leaders of the U.S.S.R. It is instructive, for example, that in the platform of the Soviet Communist Party on ethnic problems published in August 1989, not a single word was said about the anti-semitic campaign against so-called cosmopolites (1949), the shooting of leading Jewish writers and artists (1952), or the disgraceful "Doctor's plot" (1935), while many other Stalin-era crimes against various nationalities of the Soviet people were scrupulously mentioned.

Similarly, an appeal by more than 200 people's deputies of the U.S.S.R. to the Presidium of the First Session of the Congress of the People's Deputies in June 1989, expressing concern about the "growing wave of anti-semitic activities, including open calls for violence that could lead to irretrievable consequences," went unanswered. That was also the fate of a letter written to Gorbachev on this subject by 10 distinguished scientists and writers in September 1989.

The explanation of such passivity on the part of the authorities seems quite simple. In addition to the evident sympathy of many authorities on different levels to the views of the monarcho-Nazis, others who do not sympathize nonetheless hesitate to act because of the way the growing aggressiveness of the monarcho-Nazis is linked to the bloody ethnic conflicts and intensifying separatist movements in nearly all of the outlying districts of the Soviet Union.

Specifically, this situation offers the monarcho-Nazis considerable opportunities for blackmail and intimidation of Gorbachev and his closest advisers, through the claim that, in conditions of the "decline of empire," the Russian heartland and her "genuine sons" constitute the only reliable basis for the preservation of Gorbachev's power. Such arguments are being used to push Gorbachev toward the right and to divide him from his true supporters on the left—the liberal intelligentsia. The result could be a repetition of the circumstances that produced the downfall of Khrushchev in 1964.

In parallel with their attempts to intimidate Gorbachev, the monarcho-Nazis have been openly attacking his foreign policy. They even have accused Gorbachev of being an agent in the service of the CIA and the Israeli intelligence service, the Mossad. With this two-pronged strategy of intimidation and direct attack, the Russian monarcho-Nazis hope to attain either a decisive influence over Gorbachev's policies or his removal and replacement at the seat of power by supporters of their movement.

What would that mean for Soviet Jews? The answer is all too clear from the similarity of the monarcho-Nazis' program to that of Hitler. The Russian monarcho-Nazis already possess their equivalent to Hitler's SA and SS, in the form of the Pamyat movement. This movement does not disguise its intentions to carry out pogroms against the Jews, to whom it refers using the insulting word "zhidy" (yids). In fact, members of Pamyat have been organizing well-attended meetings all over the country to call for pogroms—even in Moscow's Red Square on Nov. 12, 1989—and no one has stood in their way.

Hitler treated as Jews those who have more than one-quarter Jewish blood. Pamyat goes further. It has announced its intention to search for Jewish progenitors back to the 10th generation. New recruits to Pamyat are required to prove their "racial purity" and to provide to the organization the home addresses of five Jews—no doubt for the purposes of the pogroms to come. Opponents of the monarcho-Nazi movement who happen to be "racially pure" or "Aryan" are characterized, along with all liberal intelligentsia, as "masons" (or "zhidomasons," i.e., supporters of Jews); and these are also the targets of pogrom propaganda.

The brazenness of monarcho-Nazi threats against Soviet Jewry has been increasing. In addition to anti-semitic rallies and the desecration of Jewish cemeteries around the country, which have been going on for some time, it now seems that meetings of liberal intellectuals are no longer safe from disruption by Pamyat thugs.

On the evening of Jan. 18 of this year, for example, a meeting of the progressive "April" group of writers at the Central House of Writers in Moscow was invaded by some dozens of Pamyat monarcho-Nazis with megaphones. They roughed up some of the writers, forcibly ejected others from the hall, shouted anti-semitic slogans and announced that their next visit will be with automatic weapons. They also designated St. George's Day, at the beginning of May, for a pogrom. The police were called but took their time in arriving, and there were no arrests.

Further increases in anti-semitic activities (especially, of course, actual violence) surely will lead to a mass exodus of Jews, people of partly Jewish extraction and "racially pure" liberal intelligentsia. This new wave of emigrants—refugees from monarcho-Nazi power—could reach several millions and would represent a serious brain-drain from the U.S.S.R.

As for the possibility of another Holocaust, it certainly could not reach the scale of earlier Nazi crimes: The world has changed too drastically in the last half century for that. But a wave of pogroms more or less along the lines of the infamous "Kristallnacht" cannot be ruled out—weaker if a government like the present one tries to oppose them, stronger if a successor government of the monarcho-Nazi stripe sympathizes with the pogrom lust.

What should be done? As a start, the world public should be informed of the activities and intentions of the new followers of Hitler in the Soviet Union and should be told their names. The famous "Brown Book" published by anti-fascists in 1933, after all, was the first important step in the exposure of the Nazi crimes of that era. Clearly, the publishers of newspapers, journals and books, and producers of electronic media, have an important role to play.

The stakes are high. If the monarcho-Nazis prevail and perestroika collapses in an orgy of chauvinism and racism, the results are likely to include not only a rapidly growing degree of anarchy in the Soviet Union but even the outbreak of civil war. In a country still laden with tremendous stockpiles of nuclear and chemical weapons, as well as a widespread network of nuclear power plants, such a chain of events could quickly become not just a national but an international catastrophe.

A CONGRESSIONAL SALUTE TO JOANNE HILL CRONIN IN HONOR OF HER SELECTION AS WOMAN OF THE YEAR

HON. GLENN M. ANDERSON

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, February 22, 1990

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Speaker, it is my pleasure to pay tribute to Joanne Hill Cronin who will be honored on February 23, 1990, as the California Pools for the Handicapped, Inc.'s, Woman of the Year. I would like to take this opportunity to express my personal appreciation for the years of dedication to cause that this award represents.

Joanne Hill Cronin has been an active and committed member of this community for nearly 60 years. After moving to Long Beach in 1933, Ms. Cronin attended St. Anthony Grammar School and High School and then did her college work at UCLA. On September 25, 1954, she married her husband Paul. From their loving relationship sprang two children, Paul Cronin and Kathleen Dyke, and now she has three grandchildren, Matthew, Anna, and David Cronin, to brighten her life.

Joanne has set new standards for community activism. There can be no doubt her standards of involvement are those we all should aspire to. She is deeply involved with St. Barnabas Catholic Church as president and member of the parish council, and has been a finance organizer of the parish festival for the past 12 years. A 19-year member of the St. Mary's Hospital Guild, she has held numerous board and committee positions, including the position of president. Joanne has also been a committee member of the St. Mary's Hospice Auction, chairing and overseeing its success. She is also a member of the Long Beach Civic Light Opera Diamond Terrace, member of the Women's Heart League, and member of the board of directors of The Shepard's Center. The list of her accomplishments and services to others seems never-ending.

My wife, Lee, joins me in extending our heartfelt congratulations to a kind, giving, and generous woman. An award like this only begins to speak of all we owe Joanne. Your efforts can never fully be rewarded, but I hope this award shows our community's deep appreciation. We wish you all the best in the years to come.

CONGRESSMAN FISH RESPONDS TO RELEASE OF NELSON MANDELA

HON. HAMILTON FISH, JR.

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, February 22, 1990

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, this past Saturday, February 17, 1990, I had the honor of speaking at the Vassar College Chapel in Poughkeepsie, NY, at the college's "Welcome Home Nelson Mandela" celebration. Also speaking on the occasion were Tebogo Mafole, Chief U.N. Representative of the African National Congress, and Patrick Lekota, publicity secretary of the United Democratic Front. At this point I would like to insert into the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD the text of my remarks:

REMARKS OF HON. HAMILTON FISH, JR.

I am honored to speak to you in one of the most remarkable periods of African and world history. I cannot begin to match the expertise of those present on South Africa and that of the faculty panel to follow and hope to learn from you today.

This week has left us all breathless. Events are moving so fast that what happens one day is old news the next. This time a week ago, Nelson Mandela remained where he had been for more than 27 years, in a prison cell. Today, he's a free man.

We hope history will record that last week's events signaled a new era for South Africa. There are promising signs in addition to Mandela's release—the recent lifting of the ban on all political parties and allowing some peaceful demonstrations.

Several political prisoners in addition to Mandela, including Walter Sisulu, have been freed, and although a modest step, South African beaches have been ordered to admit blacks.

What accounts for these dramatic changes? Several things. Withoug a doubt, the key factor has been the dedication, patience, and perseverance of the many South African black leaders, other anti-apartheid activists and ordinary citizens who have struggled over the years for equal rights.

It hasn't been easy. Many of these heroes and heroines have sufferd greatly for their cause and some, like Steven Biko, have given their lives in the hopes of creating a new South Africa.

No individual, however, has loomed as large as Nelson Mandela. As the principal force behind the free South Africa movement in the early 1960's and a prisoner of the very system he sought to abolish, Mandela, from his prison cell, has been an inspiration to those in the liberation campaign.

Even though he was shut off from the outside world for nearly 30 years, the black people of South Africa never lost sight of Mandela's vision of a nation in which black and white children could go to school together, where black could live where they want, and could aspire to all the dreams of men and women in free societies

His ideal can be summed up in his own words, taken from the speech he delivered at his sentencing more than 25 years ago and repeated in part last Sunday. He said:

"I have fought against white domination, and I have fought against black domination. I have cherished the ideal of a democratic and free society in which all persons live together in harmony and with equal opportunity. It is an ideal which I hope to live for and to achieve. But, if need be, it is an ideal for which I am perpared to die."

He should, and I hope will, play a key role in the development of a new democratic system that will include all races.

Another force behind the emerging freedoms in South Africa is the country's new President, F.W. de Klerk. He deserves credit for positive developments which can lead to negotiations.

The National Executive Committee of the A.N.C. calls these steps important in creating a climate conducive to negotiations, and evidenced a willingness to negotiate a suspension of hostilities by both sides.

Recent changes in the rest of the world help us understand why Pretoria has taken these steps. For one, there has been a decline in military adventurism by the Soviet Union. I understand Pretoria, in the past, has justified its repressive policies on this fear. Whereas, in reality, an indigenous uprising was more likely.

Also, the December 1988 Namibia-Angola agreement effectively ended the conflict there. Trade and investment opportunities are opening up in other African countries.

So, with the world picture looking brighter, South Africa can address its pressing needs at home.

Another reason for the recent changes is that many white South Africans, especially those in business, are fed up with apartheid. It's unprofitable. They are frustrated by the difficulties encountered in attracting loans and investments from firms reluctant to do business with their country. This disenchantment has been long in coming. It is what we hoped our sanctions would encourage.

We in Congress have stood with you in your cause over the years. Four years ago, I was an original Republican sponsor of the House-passed Anti-Apartheid Act of 1986. That law banned imports from South Africa, limited American exports and banned new American loans and investment in that country. In 1988 we passed a comprehensive ban on trade and investment.

The sanctions were more effective than even we in Congress expected. The law also proved to Pretoria that the United States meant business, that America, perhaps the most prominent symbol of liberty in the world, would not be for such injustice, for State-sponsored violence and suppression.

Pleased as we are with Mandela's release and other positive developments, we must remember that much remains to be done. For example, it is ironic that Mandela, the most revered figure in South Africa now and one of the most admired in the world, cannot vote because of his skin color. That must change.

The state of emergency, which allows police to detain people indefinitely, send troops into black townships and censor the press, must be lifted. And all, not just some, of the estimated 2,000 to 3,000 political prisoners should be released.

These are the demands Mandela articulated on his first day of freedom as conditions to negotiating a non-racial society, and they should be addressed promptly. To these the A.N.C. has added amnesty for exiles.

Furthermore, the Group Areas Act, which keeps blacks and whites apart, and the Population Registration Act—the two pillars of apartheid—are still law. So are the land acts, which reserve 87 percent of the country for whites, who make up just 14 percent of the population.

All of these laws, which form the backbone of apartheid, must be stricken from the books.

The Internal Security Act, still in place must not be used to prevent an atmosphere of political freedom.

The white government must negotiate with the A.N.C. and other black opposition groups to form a democratic, non-racial form of government in which all people may participate.

I pledge to you that I shall join like-minded colleagues in Congress to keep the heat on Pretoria until all these changes have been made and South Africa has been transformed into a truly democratic nation. At this time, I do not believe the economic sanctions we have imposed should be lifted. By law, relief is conditioned upon realizing many of the changes and actions called for by South African black leaders.

Unknown at this time is whether President F.W. de Klerk is going the distance. Will he be constrained by his constituency and the limits of his own thinking? We just don't know. We do know that the concept of group rights—the white veto—has not been addressed.

Ending apartheid will have a liberating effect, not just for blacks but for whites as well. Today we celebrate the beginning of that end—for surely that will happen, peacefully I pray but it will happen.

Welcome home Mandela.

IN HONOR OF WILLIE HALL

HON. JULIAN C. DIXON

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, February 22, 1990

Mr. DIXON. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in recognition of the career achievements of an individual whose extensive involvement with and service to the black and Asian communities of my district has facilitated the efforts of one corporation to become a positive force in the community. Last year, Willie D. Hall retired from a productive and beneficent professional career with the Seven-Up/Royal Crown Bottling Co. after 25 years of dedicated service to his company and to the community it serves.

Willie joined the Seven-Up/Royal Crown Bottling Co. as a driver salesman trainee in 1963 and has since advanced through numerous positions, including driver salesman, divisional supervisor, branch manager, special field service consultant, ethnic markets manager and community relations manager. In March 1988, Willie was promoted to director of community affairs at Seven-Up/Royal Crown, in which capacity he continued his focused involvement with the black and Asian communities.

Willie has served as president of the Los Angeles Chapter of the National Association of Market Developers [NAMD], the Crenshaw Chamber of Commerce, the Greater Crenshaw Revitalization Agency and the Crenshaw Citizen's Advisory Committee. He has also served on numerous boards and committees, among them: the board of the Crenshaw Y.M.C.A., the Western States Black Research Center, the Ruth More Service Volunteers, Avalon Carver Center Senior Companion Program, and the Chinatown Service Center. Willie is a member of the Hollenbeck Police and Businessmen Association, National Association of Market Developers [NAMD], the Urban League and the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People [NAACP], and was instrumental in founding the Crenshaw Merchants Association and the Santa Barbara Avenue Property Owners Association.

Born in Groveton, TX, Willie settled in the Los Angeles area in 1962. He studied electronics at the National Trade School of Los Angeles and marketing and photography at Harbor College in Harbor City. He also obtained several certificates from Biola College in Evangelical Teacher Training and attended Talbot Theological Seminary in its Master's Program. In addition to his various civic and corporate activities, Mr. Hall is currently an Associate Minister of Tabernacle Faith Baptist Church.

Throughout his career, Willie Hall demonstrated his dedication to the revitalization of the Crenshaw area and a genuine commitment to helping those community residents most in need. His involvement with civic and community groups encouraged the establishment and maintenance of minority owned businesses in my district, and his support of local charities and causes has been both visible and significant. As director of community affairs, Willie was point man in the Seven-Up/Royal Crown Bottling Co.'s effort to become "an integral part of the social fabric which makes up the community." Undoubtedly, Willie Hall's involvement with Seven Up's community outreach programs ensured the integrity of his company's civic commitment.

Thus, on the occasion of Seven-Up's Retirement Salute to Willie Hall, I ask you to please join me in congratulating Mr. Hall on his long list of achievements and noteworthy contributions, and in extending to Willie, his wife Johnnie Mae, their four children and three grandchildren best wishes for continued good health and happiness in the years ahead.

THE BUTTER COMPETITIVENESS ACT OF 1990

HON. JIM MOODY

OF WISCONSIN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, February 22, 1990

Mr. MOODY. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to introduce the Butter Competitiveness Act of 1990, legislation that allows for the creation of a new dairy product, reduced fat butter—a pure dairy alternative to margarine. This bill is intended to help the dairy industry move competitively into the 1990's by allowing greater responsiveness to consumer demand and market trends.

While health-conscious consumers have been shying away from high-fat foods, many dairy products—some of the Nation's purest and most natural foods—have been unfairly left in the lurch. Butter in particular has been held hostage to a 1923 statute that defined "butter" as containing not less than 80 percent butterfat by weight.

My bill will retain that statutory definition of butter, but will also permit a dairy product called reduced fat butter. This new reduced fat butter would have to be 52 percent butterfat by weight to be produced and sold.

Over the years Americans have become more and more aware of the health consequences of the food we eat. We have seen the introduction and rising consumption of lower fat frozen yogurts, high fiber breads, diet and caffeine-free sodas, low-sodium products, reduced fat and cholesterol mayonnaise and salad dressings, and so on. Consumption of these products has risen dramatically as people are responding to recommendations by doctors and nutritionists that a lower fat diet can help to reduce the risks of heart disease and contribute to all around better health.

Patients with high cholesterol rates and/or high blood pressure are often told to switch from whole or 2 percent milk to skim milk, to lower their salt intake, and to switch from butter to margarine or some type of vegetable oil spread flavored with buttermilk. Consumers have not had the option of switching to a lower fat butter, a pure dairy alternative to oil-based margarines and spreads.

This bill will accomplish several things at once:

It will give consumers across the Nation a choice to opt for a reduced fat dairy product instead of nondairy margarines or spreads. Our message to margarine users will be "come home to butter."

Dairy farmers will benefit because the increased demand for butterfat that this may generate is expected to lower CCC purchases of butterfat. Butter is currently the only dairy product in large surplus, so much so that last year's CCC purchases of butter caused the support price for milk to be lowered 50 cents this past January 1. A reduced fat butter could thus stem the decrease in the support price for milk by lowering CCC purchases of surplus butterfat; more butterfat will be used up commercially by the expanding butter market created by this lower fat alternative.

It will benefit dairy manufacturers by increasing their market share. Over the years increased consumption of margarine and other nondairy spreads has unfairly hit the dairy industry. This bill is intended to help butter manufacturers aggressively pursue a bigger share of the national market for butter and spreads because there will now be a real dairy alternative to compete with oil-based margarines and spreads.

This bill is a starting point. In my discussions with consumer groups, dairy farmers, and industry representatives, some have expressed a strong preference for this new butter to be called light butter, while others have recommended reduced fat. Strong arguments can be made for both sides, but I have chosen reduced fat for introduction purposes. I want to open the discussion on this issue and get the ball moving. Input from the dairy industry, farmers, and consumers toward resolving this and arriving at a mutually acceptable term is very much welcome.

The bottom line of my bill is twofold: I want to protect the integrity of butter as a pure dairy product while at the same time giving the dairy industry the chance to respond to consumer demands for lower fat foods.

Mr. Speaker, I hope my colleagues will join me and original cosponsors STEVE GUNDERSON, BOB KASTENMEIER, DAVE OBEY, MATTHEW MARTINEZ, GERRY KLECZKA, TOBY ROTH, THOMAS PETRI, JIM SENSENBRENNER, and LEW ASPIN in cosponsoring this important legislation that will benefit both the dairy industry and health-conscious consumer demand.

TAX DOLLARS DID FUND ANNIE SPRINKLE

HON. DANA ROHRABACHER

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, February 22, 1990

Mr. ROHRABACHER. Mr. Speaker, it appears that Annie Sprinkle, the Kitchen Theatre, and the New York State Council on the Arts have changed their tune.

But don't be fooled—the Annie Sprinkle show did receive Government money—not once but twice.

First, the Kitchen Theatre in New York City, which hosted 12 performances by Annie Sprinkle, received $60,000 directly from the National Endowment for the Arts for operating expenses.

Second, the New York State Council on the Arts, which receives $500,000 in unrestricted funds from the NEA every year, funded a performing art series at the Kitchen Theatre which included Annie Sprinkle.

The Kitchen Theatre applied for $30,000 from the NYSCA to produce 36 shows in the series. The Kitchen's grant application to the NYSCA describes Sprinkle as a feminist postporn modernist who "* * * uses her experiences within the pornography industry to comment upon gender roles and sexual identity in contemporary society." The NYSCA disbursed a partial grant of $25,000, 32 performances worth, but did not stipulate which shows were excluded from funding.

Here is what the key players initially had to say about the Annie Sprinkle show:

On stage during performance, Annie Sprinkle announced, "Usually I get paid a lot of money for this, but tonight it's government funded."

On January 21, 1990, Bobby Tsumagari, executive director of the Kitchen Theatre in New York, confirmed Ms. Sprinkle's claim. "What NYSCA looks for from the Kitchen is a kind of risk taking, experimental programming and that is predominately what they fund us for," Tsumagari said. She added that a list of programming was submitted to the NYCSA "which did in fact represent what we were doing this year. They could have easily chosen not to fund these 12 productions."

A few days later Tsumagari said, "One interpretation is because of the way that contracting works with the NYSCA, there is no State council funding, as they are only funding 32 of our 54 performances. Another interpretation is that a list of programming was submitted to them which did in fact clearly represent what we were doing this year." But, because the council did not specifically tell the Kitchen which four performances it was not funding, Tsumagari added, "it really is a matter of how one wants to interpret the facts."

On January 21, NYSCA spokesman Tim Mulligan confirmed that the council gave $25,000 to the Kitchen for a "performance art series" that included 12 performances of Annie Sprinkle. A few days later he added, "You can't say one way or another" if 4 performances of Sprinkle were part of the 32 which the council eventually approved.

The chairman of the NEA, on February 2, 1990, when asked about the Ms. Sprinkle show, said, "The point is, we are not the moral arbiter of this country. We're not going to run around and respond just because something happened somewhere that someone didn't like."

Two weeks after the story broke and after the public expressed its opinion of Government funds going to Annie Sprinkle, people began to change their stories.

On February 7, the Kitchen claimed that it "did not utilize funds from the NYSCA to present these performances." The NYSCA chairman said "we specifically limited our funding because the council felt the Annie Sprinkle presentation was not of artistic quality to warrant council support." Nevertheless, despite their denials, the NYSCA has yet to produce any evidence that they excluded Annie Sprinkle from their grant or that they informed the Kitchen prior to the Annie Sprinkle performances that they were not to use their grant for that purpose. In fact, it's now clear that the NYSCA kept any misgivings they may have had about Ms. Sprinkle to themselves. As Mr. Mulligan explained in a recent Village Voice article, "The council didn't want to fund Annie Sprinkle but we didn't say it because that gets into censorship."

Make no mistake about it, the NEA, the NYSCA and the Kitchen are playing a shell game with taxpayer dollars. The NEA gives more than $500,000 to the NYSCA which, in turn, gave $25,000 to the Kitchen and Annie Sprinkle. Tracing the report from its source to its ultimate destination—no matter how the NEA tries to hide behind front groups—Federal dollars are going to XXX-rated pornography. Mr. Speaker, this must cease. Later this session, I will offer an amendment to the Interior Appropriations bill to end Government funding for the National Endowment for the Arts. I urge my colleagues to support my amendment. I also ask that my colleagues take a moment and read the following editorial which appeared in the Washington Times. Furthermore, I would like to place in the RECORD articles from the New York City Tribune, which broke the Annie Sprinkle story, along with their editorial on the subject.

PUBLIC FUNDING OF EROTIC SHOW STIRS NEW FUROR, ART VS. SMUT DEBATE

(By Walter Skold)

A new fight in the battle surrounding public funding of controversial art has erupted over a show in Manhattan that is called avant-garde by defenders but labeled pornographic by its critics.

Critics feel that the show, Annie Sprinkle: Post-Porn Modernist, may actually be in violation of state and federal anti-obscenity laws and think that Manhattan District Attorney Robert Morgenthau should launch an investigation.

The show, which contains very explicit sexual acts and images, was performed 12 times over the last 2 weeks at The Kitchen, a theater at 512 W. 19th St. in the Chelsea section of Manhattan. The show was part of a 32-performance series funded by a $25,000 grant from the New York State Council on the Arts (NYSCA).

Last night was the final performance of Annie. A new show will replace it, continuing the state-funded series.

Annie's main writer and only actor is Annie Sprinkle, a self-proclaimed "feminist-porn activist" who has previously appeared in more than 150 X-rated films, according to a press release put out by The Kitchen. She now says that: "porn is dead" and calls herself an artist who performs "post-porn modernism."

Her critics say that if what she did is considered art, it is "obscene" art that should not have been funded at taxpayers' expense.

As part of her performance last Thursday evening, Sprinkle did the following:

Masturbated with various "sex toys" until she supposedly experienced orgasms.

Invoked the spirits of "ancient, sacred, temple prostitutes" into the theater.

Performed oral sex on rubber penises (dildoes) and invited the audience to massage her breasts and photograph her scantily clad body.

To conclude her performance, she opened her vaginal canal with a gynecological tool known as a speculum and invited the audience to the stage to inspect her cervix.

After the show, some 50 men and women paid $5 apiece to have a picture taken with Sprinkle's large breasts resting atop their heads.

Efforts to find out who at NYSCA approved the funding for Annie and whether those involved in the decision were aware of the show's controversial content were unsuccessful.

$25,000 PROVIDED

Tim Mulligan, a spokesman for NYSCA, said that top council officials were not in the office Friday to make any comments. He did confirm that the council gave $25,000 to The Kitchen for a "performance art series" that included the 12 performances of Annie.

Mulligan said he was unsure exactly how much of the $25,000 went specifically to fund Annie.

"How somebody in a decision-making position from the state could say, 'Oh boy, let's go with that,' is beyond me," said Joseph Riley head of Morality in Media (MIM).

"You know, Gov. Cuomo is talking about no possibilities to bring the budget down further," said Riley, "but it it seems to me that this could be one of the first things to go."

This latest controversy comes in the wake of numerous political and cultural controversies last year which eventually led to the passage of a congressional amendment prohibiting the National Endowment for the Arts (NEA) from funding "obscene art."

The issue exploded when the New York City Tribune reported last year that artist Andres Serrano had received NEA funding for his Piss Christ, a photo of a crucifix in a jar of urine.

Shortly afterward, photographer Robert Mapplethorpe stirred debate over an NEA-funded exhibit built around homo-erotic pictures that were considered obscene by critics both in and out of Congress.

The incidents and the ensuing legislation have sparked a heated debate within both the political and artistic communities as to what the proper relationship between the artist and the state should be.

Sprinkle herself made reference to these events during her performance last Thursday.

At one point, after purportedly inducing the first orgasm with her favorite "sex toys," she smiled and said to the audience. "Usually I get paid a lot of money for this, but tonight it's government funded."

Most of the 200 men and women in the audience roared with laughter, but others failed to see the humor.

"That an indictment could be gained from a grand jury, I have no doubt," Riley said, "and what would happen at a trial is a very good question."

Riley, whose group fights obscenity nationwide, said that Morgenthau should consider investigating the performance for possible violations of the state's anti-obscenity laws.

"It is ironic that, at a time of supposed frugality, the state is funding what is arguably an obscene performance by someone who admittedly has appeared in 150 porn films."

"It's also ironic that Mr. Morgenthau was sworn in again, yet this sort of thing goes on under his jurisdiction, when to the best of my knowledge he has not sought an obscenity indictment in about a decade."

"Look we have an $8-billion porn industry which is controlled by organized crime, according to the California Department of Justice," complained Page Mellish, president of Feminists Fighting Pornography (FFP).

"Why is tax money being used to present this pornography?" she asked.

Bobbi Tsumagari, The Kitchen's executive director, told the New York City Tribune that critics should not castigate the show without having seen it first. She fears that a "simple, verbal description" of certain parts of the show, without seeing it performed in context, could indeed make Annie sound like pornography.

Riley and Mellish did not see the risque show, but they made their comments based on the descriptions of others and a review in the latest edition of Screw magazine.

The Screw review said, "Sprinkle has always inhabited the extreme edges of the sexual underworld . . . to exploit the revolutionary, or at least irreverent, aspects of pornography."

"The piece itself is not pornographic," said Tsumagari, "but it does question, as much as contemporary art does, what is appropriate material for artists, and what is a public and a private act."

She also said it "comments on the sex industry in a very stringent way, from a first-hand point of view."

Tsumagari may have been referring to one scene that graphically and gruesomely depicted the violence and abuse often associated with pornography. At the beginning of the skit, called "100 Blow Jobs," Sprinkle becomes very angry and despondent, and admits she "met a lot of rotten people" in her career.

Then, with a background of the loud voices of demanding men shouting curses and insults at her, she proceeds to give frantic oral sex to various dildoes, which represent abusive sex partners.

"Sprinkle can claim that it's art," said Mellish, "but you can go to 42nd Street right now, and put a couple of bucks in a machine, and have the same interaction with a woman.

"Now, I don't know if those women claim [what they are doing] is art, but very few people would claim that it is not pornography," she said.

"What she is doing is no different than what is inside Playboy, Penthouse and in booths on 42nd Street," added Mellish.

Screw magazine said, "By casting her act in the form of a Tony 'performance piece,' Annie snares all the artsy nabobs who might otherwise turn up their noses at a six-shows-a-night Show World stand."

Show World is a pornographic theater in Manhattan that has movies, private booths and live-sex acts. Sprinkle herself first developed and performed some of her skits in burlesques, strip joints and in live-sex theaters.

"Some avante-garde people may consider this art, but a jury may not agree," said Robert Peters, an attorney with MIM.

He said that most people are not aware of the state's obscenity laws, a situation he blamed on a "very successful public relations campaign by the American Civil Liberties Union [ACLU]."

"The ACLU always talks about the First Amendment," said Peters, "but the fact is, the First Amendment does not protect" pornography if jurors judge it to be obscene.

MORGENTHAU CRITICIZED

Peters also criticized Morgenthau for not enforcing New York's obscenity laws against the state's booming pornography industry. He thinks convictions can be obtained if "enough political pressure is brought to bear" on the district attorney, but he said many people are tired of complaining because "they get no response."

Tsumagari disagrees with critics who say the show is obscene. "This show encourages you to think about something that you think you know about," she said, "and makes you see the issue of pornography in a new light.

"Frankly, real pornography doesn't do that, which is one of its pernicious influences," she said.

A "Post-Porn Modernist Manifesto," which is printed in the show's program and is signed by more than 20 people, describes the philosophy of such modernists who "celebrate sex as the nourishing, life-giving force."

It states, "We embrace our genitals as part, not separate, from our spirits," and adds, "We utilize sexually explicit words, pictures and performances to communicate our ideas and emotions."

The signers also "denounce sexual censorship as anti-art and inhuman."

The widespread disagreement over Annie seems to illustrate the clash between personal philosophies and public opinions that often occurs when people try to draw the line between "art," "pornography" and "obscenity."

The state obscenity law at one point describes obscenity as "patently offensive" descriptions of sexual acts like sodomy, masturbation, sadism, excretion or the rude exhibition of the genitals.

It also stipulates that material or performances judged to be obscene must, as a whole, lack "serious literary, artistic, political and scientific appeal."

Annie does contain masturbation, excretion and the displaying of genitals, but its defenders say it cannot be considered legally obscene because the show is primarily artistic in content and form.

"The current legislation [initiated by Sen. Jesse Helms, R-N.C.] uses a definition of obscenity which used the phrase 'without artistic merit,'" pointed out Tsumagari, "but this show, in our estimation, has a lot of artistic merit."

Steve Cain, a talk show host on WABC-AM radio, saw the show with his wife, and found it to be "enjoyable," not objectionable.

"It was artistic, enjoyable and provocative, but not pornographic," said Cain, who said he felt the show's main message to be "that society is too hung up about sex."

Mellish said her group won't "get into what is and isn't art," and Riley asked, "Is this art or garbage?"

Regarding a clear-cut, definitive answer, he said, "It's very hard to say."

Still, he and Peters said that Albany legislators should consider whether the funding of the show was a violation of the new federal regulations regarding the NEA.

The state council receives large grants from the NEA every year. Under the new regulations, the federal arts agency is not allowed to fund "obscene" material directly or indirectly.

"Obviously, I'm very much concerned about the move to restrict the NEA from using its best resources to evaluate the merits of programs," said Tsumagari. "And that is essentially what the Helms legislation is about."

She said the legislation "is not really about people stopping shows, its about people trying to prevent public funds from going to these shows, which is a different issue."

"These are the very same principles which were involved in the Mapplethorpe controversy," agreed Cain, who said the state should attempt to develop criteria for funding art "based on what is credible."

"If the state is going to fund the arts," said Cain, "it should not be able to censor the content, but should give to legitimate artists equally."

Many observers, however, have said that it is probably impossible, and maybe not even appropriate, for the state to decide just what is "legitimate" art.

The Kitchen has a tradition of presenting works that "test certain boundaries of art forms and of public acceptability," said Tsumagari, "and let's face it, that stage of public acceptability changes."

She said that what NYSCA "looks for from The Kitchen is a kind of risk-taking, experimental programming, and that is predominantly what they fund us for."

Tsumagari said a list of programming was submitted to NYSCA. "We did in fact represent what we were doing this year."

"They could easily have chosen not to fund these 12 productions" of Annie Sprinkle, she said.

She adamantly defended the grant however, saying, "You need to look at all the programming here, not just our show, so you can filter it into a balance across the board."

Mulligan was able to tell the City Tribune what the Kitchen application said about the show in question.

It described Sprinkle as a "self-described feminist post-porn modernist who "uses her experiences within the pornography industry to comment upon gender roles and sexual identity in a contemporary society."

"Her work is particularly concerned with developing physical and psychological states of health and well-being and in some of the oppressive qualities of everyday life, as well as the AIDS epidemic."

Sprinkle was not available for an interview, but the show's press release program and previous interviews give an idea of how she sees herself and her work.

A Kitchen theater release said, "The work charts writer/performer Annie Sprinkle's personal odyssey through the worlds of art and ideology, commerce and pornography, a journey which leads her to alternative models of sexual health and well-being."

FAST-PACED AND WITTY

The show's program says Sprinkle "has constructed a fast-paced and witty show which draws on her own experience as a sex researcher who has explored her own and society's sexuality in depth through work in pornography and prostitution."

It also describes Sprinkle as someone who "understands sex as her hobby, politics, spiritual discipline, expertise, main source of income, only subject matter, foremost topic of thought and conversation and the key to her great health and happiness."

During the performance, Sprinkle said her sexual obsessions are "new age" spirituality, and likened her art to ancient sacred prostitutes and Taoist masters who could lengthen their orgasms. She also prayed with the audience to invoke the spirits of past sex goddesses.

"I like to evoke spirits," she told the crowd, "they love having sex."

At one point, she mounted an altar of candles and lit them in honor of former friends and lovers who had died from AIDS. She then prayed to their spirits, lit incense, and, with the audience chanting along and applauding, induced an orgasm with a vibrator.

That skit was called "Sex Heals," and in an interview with New York Native last year, Sprinkle called such techniques "ecstatic mind altering masturbation rituals."

Riley agreed that there are similarities between ancient sexual/religious rituals and what is presently considered pornography. "But," he said "For her to talk today in that same kind of reference, is the same kind of con that Al Goldstein uses in claiming first amendment protections for what he does."

Goldstein publishes the pornographic magazine Screw and produces the cable show "Midnight Blue," which Sprinkle has often appeared on.

"What we have here is a uni-sex P.T. Barnum," said Riley. "Barnum said there is a sucker born every minute, only in this case it is almost literal."

Goldstein and Riley have clashed for years over pornography and have both become national symbols for those who either want to enforce or abolish state and federal laws restricting obscenity.

DISPUTE GROWS OVER WHETHER NEW YORK FUNDED SEX SHOW IN CHELSEA THEATER

(By Walter Skold)

A controversial performance by a famous pornography star who participated in a series of state-funded performances has lawmakers and artists arguing again about government and corporate funding of "obscene art."

Based on interviews with officials at the New York State Council on the Arts (NYSCA), and with the director of the Kitchen theater in Manhattan's Chelsea section, where the shows were performed, the New York City Tribune reported last week that public funds made possible a show that some critics called "patently obscene."

Now NYSCA denies having funded the performances of Annie Sprinkle: Post-Porn Modernist. The Council this week released a statement calling the show "not of an artistic quality." However, officials said internal records that could prove exactly what they did or did not fund are not available to the public.

Critics say NYSCA is playing a "shell game" and maintain that Sprinkle was in fact funded, because the state was the major funding source for the series in which the show appeared.

The show featured graphic and explicit sexual scenes that included masturbation, oral sex, urination, orgasmic ritual dances and the inspection of Sprinkle's vagina by some members of the audience.

Assemblyman Joseph Pillittere (D-Niagara), the chairman of the Assembly's Tourism, Sports, and Art Committee, was shocked at the content of Sprinkle's performance and said that "based on what she did in her last performance, I would not want the state to fund anything that she is involved with" in the future.

He called NYSCA's funding of the series a mistake but said the nature of the agency's funding procedures make it possible for such things to happen occasionally.

He said the funding of such events "is almost impossible to control unless you have total censorship and demand that everyone who gets state money has to predetermine what their exact performance is going to be."

Presently, contracts and applications between NYSCA and institutions are so vague, critics say, that the facts of just what the Council is and is not funding is often a matter of interpretation.

In a statement sent to the Tribune, NYSCA Chairperson Kitty Carlisle Hart said that "council contracts are drawn in broad terms for a simple reason: to avoid the slightest hint of censorship."

But critics say the cry of censorship is a smokescreen for the fact that public funds are used to sponsor art production series that include objectionable material.

"The bottom line is that if taxpayers' dollars were taken out of the formula, the show would not have been funded," said an angry Dana Rohrabacher, a congressman from California who has been extremely critical of the National Endowment for the Arts (NEA).

"The fact that artists are able to get their hands on tax dollars and use it to fund obscene and sexually graphic presentations," said Rohrabacher, "suggests there is something pretty wrong with the system."

The circumstances surrounding the performance of Sprinkle at the Kitchen seem to provide a good example of just how the sometimes complicated funding process works.

The Kitchen originally applied to the state for $30,000 to produce 36 shows in its performance art series. NYSCA only gave the Kitchen $25,000 to put on 32 performances, but it did not stipulate just which shows it was not funding.

The original application from the Kitchen included 4 performances of Sprinkle, but the show was actually performed 12 times. This happened because the Kitchen, as is often the case with theaters, added 22 more performances to its schedule after the application was submitted.

Barbara Tsumagari, the executive director of the Kitchen, said when first contacted that "one interpretation is, that because of the way that contracting works with NYSCA, there is no state council funding as they are only funding 32 of our 54 performances."

"Another interpretation is that a list of programming was submitted to them which did in fact clearly represent what we were doing this year," added Tsumagari.

But because the Council did not specifically tell the Kitchen which four performances it was not funding, she said "it really is a matter of how one wants to interpret" the facts.

When first contacted, Jim Mulligan, a NYSCA spokesman, said "you can't say one way or the other" if the 4 performances of Sprinkle were part of the 32 which the Council eventually approved.

Neither Hart nor NYSCA director, Mary Hays, were in the office when Mulligan first spoke with the Tribune however, and after the first story was published, NYSCA then said that the Sprinkle performances had in fact been turned down.

Part of the reason for the confusion is because nowhere on the approved contract with the Kitchen does it specify that the four controversial performances were being denied funding. This decision was an internal one made by the panel of artists who make recommendations on funding requests.

Still, the Council will not release these internal records because they say the decisions are meant to be confidential to protect the panelists.

"As a corollary," to not telling recipients just which shows are being denied, said Hart, "we believe that a reduced amount from requested funding is a very clear comment to the agency involved that, while much of their effort is worthy of public funding, some clearly is not."

She reiterated that "We wish to avoid the slightest appearance of censoring any artist," and claimed that "over the years, the State legislature, in every examination and reexamination of our funding process, has strongly supported this viewpoint."

While Pillittere is upset over the Sprinkle performance, he is sympathetic with the Council. He said he has talked about this funding problem with Hart and Hays and agreed that "it is almost impossible to control every aspect of the total fiscal budget."

He said the Council has a good overall record and that the Council record is good and that "Out of the total budget, this is one of the few of this type of performances that the state has been involved in" that is objectionable.

But John Mashburn, a legislative aide for Senator Jesse Helms, said that is "like saying the Exxon Valdez is only one of a thousand ships that wrecked."

Mashburn said "People are being fast and loose with just who is funding who," and added that many governmental art agencies "know who they give it too, but they don't necessarily know what the entity does with it once they get the funds."

"We are not saying that they can't do it," said Mashburn. "They can call it whatever they want to, but don't tax the American public is what we're saying."

WHO PAID ANNIE SPRINKLE TO DO THOSE DIRTY THINGS?

Did the National Endowment for the Arts (NEA) and the New York State Council for the Arts (NYSCA) fund a public show in which porn star Annie Sprinkle masturbated with a variety of sex toys and invited the audience to examine her vagina with a flashlight? Or were we wrong?

On January 22 the New York City Tribune reported that the Council gave a $25,000 grant to The Kitchen theater for a series of performances that included a show called Annie Sprinkle: Post-Porn Modernist. In his original story, City Tribune reporter Walter Skold quotes a spokesman for the state council, the director of The Kitchen and Spinkle herself as saying that the performances were funded by the NYSCA. The council, we noted, is funded by the NEA.

Now, in the wake of a blistering attack from Congressman Dana Rohrabacher, R-Ca., the NEA, the NYSCA and The Kitchen all say in published interviews that we got the story wrong. It's amazing how a little heat from the right person can jog one's memory.

The NYSCA says it never intended to fund the Sprinkle performances because they were deemed to be lacking in artistic merit. And the spokesman said he was mistaken when he originally spoke to our reporter. However, for more than two weeks the council has refused to provide us with documentation that could easily validate this claim. Surely, if the council reviewed the application from The Kitchen and decided not to fund Sprinkle, there must be some letter to that effect.

Is the NYSCA stonewalling us? If no letter exists then how was The Kitchen to know that the $25,000 shouldn't go to Sprinkle? The more likely scenario is that the council is in the habit of pouring tax dollars down a black hole.

Sprinkle says she was only kidding when she interrupted an orgasm to thank the government for funding her show.

The program for Sprinkle's show lists the NYSCA as a funder as well as a number of non-profit organizations that probably thought they were helping some kind of legitimate theatrical performance.

The NEA says based on press accounts, it would not have funded the Sprinkle show although it admits to giving $60,000 directly to The Kitchen for operational expenses. Their position seems to be it's not the NEA's problem if the theater happens to put on live sex shows.

In a letter to NEA Chairman John Frohnmayer, Rohrabacher, correctly notes, "No other government agency would have the gall to hold itself unaccountable for the ultimate destination of the tax dollars it disburses."

Most Americans would be shocked to know their tax dollars are wasted on the kind of pornographic anti-religious trash consistently funded by the State Council for the Arts and the NEA. The refusal of the agencies to take responsibility for their remarkably bad judgment is distressing.

These agencies have become the Exxon Valdez of American culture. They were created for good purpose, but, oh my, what pollution they have caused.

[From the Washington Times, Feb. 12, 1990]

THE WELL-ENDOWED MS. SPRINKLE

The Greek philosopher Diogenes used a lantern in his unavailing search for an honest man. Porn artiste and ex-prostitute Annie Sprinkle uses a flashlight, and the taxpayers have to shell out for it.

Actually, it's not clear whether the flashlight that serves to inspect the interior regions of Ms. Sprinkle's anatomy is funded by the American taxpayer, but parts of her bizarre stage act may be. Several newspapers in the last week have documented the passage of public money from the taxpayers through the National Endowment for the Arts to the New York State Council on the Arts to The Kitchen, one of Manhattan's steamier nocturnal haunts, where performs the incomparable Ms. Sprinkle.

What Ms. Sprinkle does on your nickel makes the homoerotic and excretory concoctions of Robert Mapplethorpe and Andres Serrano look like finger painting by the Mouseketeers. Her act includes masturbation on stage, urinating in a toilet and asking members of her audience if they'd like to peer up her nether body openings by means of the flashlight. Whatever spectators find when they accept her invitation, it's probably not an honest man.

Barbara Tsumagari, executive director of The Kitchen, denies that Ms. Sprinkle's contributions to the lively arts are financed by the NEA. She says the 12 shows Ms. Sprinkle is putting on are only part of a series of 54 performances, and taxpayers had to swallow the tab for a mere 32 of them. But the publicly funded New York State Council on the Arts spewed up $25,000 for the series and receives $500,000 annually from the NEA. The Kitchen's share of the NEA booty is $60,000 for operating expenses. Ms. Sprinkle herself, during her performance, says, "Usually I get paid a lot of money for this, but tonight it's government funded."

Meanwhile, The New York Post, The New York City Tribune and other papers have disrobed several other well-veiled instances of weird funding by the NEA: A San Francisco gallery that offers a video on "genital openings"; an excursion into "woundings and cuttings by women as a healthy response to a sick society"; and $20,000 to three lesbian writers "known for the homoerotic content in some of their works," according to The Washington Blade. Then there's Ms. Sprinkle's fellow aesthete, Johanna Went, whose performances with excrement, menstrual products and male genitals transcend the imagination of even Ms. Sprinkle and were partly funded by the NEA and the NYSCA in the 1980s.

Critics of the NEA like Sen. Jesse Helms and Rep. Dana Rohrabacher are properly volcanic over the agency's apparent inability to refrain from funding human waste products. Last year, when the Mapplethorpe and Serrano controversies broke, these and few other lawmakers proposed drastic remedies, but their colleagues overrode them with more modest measures. As a result, we find ourselves still encumbered with the likes of Ms. Sprinkle, Ms. Went and other "post-porn modernists" as these fraudulent weirdos bill themselves.

Not too long ago the whole lot of them would have been locked up by the vice squad or scooped up by the garbage trucks. Today literati and legislators solemnly pronounce them to be heralds in the vanguard of beauty, rush to champion their rights of free expression and ladle up largesse so they can indulge their tiny imaginations in comfort.

The moral here ought to be clear. Federal art almost always will be bad, small-minded stuff, and the Annie Sprinkles will always find ways to get their hands on the federal loot. Everyone hereabouts knows this political fact, but few will confess the awful truth. You can use a lantern or a flashlight, but when you peer into the bellies of Congress or the NEA, you won't find many more honest men than Diogenes did.

TRIBUTE TO U.S. CUSTOMS SERVICE AGENT TIMOTHY C. McCAGHREN

HON. RONALD D. COLEMAN

OF TEXAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, February 22, 1990

Mr. COLEMAN of Texas. Mr. Speaker, it is with sadness and a heavy heart that I rise to pay tribute to America's latest casualty in the war on drugs, U.S. Customs Service agent, Timothy C. McCaghren.

Agent McCaghren was killed in a suspected drug-related incident near El Paso, TX, at the Zaragosa Bridge Border Station. He had stopped a van and was questioning the driver when the vehicle accelerated, dragging him along the ground and mortally injuring him.

The story of Agent McCaghren brings home the reality of the war on drugs. Beyond all the news conferences, press releases, and promises, it always comes down to the brave, dedicated men and women on the frontlines of the war on drugs. It is ironic, Mr. Speaker, that every year the administration tells the Congress that customs inspectors are not law enforcement officials, and indeed, attempts to cut the Customs Service. But it should not take tragic events such as this one to demonstrate how dangerous a Customs Service agent job can be—not to mention the extent of these agents' dedication to their duty.

If anything positive comes out of this tragedy, I hope it jars the attention of Washington to the needs of the men and women on the frontlines of the war on drugs. They are real people with real considerations and concerns. They do their jobs 24-hours a day, serving this Nation and its people. They deserve more support from us. We should take this opportunity to reflect upon the role of border law enforcement agents such as those of the U.S. Customs Service and what they mean to our communities and our future.

We should also take a moment to pray for the family of Agent McCaghren. The U.S. Congress and indeed, the entire Nation will never forget his ultimate sacrifice for his country, just as we will never forget another fallen hero, Kika Camarena of the Drug Enforcement Administration. When you see the flags flying at half-mast around El Paso, it means more than sadness, more than compassion, more than condolences; it means pride, too; the people of the 16th Congressional District of Texas are proud of Agent McCaghren and what he stands for.

But let us now take steps to ensure that his death is not in vain. Let us redouble our efforts at all levels in the war against drugs. Let us push forward with education and preventative measures to keep future generations of young people from becoming involved in the scourge of narcotics. And let us never, never forget the courageous and stirring example of U.S. Customs agent, Timothy C. McCaghren, a man who gave his life in the service of his country.

HONORING DR. LARRY GENTILELLO AND DR. BARRY FISHER

HON. JAMES H. BILBRAY

OF NEVADA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, February 22, 1990

Mr. BILBRAY. Mr. Speaker, it gives me great pleasure to rise before this esteemed body today and recognize the work of Dr. Larry Gentilello, a trauma surgeon and professor with the University of Nevada's School of Medicine, and Dr. Barry Fisher, chief of surgery at University Medical Center at Las Vegas, NV. Together they have developed a blood-warming therapy that recently saved one Las Vegan's life and promises to redefine modern medical procedure.

On January 17, 1990, Murray Brown, a 26-year-old ceramic tile setter was driving his Jeep in Las Vegas when it plunged into a draining channel during a torrential rainstorm. Submerged in freezing flood water for 30 minutes, Mr. Brown's body temperature had dropped to a low 85 degrees. The blood-warming technique pioneered by Drs. Gentilello and Fisher saved him from acute hypothermia. By heating his blood with the continuous arterial-veinous rewarmer, the physicians were able to quickly raise his body temperature.

Until now the patient had to be warmed from the outside, putting tremendous strain on the heart and body. With this medical breakthrough the blood itself slowly rewarms the organs, reducing the risk of acetic buildup which can damage vital organs. Without the blood-warming machine, Mr. Brown would have had no chance of surviving. He is the first human the machine has ever been used on and, I am pleased to announce, is making a remarkable recovery.

Mr. Speaker, I thank my colleagues for this opportunity to commend the work of Dr. Larry Gentilello and Dr. Barry Fisher in the permanent record of this body. It is both an honor and a privilege.

CELEBRATING AMERICAN CHOCOLATE WEEK

HON. ROBERT S. WALKER

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, February 22, 1990

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Speaker, Pennsylvania, I am proud to say, manufactures more chocolate than any other State in the Union. In my own District, the 16th, Lititz, PA is the home of Wilbur Chocolate Co. M&M/Mars has a large chocolate facility in Elizabethtown. Other Pennsylvania chocolate companies are Hershey Foods Corp., including Luden's Inc., and H.B. Reese Co.; Whitmans Inc.; the Blommer Chocolate Company; Leaf, Inc.; Cherrydale Farm, Inc.; Goldenberg Candy Co.; R.M. Palmer Co.; and Pennsylvania Dutch Co.

The week of March 12–17 is the first annual American Chocolate Week. This week did not require a costly congressional resolution. Rather, it grew out of the honest sentiment of chocolate lovers nationwide. Chocolate makers in Pennsylvania will join with chocolate lovers throughout the U.S. to celebrate what an October 1989 Gallup poll discovered is America's favorite flavor.

As ranking member of the House Science, Space, and Technology Committee, I'm pleased to report that chocolate has been included in the menus of all American and Russian space flights because it's a morale booster, as well as a source of nutrients.

In Pennsylvania we truly believe that the quality of American chocolate products equals or surpasses that of any other country's products. I'm pleased to join in the celebration of American Chocolate Week.

MENTAL ILLNESS AWARENESS WEEK

HON. RON WYDEN

OF OREGON

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, February 22, 1990

Mr. WYDEN. Mr. Speaker, today I am introducing, with the support of over 70 of my colleagues, a joint resolution to authorize the President to designate the week of October 7–13, 1990 as "Mental Illness Awareness Week".

Mental illness is a problem of staggering proportions. One in five American families will be affected by serious mental illness. Mental illness all social levels and all ethnic groups in equal proportion.

According to the American Psychiatric Association, 15 to 25 percent of the elderly suffer from significant symptoms of mental illness. In addition, approximately 12 million children under the age of 18 suffer from mental disorders such as depression, hyperactivity, and autism. About 15 percent of Americans will suffer a major depressive episode. One-third of the homeless on our streets are victims of mental illness.

But many people with mental illness are suffering needlessly. Many mental disorders are diagnosable, treatable, and even curable. But fewer than one-fifth of those who have mental disorders seek or receive the treatment they need. Many do not even realize that they have an illness can be effectively treated.

Nine out of 10 patients suffering from major depression or anxiety can recover; 7 of 10 suffering from manic depression can return to normal lives; 1 in 4 with schizophrenia can recover.

We can help turn this problem around by letting people know that help is available for mental illness. Of all the resolutions that will be considered by Congress this year, I hope you will agree that Mental Illness Awareness Week has particular merit. Its passage will help bring much-needed attention to the fact that so many mental disorders can be attacked and conquered.

The inspiration for Mental Illness Awareness Week comes from such groups as the American Psychiatric Association [APA] and the National Alliance for the Mentally Ill. APA members conduct research and provide treatment necessary for those suffering from mental illnesses. The Alliance, which was formed in 1979 for families of the mentaly ill, supports education, advocacy, and research in the mental health field.

Few diseases have the potential which mental illness has to disrupt the lives of the sufferers, and their families and friends. And no other disease is more clouded by misunderstanding.

Only through an increased understanding of the causes and treatments available will the fear and ignorance surrounding mental illness become a thing of the past.

Mental Illness Awareness Week provides us with an opportunity to reach out and help fellow Americans understand this disease and encourage those afflicted to seek appropriate care. I urge my colleagues to join me in cosponsoring this important resolution.

DAT RECORDING AGREEMENT

HON. JOE BARTON

OF TEXAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, February 22, 1990

Mr. BARTON of Texas. Mr. Speaker, today, it gives me great pleasure to join my colleagues in introducing the Digital Audio Tape Recorder Act of 1990. This legislation embodies a compromise that addresses introduction in the market of one of the newest sound recording devices, the digital audio tape [DAT] recorder. I am particularly pleased to report that this legislation is supported by Tandy Corp., one of the leaders of the consumer electronics industry and a company that has made great contributions to the Sixth District of Texas.

As my colleagues know, this legislation is the result of years of consideration and months of negotiation. After an unsuccessful attempt in 1987 by the recording industry to limit digital copying by DAT machines, the recording industry followed the suggestion of Members of both Houses of Congress and joined hands with the consumer electronics industry to seek a solution. Last summer, executives from both the recording industry and audio component manufacturers convened to discuss the problems involving digital recording.

From these negotiations emerged an unprecedented pact among historical adversaries. This pact proposed legislative action on a technical effort to limit digital copying of copyright protected material on DAT machines. These industry leaders agreed to recommend the implementation of a standardized electronic circuit called the serial copy management system, or SCMS, into machines. SCMS is a system by which DAT machines can be used for digital-to-digital copying but will be precluded from digital copies of copies.

The DAT machine takes a quantum leap in the realm of taping technology. These machines will enable music listeners to audibly appreciate the symphonic quality of sound recordings previously apparent only to audiophiles with the most advanced analog tape recorders. Now, American consumers should finally have access to the technological advancement in sound recording for which they have long awaited.

Let us leave the day of the dinosaur and proceed toward a new and more innovative technological future by enacting this legislation. I encourage my colleagues to expeditiously enact this historic compromise.

INTRODUCTION OF LEGISLATION TO EXTEND THE SUSPENSION OF THE IMPORT DUTY ON SYNTHETIC RUTILE

HON. BENJAMIN L. CARDIN

OF MARYLAND

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, February 22, 1990

Mr. CARDIN. Mr. Speaker, today I introduced legislation to extend the suspension of the import duty on synthetic rutile. Few have heard of synthetic rutile, but this titanium bearing mineral, used as a feedstock in the production of titanium dioxide, is vital to the paint, plastics, and paper industries in the United States. Titanium dioxide is used as a nontranslucent ingredient in almost all paints, all printing papers except newsprint, and a wide variety of plastics and other products. As a principal feedstock for the production of titanium dioxide, synthetic rutile is a commodity vital to a large and important industry employing thousands. SCM Chemical, with a large facility in Baltimore, is a major producer of titanium dioxide.

Beginning in 1974, the import duty on synthetic rutile has been suspended by Congress. There have been a series of extensions of this suspension, with the most recent due to expire in 1990. For the reasons set out below, I believe the duty suspension for synthetic rutile should be extended again and I ask for my colleagues' support.

The most obvious reason for the suspension of duty on synthetic rutile is its inconsistent treatment under the harmonized tariff schedule of the United States. All other feedstocks for titanium dioxide—natural rutile, ilmenite, and titanium slag—are listed as duty-free. Only synthetic rutile is subject to duty, apparently for the sole reason that it was not a commercially available product when the tariff schedules were originally written. There is no logical reason for such disparate treatment of only one of four substances which are all put to the same use. This illogical distinction results only in an unfair and anticompetitive hardship on titanium dioxide producers dependent on synthetic rutile.

The producers who use synthetic rutile would suffer both in terms of production and employment as a result of any duty. There is currently only one domestic producer of synthetic rutile, Kerr-McGee Chemical Corp., and it is unable to supply the total domestic demand for the feedstock. Furthermore, as the economic outlook for major users of pigments has improved, domestic demand and worldwide competition for feedstocks has increased substantially. The cost/price squeeze caused by reliance on imports of synthetic rutile and the costs of any duty on such imports would threaten the economic health of much of the titanium dioxide industry and those it employs.

Continuation of the duty-free status for synthetic rutile would help protect an important domestic industry—not by erecting trade barriers, but by removing them. I look forward to the support of my colleagues for this measure.

THE DIGITAL AUDIO TAPE RECORDER ACT OF 1990

HON. DON RITTER

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, February 22, 1990

Mr. RITTER. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to announce my support for the Digital Audio Tape Recorder Act of 1990. Like many of my colleagues on the Energy and Commerce Committee, I think this legislation embodies a fair and appropriate response to a significant advancement in sound recording capability, the digital audio tape [DAT] recorder. In my view, this bill strikes an acceptable balance between many competing interests, including the needs of consumers, manufacturers, and the creative community. Equally important, this legislation sets the stage for the continuing rational discussion of economic rights of hardware and software producers regarding the development of future technologies.

As my colleagues know, this bill addresses an issue that has been the subject of substantial scrutiny and arduous negotiation. In 1987, the recording industry urged legislation that would have kept DAT machines out of the United States until the machines recording capability was limited. With the demise of that legislation, which I personally supported as giving appropriate weight to the United States value-added software producers, Members of both Houses of Congress encouraged the recording and consumer electronic industries to negotiate a compromise amongst themselves, and finally we have that compromise. Now that these two parties have jointly recommended this proposal to us, it is incumbent upon us to act.

In 1989, the worldwide recording industry and audio component manufacturers signed an agreement which recommended legislative action on a technical proposal to limit digital copying of copyright protected material on DAT machines. They agreed to recommend implementation of a standard circuit called the Serial Copy Management System, or SCMS. Under this system, DAT machines can be used for digital-to-digital copying, but will be precluded from making digital copies of copies. The bill I rise today to support as an original cosponsor will incorporate SCMS into every DAT machine manufactured after the effective date of this legislation.

The DAT machine revolutionizes the existing audio taping technology. These machines capture and preserve recordings with very high-quality fidelity. SCMS will prohibit the misuse of this medium to the detriment of our entertainers and our recording industry. The Digital Audio Tape Recorder Act of 1990 is a major step forward in bringing advanced technology into the home of American consumers while respecting the important jobs and economic activity of a major American industry, the recording industry.

I, therefore, urge my colleagues to consider seriously, and support this unique legislative response to one of the most exciting technological advances of our time.

HOSPITAL RELIEF

HON. LEON E. PANETTA

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, February 22, 1990

Mr. PANETTA. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to introduce two bills which will provide much-needed relief to hospitals which serve communities devastated by the great quake of 1989. One such hospital is Hazel Hawkins Memorial Hospital in Hollister, CA.

Like most rural hospitals, Hazel Hawkins was struggling to make ends meet even before the earthquake. Under today's Medicare reimbursement policies, rural hospitals are reimbursed for Medicare patients at rates which make it virtually impossible to compete with nearby urban facilities. With less money, they cannot provide a full range of services or attract topnotch staff. Yet small hospitals provide essential services to otherwise underserved communities, like Hollister. The residents of these communities will have no where to turn for adequate medical care in an emergency if these facilities are allowed to close.

In the case of Hazel Hawkins, the earthquake was the final straw. Because the hospital must treat many people in the area who have lost jobs and businesses, it is providing more and more care to people who cannot pay their bills. The situation is approaching crisis proportions, and the hospital board is now considering closing the intensive care unit due to inadequate funds. Hazel Hawkins needs help immediately in order to continue providing care to the people of San Benito County.

These bills can provide short-term financial assistance to hospitals like Hazel Hawkins Memorial allowing them to get back on their feet after the disaster. The first bill would authorize the Secretary of Health and Human Services to make available four grants of $500,000 each to small hospitals in the disaster area with a defined indigent case load. The second bill liberalizes requirements for assistance under the Medicare-Dependent Small Rural Hospital Program, which allows hospitals with high indigent case loads to change their reimbursement calculations. Together, these measures will allow rural hospitals to survive the current crisis so they may continue to serve communities in dire need. I strongly urge my colleagues to support swift passage of this legislation through the committee review process in response to an emergency situation.

TRIBUTE ON THE RETIREMENT OF BLAINE CORNELL-SUPERVISOR OF THE STANISLAUS NATIONAL FOREST

HON. RICHARD H. LEHMAN

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, February 22, 1990

Mr. LEHMAN of California. Mr. Speaker, over the past 7 years, I have had the pleasure of working with a fine public servant, Blaine Cornell, who until recently was the supervisor of the Stanislaus National Forest. Blaine made the decision last December to retire after a Forest Service career which has spanned 38 years.

Blaine began his career on the Payette National Forest in Idaho as a seasonal employee working on fire control, trail maintenance, and timber management. After graduating from the University of Idaho with a bachelor of science degree in forest management, he returned to the Payette National Forest as a ranger on two different districts. Later, he moved on to the Teton National Forest in Wyoming and the Boise National Forest in Idaho. Blaine went to Nevada in 1964 to take a job as timber/fire staff on the Toiyabe National Forest. After holding that job for 5 years, he was promoted to deputy forest supervisor. Then in 1971, Blaine transferred to California to take over the supervisor's position in the Mendocino National Forest. Finally, Blaine made his final career move by coming to Sonora, CA, to become the supervisor of the Stanislaus in 1976.

My association with Blaine began in 1982 when I was elected to Congress from California's 18th district which includes part of the Stanislaus National Forest. Our work began in earnest when legislation to include the Tuolumne River in the National Wild and Scenic River System was being considered by Congress. Although we did not always agree on everything through the years, one could never doubt Blaine's sincerity and commitment to do what he thought was in the best interest of the forest.

I wish Blaine and his lovely wife Greta the best in their much deserved retirement. And no matter where they may go, I hope they will always consider Sonora and the Stanislaus National Forest their home.

TRIBUTE TO NELSON MANDELA

HON. GEO. W. CROCKETT, JR.

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, February 22, 1990

Mr. CROCKETT. Mr. Speaker, a few short days ago, Nelson Mandela, the symbolic and real hope of justice and freedom in South Africa, left the confinements of the South African prisons where he has spent the last 27 years.

Like all freedom-loving peoples of the world, we rejoice in this step for Mandela, and for all the people of South Africa. His statesmanship, wisdom, and leadership will be crucial in the difficult negotiations that lie ahead.

But while he is no longer behind barbed wire gates, Nelson Mandela is not yet a free man. He, and 23 million other black South Africans remain imprisoned by the racist system of apartheid.

Mandela was not let out because of some miraculous change of heart on the part of the South African Government. He was freed because of the pressure brought to bear on that government by millions of South African blacks refusing to put up any longer with the status quo, and by the economic and political pressure from sanctions imposed by the United States Congress over Presidential veto.

Mandela's freedom is not the end, it is the beginning of the course to justice in South Africa. Now is not the time to relax sanctions. It's time to keep their feet to the fire until Mandela—and all of South Africa—are truly free.

ACREAGE BASE AND PROGRAM YIELD FLEXIBILITY ACT OF 1990

HON. CHARLES W. STENHOLM

OF TEXAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, February 22, 1990

Mr. STENHOLM. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to join my colleague from Kansas [Mr. ROBERTS], in introducing the Acreage Base and Program Yield Flexibility Act of 1990.

Nobody knows yet what next year's farm legislation will look like, but whatever the new law does, it will almost certainly have to assign acreage bases and yields to participating farmers. We'll need some way to measure how many acres a farmer normally plants and what productive capacity is associated with those acres.

This bill maintains the current basic formulas, but provides additional flexibility to allow producers to make some modest adjustments in their management decisions. This legislation would not overhaul the whole machine; but rather, fine-tune what we already have—and know works—to make it run a little better.

By allowing producers to swap up to 20 percent of their program bases, farmers are provided a flexible and equitable system for making sound management decisions based on the ever changing circumstances that Mother Nature, markets, and Congress can create. Without this flexibility, many producers are forced to farm and manage the program instead of their operations.

In addition, this legislation provides equity to producers by allowing them to prove their yields upward before getting locked into another 5 years of farm programs. Too many farmers are locked into predetermined yields that are outdated by technology and improved farming practices. Allowing producers to make this adjustment will return commonsense management and marketing strategies to farm country.

The net result would be a more market oriented agriculture at less long-term cost to taxpayers. I urge my colleagues to support this legislation.

ANGOLA NEEDS PEACE

HON. JOHN M. SPRATT, JR.

OF SOUTH CAROLINA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, February 22, 1990

Mr. SPRATT. Mr. Speaker, I am rising to express my concerns about the latest developments in Angola. Last year, the prospects for peace in Angola seemed much brighter after 14 bloody and destructive years of civil war.

The MPLA government and the leaders of UNITA came together in a summit meeting of African leaders in Zaire. At this summit in Gbadolite, the two leaders agreed to a cease-fire and negotiations for national reconciliation. Although difficult negotiations remained, the years of bloodshed seemed to be ending. However, the peace talks stalled and eventually fell apart. Then, last December the MPLA launched an offensive against UNITA-held territory. According to some reports, the latest offensive by the MPLA includes the use of significant numbers of tank companies, mechanized companies, and artillery companies. Hundreds of soldiers on both sides have already been killed and the end of the bloodshed is nowhere in sight.

The Bush administration has called upon "Luanda and the Soviet Union to stop the offensive immediately and concentrate instead on the peace process." I call upon my colleagues to join with me in asking for an end to the fighting so that peace can come to that violence ridden nation.

Whether you support UNITA or the MPLA is not the issue. The critical issue is to support an end to the 15-year-long civil war which has caused so much tragic bloodshed and death. Both Democrats and Republicans should urge both sides to the conflict to reach a cease-fire agreement and a national reconciliation agreement. Without national reconciliation and subsequent elections, the carnage and bloodshed will continue.

THE DRUG SUMMIT: A NEW ERA IN THE WAR ON DRUGS

HON. WM. S. BROOMFIELD

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, February 22, 1990

Mr. BROOMFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I salute President Bush for keeping his promise to the American people to win the war on drugs. I also commend him for undertaking a potentially dangerous mission to the Cartagena drug summit. Thanks to his determined efforts, the summit was successful and the United States has cemented a regional alliance with Peru, Bolivia, and Colombia. While the drug war is not over, we have made some real progress and I believe the administration's approach to solving this problem is sound. I encourage my colleagues in the Congress to help the President keep the promises he made at the summit by supporting his overall Andean strategy.

At the Cartagena meeting, the President and the leaders of Colombia, Peru, and Bolivia committed themselves to a cooperative antidrug strategy. They formed the first antidrug cartel. While in Colombia, the leaders signed agreements to reduce cocaine consumption, production, and trafficking by increasing their governments' efforts against the cocaine trade. Already, the administration has requested a $2.2 billion 4-year regional aid program for the Andean states.

At the drug summit, our Chief Executive supported the need to help coca growers in the Andean countries find substitute crops. The U.S. Government is prepared to finance economic activities designed to generate alternative sources of income to make Andean nations less dependent on coca. Unfortunately, cocaine production has become the mainstay of the weak economies of the Andean nations. Coca cultivation and drug production reportedly provide those Andean economies with $4 billion a year in profits. Coca production creates jobs for about 1.5 million farmers who cultivate coca plants. The Presidents of the Andean nations also agreed that they must improve their governments' law enforcement capabilities, enhance their antinarcotics efforts and do more to control this illegal trade.

America must do its share in this war on illicit substances. We must be part of an international united front in the offensive against cocaine trafficking. We must cure our Nation's insatiable appetite for these illegal drugs. Demand reduction is one of the keys to eliminating the drug problem. We must also control the export of weapons to Latin America and keep the drug barons and their henchmen from terrorizing those nations with arms "made in America." Finally, we must stop the flow of precursor chemicals from the United States to Latin America for the production of narcotics.

At his inaugural address, the President promised to confront the drug problem. He told us that he would complete this important antinarcotics mission. He launched his attack on the drug problem by issuing a battle plan describing how America's war against the drug threat would be fought. The overall U.S. approach, the national drug control strategy, focuses both on domestic and international drug issues. The Andean strategy is particularly important. In carrying out that phase of the strategy, some progress has been made. General Noriega, who turned Panama into a money laundering and drug transit country, is facing drug charges. With United States support and encouragement, Colombia declared war on the drug traffickers. The Medellin cartel is in disarray. Jose Gonzalo Rodriguez Gacha, a drug baron, was killed in a shootout. Another drug kingpin, Pablo Escobar, was forced into hiding. Six months ago, the drug lords looked 10 feet tall. Now, they are asking for a truce. The Colombian offensive disrupted supply networks and drove down the price of coca leaves. So far, this part of America's antinarcotics strategy has produced results.

President Bush has also boosted funds for the war on drugs by 69 percent and the fiscal year 1991 budget calls for spending $10.6 billion on antidrug efforts. Some positive results are already visible. Consumption is down in the certain sectors of our society. Our President is following his strategy and keeping his commitment to take action, and not use mere rhetoric, against the menace of drugs.

The drug summit was a tentative first step toward other more concrete agreements between the Andean states and the United States. Another summit is planned in 6 months. This summit was a major step toward expanded antinarcotics cooperation. We must comply with the understandings reached in Cartagena by providing assistance to those Andean nations. The role of Congress is critical in this regard. I am confident that the administration will keep its promises and continue the battle against the scourge of illegal drugs.

STATE RAIL SAFETY PROGRAM ENHANCEMENT ACT OF 1990

HON. BOB CLEMENT

OF TENNESSEE

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, February 22, 1990

Mr. CLEMENT. Mr. Speaker, today I am joined by Representative JIM COOPER and Representative HOWARD NEILSON in introducing bipartisan legislation which we believe will have a significant effect on the safety of our Nation's railroads.

As many of our colleagues know, under the Railroad Safety Act of 1970, certified State agencies are entitled to receive Federal grants of one-half of their costs of policing railroads' compliance with Federal railroad safety standards. Unfortunately, the Federal Government has not lived up to its half of the bargain.

After substantial cuts, funding for the grant program was zeroed out in fiscal year 1989, and not funded in fiscal year 1990, despite the fact that the Federal Railroad Administration [FRA] continues to rely on the participation of 111 State inspectors in its safety program. While the State of Tennessee has been able to continue funding its State inspection program through higher inspection fees, without the grants, some States may lose their incentive to participate in rail safety efforts. Last June, for instance, the Alabama Public Service Commission announced its intention not only to leave the FRA safety program, but to close its entire railway safety section because of the loss of Federal funds. There is nothing special about Alabama's case. At risk is over one-third of the Nation's entire rail safety inspection capability.

In addition to inadequate funding, State enforcement agencies have become increasingly frustrated with the system of reporting the safety violations they detect to the FRA. The FRA is inclined to lump together a railroad's violations and negotiate the fine. In many cases, the States reporting violations never know whether any enforcement action has been taken against the infringing railroad at all.

When States have taken rail enforcement matters into their own hands, the law has not been clear. For example, 3 years ago the State of Louisiana began inspecting rail vehicles carrying hazardous materials which were in rail yards awaiting shipment. Upon finding violations, the State placed monetary sanctions against a few carriers. Subsequently, the State of Louisiana had been served suit by a railroad company in which they contend a preemption of States by Federal regulations as they relate to the transportation of hazardous materials by rail. The suit is still pending. Certainly, States have a legitimate enforcement need when the public health and safety is at risk.

If the FRA continues with what has been aptly characterized as its laissez-faire attitude toward rail safety, and if the States can no longer afford their safety programs, the railroad industry will be largely left to regulate itself, which is most certainly not in the public interest.

The State Rail Safety Program Enhancement Act of 1990 will restore the commitment to vigorous safety enforcement that Congress intended when it reauthorized the grant program in fiscal year 1989. Our bill would allow State agencies which have been certified by the FRA, to impose fines on railroads they find to be in violation of Federal safety regulations. Our legislation will provide an incentive for States to continue their rail safety efforts without the Congress having to appropriate any Federal funding. It will also have the desirable effect of increasing the enforcement actions taken against unsafe railroads. However, the bill does not allow States to promulgate any new regulations of their own or impose fines in excess of the Federal fine schedule.

This legislation is supported by the National Association of Regulatory Commissioners. I invite my colleagues to support our sensible effort to make our Nation's railroads safer.

TRIBUTE TO MARY JAYNE BRONCATO

HON. GEORGE E. SANGMEISTER

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, February 22, 1990

Mr. SANGMEISTER. Mr. Speaker, it is with great pride that I rise to pay tribute to an exemplary educator, Mary Jayne Broncato, a constituent and a friend from my home district.

Mary Jayne Broncato recently added to her long list of professional achievements with her appointment as assistant superintendent of public education in Illinois. She brings to her new post 29 years of experience, including more than 20 years in Joliet School District 86, most recently as district superintendent.

Mary Jayne began her career of improving young minds in 1961 as a literature teacher at St. Francis High School in Wheaton, IL. From there she returned to Will County, teaching in Romeoville, IL, public schools from 1962 to 1967, before coming to District 86. Her full-time service to Joliet schools was only interrupted by appointments to the faculty of her two alma maters, Lewis University and Northern Illinois University in the 1970's.

In addition to her dedicated work as an educator, Mary Jayne is a devoted wife and mother who, together with her husband, Jacob, raised two sons, John and Patrick.

Mr. Speaker, Mary Jayne has also set a fine example by her dedication to community service. She was an active member of the board of directors of the United Way of Will County. In 1986 she served as campaign chairperson for the annual United Way Fund Drive, which that year raised a record amount under her leadership. Just last month she successfully completed her term as United Way Board President. She also unselfishly donates her time to the Boy Scouts of America, the American Cancer Society, and Joilet Project Pride serving on their respective boards of directors.

Mr. Speaker, the residents of Joilet are losing an outstanding educator, an involved and conscientious citizen, and a friend. However much we may miss her, our district will still benefit from her new position with the State of Illinois. On behalf of my constituents, I thank Mary Jayne Broncato for her service and wish her well in the future.

INTRODUCTION OF NEW HEALTH CARE INITIATIVE

HON. EDWARD R. ROYBAL

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, February 22, 1990

Mr. ROYBAL. Mr. Speaker, today, I am pleased to be part of a new health care initiative which, if enacted, will bring much-needed relief to Americans of all ages. This bill, called Lifecare, marks an important advance in the Government's support of long-term care. Lifecare would provide home and community-based care and nursing home care for the impaired elderly, for disabled children and for disabled, Medicare-eligible adults under age 65. I commend my Senate colleague, the honorable EDWARD M. KENNEDY (D-Mass.) for his tireless work to bring this bill to fruition—he is the sponsor on the Senate side. And I am honored to join my colleague on the Aging Committee, the honorable MARY ROSE OAKAR (D-Ohio), in introducing this bill in the House.

In poll after poll, senior citizens have pointed to long-term care as their No. 1 health priority. Children with birth defects, or who are born prematurely, or who are victims of accidents, also are in sore need of long-term care to assist them with activities of daily living. Frail and disabled Americans need not be elderly—they can be any age. Long-term illnesses do not discriminate on the basis of age.

Unfortunately, our health care system does discriminate on the basis of the type of illness a person has. If it is an acute problem—something short-term, like a broken arm or an appendectomy—our health care system, public and private, usually does a good job of treating it and paying for the care. However, should a patient have the misfortune of contracting a chronic illness such as Alzheimer's disease, Parkinson's disease or Multiple Sclerosis, or suffering a serious injury or stroke which leads to lifetime injury, there is little or no assistance. Only Medicaid, the Federal-

State health program for the very poor, will pay for long-term care.

According to my subcommittee's estimates, some 1 million Americans annually become impoverished trying to meet the costs of long-term illness and injury each year. This is a startling statistic in a country as rich as ours.

In an attempt to address that problem, last year, the late Congressman Claude Pepper, who recognized long-term care as the most serious gap in the U.S. health care system, and I introduced legislation, H.R. 2263, to cover long-term care under medicare. Under the terms of that measure, chronically ill elderly, disabled persons and children could receive long-term home care benefits under Medicare after having been certified to be unable to perform two or more normal activities of daily living. Our bill focused on efficiency and appropriateness of care, too, establishing a professional case management team to determine needs and assign appropriate services. Quality of care is also a prime concern.

H.R. 2263 is still pending in committee. Since its introduction, a whole host of long-term care bills have been introduced in the House and the Senate.

Some of these measures have serious gaps in coverage, however. Many do not cover children or the disabled, which I consider a big mistake. The long-term care bill which is finally enacted by Congress must cover all Americans. Also, it is important that eligibility be based not on income but rather on the individual's functional limitations, as was true in the Pepper-Roybal bill. I am pleased that the initiative we introduce today, the Kennedy-Roybal-Oakar bill, meets that important test and will cover children and the disabled.

The financing of any long-term care proposal should be simple, and based on the principle of social insurance. The Pepper-Roybal bill identified one source of financing—removal of the ceiling on income subject to the Medicare payroll tax—and the financing mechanism was supported by the American public. I can note with pride that Senator KENNEDY has expressed this intent to pursue the same financing plan in our new bill. We will also adopt other appropriate social insurance methods as needed.

The new bill we introduce today builds upon the Pepper-Roybal bill in an important way—it would provide coverage for custodial care in nursing homes. I still believe, and I know the majority of Americans share my view, that one's home is the preferred setting for delivery of long-term care services. But when home care is no longer beneficial and nursing home care is unavoidable, we would make that type of care available.

I look forward to cooperating with my colleagues, Senator KENNEDY and Congresswoman OAKAR, on this bill and urge my other colleagues in the House and Senate to join us. Americans, more than even before, are looking for leadership in dealing with the problem of long-term care, a problem which will only get worse as our population ages. Let us take advantage of this opportunity to enact meaningful legislation to address the problem now.

CUDAHY VETERANS PROUDLY DEDICATE WAR MEMORIAL

HON. GERALD D. KLECZKA

WISCONSIN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, February 22, 1990

Mr. KLECZKA. Mr. Speaker, on Memorial Day, Monday, May 28, 1990, the Cudahy War Memorial Fund, Inc., in conjunction with the Allied Veterans Council of Cudahy, will be dedicating a memorial to all the veterans who served in foreign wars. They will be paying special tribute to those who gave their lives in the ultimate sacrifice.

The monument will be a massive 9 feet high by 7 feet wide black marble structure that has been designed to coordinate with the architectural layout of the site donated by the county government. The monument will be located in Cudahy on the southeast corner of Layton Avenue and Lake Drive, in Sheridan Park.

Seven short months ago, the veterans of Cudahy decided it was time to pay a fitting tribute to their fallen comrades. Once marshaled, the veterans responded in record time. While other communities have tried for years to raise the funds necessary to honor their veterans, Cudahy started, organized, funded, and will complete, and dedicate theirs in less than a year.

The dedication will take place after what is shaping up to be the largest parade ceremony in the history of the city. Even the neighboring communities have planned their Memorial Day activities so they can join in Cudahy's parade and dedication. From all indications, it will be the most successful community undertaking in the history of the city, and it will not cost the taxpayers one cent!

It is refreshing to see a community take the initiative to start and complete a project without State or Federal aid. In fact, the Cudahy War Memorial fund is projected to be in the enviable position of being overfunded. That Cudahy cares, is not just a slogan, it's a way of life the community practices.

The generous contributions received from the Patrick Cudahy Co., the Ladish Foundation, the Patrick and Anna M. Cudahy Foundation, the Cudahy Lions Club, the Cudahy Kiwanis Club, and the city of Cudahy have already assured the success of the project. Additional contributions will provide for the perpetual care of the monument.

Generations to come will be reminded of the courage and patriotism which motivated these gallant men and women when their country called them to duty. Cudahy echoes the sentiments expressed in the Cudahy Brothers Co., newsletter, "Peacock Feathers," after World War II that still rings true today: "Each and everyone of those men and women should be honored and remembered for time immemorial, for theirs was a heroic sacrifice, which benefited all the world."

The board of directors and the officers of the Cudahy War Memorial Fund, Inc., were the driving force behind the monument. The chairman of the board is Richard Bartoshevich, and the directors are Erwin Bud Bessler, Joseph P. Farina, George Dawidziak, Lloyd Buttke, Robert Felle Jr., Alexander Haidarian, Joseph Macek, Anthony Luljak, and Donald Jankowski. The officers are Frank Chovanec, president; Donald Arthur Jensen, vice president; and Daniel R. Furdek, secretary/treasurer. Each and every one deserves a heartfelt thanks for the effort they made on behalf of their community.

There are countless others, from local, State, and national officials to local individuals and family members of the deceased veterans who have contributed to make this a success and a showcase event for the community. This is truly a dedication that the whole community takes pride in. Congratulations Cudahy, on a job well done.

INTRODUCTION OF NURSING HOME ACCESS TO RESPIRATORY THERAPY ACT

HON. BRUCE F. VENTO

OF MINNESOTA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, February 22, 1990

Mr. VENTO. Mr. Speaker, I am introducing legislation today to improve the health care of our Nation's elderly by preserving respiratory therapy services at nursing homes.

In the wake of the repeal of catastrophic health insurance, we must find low cost ways of fine tuning the Medicare system to improve health care for the elderly. My bill would make a technical change in Medicare to assist elderly Americans in need of respiratory care, particularly those living in medically underserved areas such as inner cities and rural communities.

Growing numbers of our senior citizens suffer from both chronic and severe respiratory illnesses such as emphysema and asthma. There is an increasing population of elderly who are dependent upon mechanical ventilators to breathe for some part of the day. Years ago these patients would have remained confined to the hospital. The advance of medical technology and the advent of the Medicare prospective payment system has had the effect of transferring many of these respiratory patients out of the hospital and into alternative care sites such as skilled nursing facilities [SNF's].

Over the past 10 years, respiratory care in SNF's has been delivered by a variety of entities, including the transferring hospital, independent respiratory care companies, or by the nursing home. The system has worked well until recently, when Medicare began to enforce an outmoded and little-known provision which requires that only a hospital with a transfer agreement with a SNF may provide respiratory care personnel to the SNF. Furthermore, only full-time employees of that hospital may be sent to the nursing home. This provision was enacted in 1965 when respiratory care services were almost always limited to the hospital.

Medicare, until recently, has not enforced this rule. However, Medicare intermediaries in Ohio, Florida, and New Jersey have now revived it, and the consequences for SNF patients could be devastating, particularly in rural areas and inner cities.

Many rural hospitals are having severe manpower shortages, and must rely on temporary agencies or contract service employees. Regardless of the qualifications of the respiratory personnel, these individuals may not provide reimbursable respiratory care simply because they are not full-time hospital employees.

Many small hospitals cannot afford a fully operational respiratory care department and must rely on contract personnel to deliver care to the respiratory patient population. Care to SNF patients again would be prohibited.

There are currently 6,000 vacancies for respiratory therapists in the country. The Institute of Medicine has predicted that by the year 2000 the demand for respiratory therapists will exceed the supply by 34 percent. The resurrection of this rule my Medicare would further limit respiratory care at SNF's already suffering from personnel shortages.

The legislation I am introducing today would rectify this problem by including respiratory therapy as part of extended care services in a skilled nursing facility. Since the legislation simply codifies the previously exisitng method of providing respiratory care services through a variety of practitioners, it is expected to have little or no budget impact. It simply allows patients afflicted with respiratory illnesses to continue to receive the needed and appropriate respiratory care, regardless of the care site.

Mr. Speaker, I am pleased that Representatives ROE, FAUNTROY, PENNY, COLLINS, WYDEN and CHAPMAN have joined me as original cosponsors of this legislation to improve the quality and increase the access to respiratory care services available to our nation's elderly. I am hopeful that this legislation will be enacted quickly so that the negative consequences of the enforcement of the outdated Medicare provision will be avoided. I urge other colleagues to join me in this important effort.

FLORIDA SHOULD NOT HAVE TO PAY FOR FLAWED FEDERAL POLICIES

HON. DANTE B. FASCELL

OF FLORIDA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, February 22, 1990

Mr. FASCELL. Mr. Speaker, I rise to express my concern that, in implementing its policies, the Federal Government is abdicating its responsibility to finance its decisions. Good businessmen try to maximize their production while minimizing their costs; however, this is a practice, it seems, that is not transferable to the Federal Government. It is irresponsible for the Federal Government to continue to produce policies and, in the process of minimizing its costs, pass the bill on to State and local governments. Immigration is a prime example of policy by abdication being practiced [in south Florida] these days, and recently it was hinted that the Federal Government's Outer Continental Shelf Oil and Gas Development Program would soon follow suit.

I am dismayed over recent newspaper reports that the Secretary of the Interior would like Florida to buy back offshore oil exploration leases in the waters adjacent to the Florida Keys and Everglades National Park. The State of Florida did not encourage the sale of these leases nor did it benefit financially; the State of Florida should not have to pay one dime of the cost of buying back these leases. The statements of Secretary Lujan, however, indicate an increasingly standardized practice of the previous and current administration: the Federal Government asks State and local governments to supply the soap, the mop, and the elbow grease to clean up the mess caused by their policies.

Secretary Lujan was recently quoted as saying that "I can't start the practice of canceling leases, but maybe we can start getting States to buy those leases." I commend the Bush administration for trying to find a solution to this problem of great concern to all Floridians, but it is wrong to expect Florida to bail it out of this one just as it is wrong to ask States to pay for absorbing the costs of Federal immigration policies. It was irresponsible for the Department of the Interior to sell these leases while the area was protected by a moratorium, and it is unfair to ask the State of Florida to pay for refunds to the purchasers. It is equally unfair to ask high-impact States to pay the costs of inconsistent immigration policies which are an overwhelming burden for many local communities.

Federal immigration policies are a failure to control our borders and a definite failure to provide our communities with anything like adequate assistance to deal with the problem. A dangerous "gee whiz, tough luck" precedent has been set for one flawed Federal policy; why not apply it to another?

The people of south Florida do not have a foreign policy, a border patrol, or an immigration policy. What they do have are attractive and hospitable communities with a tradition of doing their best to welcome newcomers. They also have a major financial and community services problem.

South Florida has already expended well in excess of $100 million to deal with Federal refugee problems and faces additional millions in expenditures. This is just to take care of the refugees who are already here, not to mention the new wave looming on the horizon. Aside from the staggering sums involved, all south Floridians pay in the quality of education and health care for everyone because a crisis in priorities has been created. The Federal assistance that characterized past immigration emergencies has been replaced by a policy of Federal indifference.

We all recognize the acute strain the Federal budget deficit has placed on other levels of government, but this kind of taxation by abdication cannot go on. Federal immigration policies and Secretary Lujan's recent comments indicate a willingness to increase the financial burden for States for Federal policies. In each of the past few years, the Federal commitment to State and local governments absorbing new immigration populations has gotten smaller and smaller. The logic is simple; let's apply the Federal Government's commitment to immigration policies to finding a solution to the offshore drilling dilemma in Florida. Before we consider the capital gains tax, we need to look a the "Federal pains" tax. In south Florida, those rates are already too high to add the Outer Continental Shelf oil and gas exploration folly.

REMARKS ON BEHALF OF PAUL WILLIAM HILLYARD ON THE OCCASION OF HIS RETIREMENT

HON. D. FRENCH SLAUGHTER, JR.

OF VIRGINIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, February 22, 1990

Mr. SLAUGHTER of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, today, I pay tribute to a man who has done nothing more or less than serve his community faithfully for better than 50 years. Today, I wish to recognize Mr. Paul William Hillyard on the occasion of his retirement.

"Soup," as he is known, has been working for the Winchester, VA, school system for the last 30 years. He began his teaching career as a physical education teacher and for the past 15 years, he has served Daniel Morgan Middle School in an administrative capacity as assistant principal. In fact, Mr. Hillyard has been the assistant principal there since Daniel Morgan opened its doors in 1974.

Friday, February 23, 1990, may be the day Paul Hillyard retires, but I am sure that Daniel Morgan Middle School will carry forward many of his ideas for years to come. Also, I am confident that his spirit of contribution and participation will remain with the school as a legacy in its own right.

The secrets of "Soup's" success are not too difficult to find. To begin, he has a wonderful family. He is married and has three children, a son and two daughters. He also has two grandchildren, a granddaughter, and a grandson. Mention of his family would not be complete either without acknowledgement and respect paid to Mrs. Opal Hillyard, "Soup's" mother.

The Braddock Street United Methodist Church has seen four generations of Hillyard family members. Remarkably, those four generations continue to worship there, as I understand that Mrs. Opal Hillyard is still an active member.

Clearly, family and faith are two outstanding features of "Soup's" life. Community involvement is another. "Soup" is a member of the Gainesboro Volunteer Fire Department and the Ruritan Club. He has been a referee on both the college and high school levels. Further, he has served as a little league football referee. This kind of volunteerism is precisely the sort that President Bush has highlighted and applauded in speeches throughout the country.

Before concluding my remarks I want to say that contrary to the opinion of some it is not old fashioned, or otherwise out of date, to be a pillar of community or to serve others. It is not old fashioned to belong to the church where you and generations before and after have worshipped. Part of what makes our country so strong is its commitment, through the generations, to family, faith, and community. Values are what makes the difference in terms of quality of life.

Mr. Paul Hillyard, "Soup," built his life around the traditions of family, faith, and community service. While I am sure he will be missed at work, I am equally confident that his strong presence in the community will continue.

"Soup," I hope the years ahead are as rich as those behind you. Congratulations on your retirement.

SENATE—Friday, February 23, 1990

(Legislative day of Tuesday, January 23, 1990)

The Senate met at 10 a.m. and 21 seconds, on the expiration of the recess, and was called to order by the Honorable HERBERT KOHL, a Senator from the State of Wisconsin.

APPOINTMENT OF ACTING PRESIDENT PRO TEMPORE

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will please read a communication to the Senate from the President pro tempore [Mr. BYRD].

The legislative clerk read the following letter:

U.S. SENATE,
PRESIDENT PRO TEMPORE,
Washington, DC, February 23, 1990.

To the Senate:

Under the provisions of rule I, section 3, of the Standing Rules of the Senate, I hereby appoint the Honorable HERBERT KOHL, a Senator from the State of Wisconsin, to perform the duties of the Chair.

ROBERT C. BYRD,
President pro tempore.

Mr. KOHL thereupon assumed the chair as Acting President pro tempore.

RECESS UNTIL MONDAY, FEBRUARY 26, 1990, AT 11:30 A.M.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under the previous order, the Senate stands in recess until Monday, February 26, 1990, at 11:30 a.m.

Thereupon, at 10 a.m. and 42 seconds, the Senate recessed until Monday, February 26, 1990, at 11:30 a.m.

● This "bullet" symbol identifies statements or insertions which are not spoken by a Member of the Senate on the floor.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES—Monday, February 26, 1990

The House met at 12 noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James David Ford, D.D., offered the following prayer:

We thank You eternal God, that though we accept the patterns of day following day and event following event, we recognize that the time in which we live is a special moment when peoples and nations are claiming a reality that had been only a vision or a distant hope. As Your bountiful spirit of renewal touches the lives of people in so many different circumstances and in diverse ways, so may we, in our own responsibilities, be good and faithful stewards of the gifts You have given us. May Your blessing be upon each person who turns to You in need, and may Your benediction nurture us in all the days ahead. This is our earnest prayer. Amen.F

THE JOURNAL

The SPEAKER. The Chair has examined the Journal of the last day's proceedings and announces to the House his approval thereof.

Pursuant to clause 1, rule I, the Journal stands approved.

PLEDGE OF ALLEGIANCE

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GILLMOR] please come forward and lead the House in the Pledge of Allegiance.

Mr. GILLMOR led the Pledge of Allegiance as follows:

I pledge allegiance to the Flag of the United States of America, and to the Republic for which it stands, one nation under God, indivisible, with liberty and justice for all.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate by Mr. HALLEN, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House is requested:

S. 535. An act to increase civil monetary penalties based on the effect of inflation;

S. 580. An act to require institutions of higher education receiving Federal financial assistance to provide certain information with respect to the graduation rates of student-athletes at such institutions; and

S. 2124. An act to authorize appropriations for the National Space Council, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that pursuant to Public Law 96-114, as amended by Public Laws 98-33, 99-161, and 100-674, the Chair, on behalf of the majority leader, announces his appointments of Mr. ROBB and Mr. John Mansfield Falk, of Virginia, to be members of the Congressional Award Board.

The message also announced that pursuant to sections 276d-276g, title 22, of the United States Code, as amended, the Chair, on behalf of the Vice President, appoints Mr. HOLLINGS, Mr. MCCLURE, Mr. GRASSLEY, and Mr. MURKOWSKI, as members of the Senate delegation to the Canada-United States Interparliamentary Group during the 101st Congress, 2d session, to be held in Kiawah Island, SC, February 22-26, 1990.

ANNOUNCEMENT BY THE SPEAKER

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to announce that pursuant to clause 4 of rule I, the Speaker signed the following enrolled joint resolution on Friday, February 23, 1990:

S.J. Res. 186. Joint resolution designating the week of March 1 through March 7, 1990, as "National Quarter Horse Week."

JIM WRIGHT'S ROLE AS PEACEMAKER

(Mr. EDWARDS of California asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. EDWARDS of California. Mr. Speaker, it is with great joy that we learn this morning of the election of Violeta Barrios Chamorro to the Presidency of Nicaragua. We hope that permanent peace will come to that nation and that Mrs. Chamorro's administration will bring a good life to the people.

Many men and women deserve credit for helping make the democratic process work. President Jimmy Carter deserves special praise. President Oscar Arias of Costa Rica offered splendid leadership in the drive for peace by the five Central American presidents.

We in the House of Representatives should be proud of the courageous initiative in August 1987, of our then Speaker, Jim Wright. It was Speaker Wright who put forth the plan that eventually resulted in the free election yesterday, and who had the courage to support President Arias' ongoing peace process when others were trying to derail it. Jim Wright's name will go down in history as the peacemaker.

PEOPLE CHOOSE FREEDOM

(Mr. LEWIS of California asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. LEWIS of California. Mr. Speaker, Fidel Castro must be shaking in his boots.

The changes in Eastern Europe are spilling over into our own hemisphere. Yesterday, the people of Nicaragua battered down their Berlin Wall with ballots. Today, Americans and freedom-loving people everywhere are celebrating the fall of another dictator. Daniel Ortega has finally learned the lesson that so many dictators have learned recently: Given the choice, people will choose freedom every time.

Can open and fair elections in Cuba be far off?

NICARAGUAN ELECTIONS: RECOGNITION OF THE HEROINE AND HERO

(Mr. GLICKMAN asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. GLICKMAN. Mr. Speaker, the heroine today is Violeta Chamorro, who was chosen by a substantial majority of the Nicaraguan people to be their new President. The election was fair and peaceful and President Daniel Ortega has conceded defeat. This election proves, once again, that the ballot is more powerful than the bullet. Mrs. Chamorro should be applauded for her courage and tenacity against tremendous odds.

In our praise for Mrs. Chamorro, we should not overlook the hero in this drama—former President Jimmy Carter. His diligence and integrity added fairness to the election campaign and credibility to the outcome. His impartiality gave both sides confidence that his participation would ultimately be good for Nicaragua. Americans should be proud of Jimmy Carter's role as a peacemaker and the dignity with which he treats his status as a former President.

Today there is an almost unprecedented opportunity for peace in Central America. I hope President Bush seizes this opportunity by immediately lifting economic sanctions against Nicaragua and extending a helping hand, as we have the struggling new democracies in Eastern Europe.

DEMOCRACY WINS IN NICARAGUA

(Mr. MICHEL asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. MICHEL. Mr. Speaker, the stunning victory of democracy over totalitarianism in Nicaragua is a great tribute to the courage of the Nicaraguan people. They did not believe in the opinion polls. They believed in a free Nicaragua.

It is also a personal triumph for Mrs. Chamorro. We congratulate her and her UNO colleagues for a great victory.

Much remains to be done before democracy can be said to have been established in Nicaragua. However, this victory is a splendid beginning.

I am reminded of Secretary of State Jim Baker's moves in the early days of the Bush administration to get bipartisan accord on how we deal with Nicaragua, and we did have our detractors, I might add.

It is my hope that President Bush and the Congress can continue to work on a bipartisan basis to help this new democracy get on its feet. We must leave to historians to explore the various paths that led to the victory. However, one point should be made immediately: President Reagan, President Bush, and the bipartisan coalition in the Congress deserve a part of the credit for the triumph.

In the face of persistent opposition, the two Presidents and the bipartisan coalition kept alive the hope for democracy by helping the Contras and the political democratic opposition.

To the Contras, who fought courageously and well against the largest, best-equipped army in the history of Central America, let me say:

Your sacrifices were worth it. Your cause was just, and your critics were wrong. Without your courage, none of this could have happened.

As I said, the true glory goes to the Nicaraguan people, to Mrs. Chamorro, and to UNO. Long live democracy in Nicaragua.

TRIBUTE TO PAUL MICK

(Mr. HUBBARD asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. HUBBARD. Mr. Speaker, the headline on the front page of yesterday's Washington Post reads: "4 Slain, 2 Hurt in NW Club . . . D.C. Toll Hits 83." Yes, through February 24, that's 83 murders in our Nation's Capital compared to 84 at the same time last year.

So, what's new, you ask.

Well, the headlines in the newspapers in my own district yesterday were: "Slaying of Publisher Shocks Marion, KY" and "Publisher killed during burglary."

Paul Mick, age 42, publisher of the Crittenden Press, chairman of the Western Kentucky Industrial Foundation and the former president of the Kentucky Press Association, was found stabbed to death at his home early Saturday morning after he struggled with a burglar.

An 18-year-old white man in Marion who lived three blocks from the Mick home has been arrested, charged with burglary and murder.

Paul Mick was one of my most outstanding constituents. He was one I proudly referred to as a friend.

His attractive, talented wife Nancy, and their three children, Allison, 18, Andrea, 9, and 5-year-old Lucas Mick, are among the tens of thousands of western Kentuckians who mourn the loss of Paul Mick.

Western Kentuckians—like the residents of Washington, DC—wonder why all these senseless murders continue and when they will end.

CUBAN PEOPLE DESERVE CHANCE TO CHOOSE

(Mr. BROOMFIELD asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. BROOMFIELD. Mr. Speaker, it has been 10 years of stormy weather in Central America; now the Sun is finally shining through the clouds. After years of struggle, peace and democracy in the area have a fighting chance.

The Sandinistas should respect the people's mandate. Ortega should turn over the reins of government to Mrs. Chamorro, and he should do it without delay.

The election results will reach far outside of Nicaragua. Salvadoran rebels should get the message: Central Americans do not want Marxist rule. They want free speech, free elections, and free markets.

Fidel Castro should also take notice. Latin Americans have suffered from 25 years of Cuban-sponsored subversion. The only results have been death and destruction. It is time to give the Cuban people a chance to choose their own government.

THE DREXEL BURNHAM LAMBERT BANKRUPTCY FLIM-FLAM DEMANDS CORRECTION BY CONGRESS

(Mr. MAZZOLI asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. MAZZOLI. Mr. Speaker, in the days of the old West the robbers would ride out of town—saddlebags bulging with stolen money—just before the posse rode into town.

We had another wild west adventure the other day, Mr. Speaker.

Only this time the bad guys did not wear red bandanas and buckskin vests. They wore Hermes ties and Saville row suits.

This time they didn't ride out of town on horses but on BMW's and Rolls Royces.

I am talking about the $350 million in bonuses the brokerage firm, Drexel Burnham Lambert, Inc., paid to executives and insiders just days before its parent corporation declared bankruptcy owing—you guessed it—$350 million to employees, creditors, and investors.

But, the bankruptcy trustee may not be able to recapture that money because of a legal flim-flam and shell game. The bonuses were paid by the Drexel brokerage firm, but it was the parent firm which went into chapter 11 bankruptcy.

On Thursday Chairman JACK BROOK'S subcommittee, on which I serve, will open hearings into this Drexel outrage.

I hope we can change the bankruptcy code to give trustees added authority to go behind fraudulent transfers of corporate wealth designed to defeat legitimate claims of creditors and rank-and-file employees.

Mr. Speaker, I want to rewrite that old West scenario. I want the posse to ride into town before the bad guys ride out.

GREAT LAKES INVASION COULD COST BILLIONS

(Mr. GILLMOR asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. GILLMOR. Mr. Speaker, I want to echo the joy of the previous speaker and the American people at the defeat of the Marxist-Sandinista dictatorship.

What I rise today to talk about is an invasion of Lake Erie by a small creature.

A few years ago, almost unnoticed, an inch-long creature invaded the Great Lakes. Now, noticeably, residents around the lakes are worried because up to 700,000 can occupy one square meter of lake bottom.

I am referring to the zebra mussel, which is a tiny destructive shellfish from Europe that clings to anything solid and feeds on plankton.

Zebra mussels are choking water intake pipes, ruining boat motors, fouling fish spawning grounds, and disrupting the food chain. Experts agree the zebra mussel could spead almost immediately to lakes, ponds, and rivers throughout the Northeast and into the Mississippi basin.

Mr. Speaker, the zebra mussel could cause up to $5 billion in damage to the Great Lakes. Canada has already funded extensive research, and Congress needs to fund research now that will prepare the rest of the United States to deal with the problem of the zebra mussel.

THE PEOPLE HAVE FINALLY SPOKEN IN NICARAGUA

(Mr. SKELTON asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. SKELTON. Mr. Speaker, the Nicaraguan people have finally spoken. Yesterday Presidential candidate Violeta Chamorro won in an upset against Daniel Ortega. Actually it was only an upset for those who did not have faith in the Nicaraguan people or in the election process.

The turning point for the opposition took place when the people lost their fear, when they became convinced that their vote indeed would be cast in secret. Pollsters who had predicted a Sandinista victory turned out to be wrong.

So what were the elements that contributed to this stunning development? First, the steadfast support for democracy in Nicaragua on the part of this country through this decade, from earlier support for the Contras to the recent support for these democratic elections. Second, the sincere effort on the part of Central American leaders to find a peaceful solution themselves for Central America. Third, the role played by international observers to ensure the fairness of the elections.

The United Nations, the Organization of American States, and especially former President Jimmy Carter deserve congratulations on the very positive role they played in making yesterday's election possible.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, and most important, the credit for victory has to go to the Nicaraguan people. They voted for Violeta Chamorro and a platform that called for reconciliation, an end to the war, an end to the military draft, and the beginning of a new relationship with the United States. The Nicaraguan people have finally spoken after 10 years. Now, Mr. Speaker, the work begins.

A TRIBUTE TO ALL WHO HAVE WORKED FOR DEMOCRACY IN NICARAGUA

(Mr. GUNDERSON asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. GUNDERSON. Mr. Speaker, a number of my Democratic colleagues have risen this morning to suggest that we give former President Carter credit for his role in ensuring free and fair elections in Nicaragua. As a Republican, I am more than ready to concede all the credit in the world to President Carter for his efforts. All I ask in return, however, is that Members on both sides of the aisle, especially the Democratic side, concede to us that our efforts over the last 10 years have also been proper in pursuing a course to give the people of Nicaragua a government that believed in democracy, a government that was committed to the real revolution that the Ortega brothers stood for when they came to power, not the totalitarianism that they imposed over the decade of the 1980's and was rejected yesterday.

President Havel of Czechoslovakia said last week in this Chamber, "Things are happening so fast we don't have time to be astonished." Who would have believed the people have the power within them to turn out and overturn the Government of Nicaragua as they did yesterday?

We hear now discussions of reconciliation in Nicaragua. Let us also have reconciliation in this Congress and in this country. We now have the people's voice in Nicaragua for a government that is free, a government of, by, and for the people. Let us do our part to assist them in making their dream come true this time out.

UNITED STATES-CENTRAL AMERICAN COOPERATIVE APPROACH VINDICATED BY NICARAGUAN ELECTION RESULTS

(Mr. OBEY asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. OBEY. Mr. Speaker, the news that we have heard so far indicates that the election in Nicaragua yesterday demonstrates what can be done when the United States works cooperatively with its regional allies in this hemisphere rather than insisting on a policy which has no supporters but ourselves.

The Sandinistas were able to withstand the pressures from the discredited Contras, but they were not able to withstand the full force of world opinion when that force was effectively applied to regional cooperation led by Costa Rican President Arias and in the end supported by the United States.

The Bush administration is to be congratulated for moving away from the unilateral militarism of the preceding administration. Former House Speaker Jim Wright is also to be congratulated for his leadership role in moving the United States toward support for the regional approach. This vote is a vindication of the insistence of those in the Congress who for so long fought for a policy of regional cooperation and regional cooperative pressure rather than unilateral military confrontation.

A NEW BEGINNING FOR THE NICARAGUAN PEOPLE

(Mr. LIVINGSTON asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Mr. Speaker, the votes are in from Nicaragua and the result is clear: Violeta Chamorro did to Daniel Ortega what "Buster" Douglas did to Mike Tyson—win by a knockout.

Mr. Speaker, the people of Nicaragua yesterday confirmed what many of us have been preaching for 11 years—that the Sandinistas do not have the support of the people and that when given a choice, the people will make that clear.

And make it clear they did. Violeta Chamorro is a remarkable woman. She has triumphed over considerable adversity in her ultimately successful bid. She has had to endure threats and violence from the Sandinistas' legendary turbas divinas—the divine mobs—but through it all, she refused to be cowed.

Mr. Speaker, the Nicaraguan people have lived an almost uninterrupted nightmare for several decades. We all know that the dictator Somoza was no great friend of civil liberties; we now have concrete proof that the Sandinistas are no better, and quite probably are far worse.

The Nicaraguan people have suffered enough. It is incumbent upon Mr. Ortega to respect the wishes of his people and step down. We in the Congress can do our part by making it clear that we are united in the belief that Nicaragua's election was fair and square and that Mr. Ortega must respect its results.

This is no time for partisan squabbles, Mr. Speaker, it is a time to speak with a unified voice. The Nicaraguan people have voted and the fate of their nation depends on their voices being heard.

THE TIMIDITY OF THE S&L BAILOUT LAW

(Mr. VENTO asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. VENTO. Mr. Speaker, last week marked the 1 year anniversary of the submission to Congress of President Bush's S&L legislation. Unlike his predecessor, President Bush stepped to the precipice of the S&L crisis and acted. President Bush appropriately addressed a very significant problem, offered a responsible outline for a solution and worked with the U.S. Congress to improve that proposal. I support the President in those efforts.

Unfortunately, Mr. Speaker, the Bush administration's political courage of February 1989 has turned to political timidity in February 1990. The President has looked into the depths of the Grand Canyon-sized S&L bailout and is backing away. Instead of appointing people to get the job done, the President is looking for people to exercise political damage control. The decision of Frederick Wolf not to assume the job of the director at OTS is the most recent disappointment and further evidence of the lackluster performance of the Bush administration in implementing the S&L bailout law.

Today, Mr. Speaker, the two public representative slots in the important RTC oversight board are still unfilled. The RTC oversight board is headed by an acting president after President Dan Kearney quit 2 weeks ago in frustration with Treasury meddling. There soon will be an acting director to replace the acting director at the Office of Thrift Supervision. All of those posts are keyed to proper enforcement of the tough new S&L bailout law.

Mr. Speaker, the U.S. Treasury and the Bush administration is basing its selection criteria for those posts on whom they can best control, while the cost of the $166 billion S&L bailout mounts by over $14 million a day. It is high time for the administration to get its act together and to muster the political courage and intestinal fortitude being spent on the S&L bailout. It is bad enough to pay for this S&L bailout once, much less paying more tomorrow on account of today's timidity of the S&L bailout law.

FREEDOM CONTINUES ITS MARCH

(Mr. COUGHLIN asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. COUGHLIN. Mr. Speaker, there can be little question that the trend towards democracy that has been so prevalent in Eastern Europe and the U.S.S.R., and which has manifested itself most recently in that region in Lithuania, has further triumphed in Nicaragua. With tremendous bravura, the people of Nicaragua have turned out in huge numbers to elect an opposition movement dedicated to individual rights and a free economy. The National Opposition Union, headed by Violeta Chamorro and known by the Spanish acronym UNO, has waged an uphill battle against an entrenched Sandinista Party that dominated the Nicaraguan mass media throughout the campaign. UNO's success is a tribute to the indomitable spirit of democracy.

I particularly congratulate President Bush, Secretary Baker and the administration on their handling of this sensitive question. It is the policies of the Reagan-Bush years that have helped bring about truly extraordinary change in the world.

Though the United States and the Sandinista leadership of Nicaragua have not enjoyed positive relations over the years, the Sandinistas do deserve our recognition for their apparent willingness to abide by the will of the people. While there have been some reports of irregularities, numerous international observers, including prominent Americans, have concluded that the elections have been the fairest in Nicaragua's history. The Sandinistas deserve credit for realizing that an effort to thwart the popular will would only have further exacerbated the strife that has characterized the Nicaraguan political landscape for a decade.

As the transition to a government unequivocally committed to democracy and individual rights occurs, I am thoroughly optimistic that America's relationship with Nicaragua will change dramatically for the better. I intend to support the normalization of relations as the democratic process further unfolds, and look forward to supporting the administration in its efforts to address Nicaragua's myriad needs.

I know my colleagues join me in hoping that democracy will continue its victorious march, visiting Cuba, Haiti, and every other corner of our planet where dictatorship seeks to deny people their rights and dignity.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT

A message in writing from the President of the United States was communicated to the House by Mr. Kalbaugh, one of his secretaries.

A NEW CHAPTER OPENS IN NICARAGUA

(Mr. McHUGH asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. McHUGH. Mr. Speaker, the election in Nicaragua opens a new chapter in that country, a chapter we all hope will be more peaceful and more prosperous.

Based on current reports, yesterday's election was fair and decisive. We congratulate the Nicaraguan people on their commitment to democracy. We congratulate the Sandinista Government on meeting its pledge to conduct the election in the first place. And, of course, we congratulate the victorious opposition that now has the difficult job of reconciliation and recovery.

Our policy should be to support that reconciliation and recovery in every way we can. That certainly includes disbanding the Contras, lifting the embargo, and normalizing relations with the new government.

We should also try to extend this very same spirit to El Salvador, whose suffering people also crave peace and reconciliation.

IT TOOK A WOMAN TO BRING DOWN ORTEGA

(Mrs. BENTLEY asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend her remarks.)

Mrs. BENTLEY. Mr. Speaker, it took a woman to bring down Ortega.

The Contras couldn't do it; Ollie North couldn't do it; Congress couldn't do it.

A woman, the press, and above all, a people who long to be free have brought about this amazing event. This is a fitting continuation to the developments in Eastern Europe.

Special thanks should go to all those people who went to Nicaragua to guarantee free elections.

The people have spoken.

Congratulations to the citizens of Nicaragua and Violetta Chamorro.

ANNUAL REPORT ON ADMINISTRATION OF THE FEDERAL RAILROAD SAFETY ACT OF 1970

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. VISCLOSKY) laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States, which was read and, together with the accompanying papers, without objection, referred to the Committee on Energy and Commerce:

FREE ELECTIONS IN LITHUANIA BRING COUNTRY A STEP CLOSER TO INDEPENDENCE

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ANNUNZIO] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. ANNUNZIO. Mr. Speaker, this weekend we witnessed a monumental and historic step toward independence for the people of Lithuania. On Saturday, February 24, for the first time in 72 years, the Lithuanian people participated in free elections.

Over 75 percent of eligible voters in Lithuania cast their votes for delegates to the 141-seat Parliament. Of the 123 races now counted, the reform movement, Sajudis, can claim victory for its endorsed candidates in 73 races. These results insure Sajudis majority status in the legislature, and this election is a crushing blow for the Communists. Vytautus Landsbergis, the leader of Sajudis, said that it is very likely that Lithuania will declare independence from the Soviet Union when the Parliament meets in the spring.

Mr. Speaker, this is truly an extraordinary time for Lithuania, and we in the Congress must continue to demonstrate our strong support for the people of Lithuania so that they may continue successfully their journey on the road to independence without interference from the Soviet Union.

A NEW NATIONAL STRATEGY: NEW IDEAS FOR NEW REALITIES

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. SKELTON] is recognized for 30 minutes.

Mr. SKELTON. Mr. Speaker, on Wednesday January 24 of this year I gave a speech from this very spot calling for the development of a new national security strategy. At that time I described the present situation in which our Nation finds itself as analogous to the situation in which we found ourselves in the months after our victory in World War II.

In 1945, there was much joy in America because the war had been won. As we Americans returned to peacetime pursuits, little did we realize the strategic threat which Stalin's Russia would assume. Who would have thought in September 1945 that in less than 5 years the United States would be involved in another war? Few in 1945 would have been able to locate Korea on a map.

Today, there is also much happiness in the West. Our side has won the cold war. I don't dispute that idea. As in 1945, the call has gone out to cut the defense budget. Once again however the future is unclear. Before we reduce our Armed Forces in the manner we have done after every major war we have fought this century, let's take a dispassionate assessment of the threats and challenges that we as a nation face throughout the world.

In many ways the international political landscape has changed considerably in the past few months. Events in the Soviet Union, Eastern Europe, and now in South Africa give us much cause for joy and celebration. The ideals for which this country has stood over the past 50 years have been affirmed throughout the world.

STRATEGIC PROBLEMS

At the same time, however, I noted in my January speech the many developments and challenges in the world that this Nation must still confront. The following is simply a short listing of some of those strategic problems confronting this country today. We must address:

First, a Soviet Union that as it sheds its ideological underpinnings will remain a great power with great power interests;

Second, instability in Eastern Europe;

Third, the unification of Germany;

Fourth, the economic and political integration of Western Europe as symbolized by EC '92;

Fifth, the rise of an economic superpower in the Far East—Japan;

Sixth, the diffusion of chemical and nuclear weapons technology to countries of the Third World in conjunction with the spread of ballistic missile technology;

Seventh, terrorism, drug trafficking, and other forms of low intensity conflict;

Eighth, the need to maintain access to oil and other vital mineral resources for which domestic resources are no longer adequate; and

Ninth, a whole host of other problems I will not mention now due to the shortness of time.

NATIONAL SECURITY STRATEGY

In my speech last month I stated my strong belief that the individual given the principal responsibility for developing a new national security strategy for our Nation must be the President. As a result of provisions included in the Department of Defense Reorganization Act of 1986, the Goldwater-Nichols Act, the President is required to submit a national security strategy to the Congress. The Congress shares the responsibility with the President for ensuring that the Nation has a coherent national security blueprint. Congress, through its power of the purse, must be a partner in the development of such a strategy so that the resources for its implementation can be provided.

And yet, having the President submit a national security strategy by way of legislation that addressed only one department, the Department of Defense, is simply not sufficient. The requirement for developing a national security strategy is one that the Department of Defense cannot do alone. The Defense Department has the principal task of putting together a national military strategy to support the much broader national security strategy. In other words, military strategy is a subset of the national security strategy. The larger task of formulating a national security strategy is an interdepartment and interagency requirement. In addition to the Department of Defense the other players in the formulation of a national security strategy should include: First, the Department of State; second, the Department of the Treasury; third, the Department of Commerce; fourth, the Office of Management and Budget, Fifth, the Agency for International Development; Sixth, the Arms Control and Disarmament Agency; and seventh, the Central Intelligence Agency.

This list is by no means an exhaustive one but it gives a flavor for the input needed if we are to develop a national security strategy that indeed safeguards the interests of the United States in a still dangerous world. And safeguards those interests in all the various facets—diplomatic, political, technological, economic, and military.

SOME LEGISLATIVE OPTIONS

In order to push this process along, I see a possibility of promoting at least four legislative options. They can be promoted singly or all four together as part of a unified effort. The first option, as I noted in my January speech, would be to provide more authority, more power, to the Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff so that he could exercise his stategic planning responsibilities which we sought to give him in the Goldwater-Nichols Act. He in turn could provide the Secretary of Defense a coherent, realistic strategic plan, with a set of alternatives. In this way both the Chairman of the JCS and the Secretary of Defense would be able to link a stronger strategic planning component with the programming and budgeting functions of the PPBS. PPBS stands for "planning, programming, and budgeting system" which was introduced by Robert McNamara in the early 1960's in order to give some coherence to defense politics.

The second legislative option would consist of establishing a national security planning staff within the White House, as part of the National Security Council. Members of such a staff would include representatives of those Departments and agencies listed above. In this way a President could fashion a more coherent national security strategy by involving a wide assortment of key planners from the various departments in a more unified fashion. Tradeoffs among various departments involved in national security matters need to be considered on a continuing basis as the President formulates a national security strategy. While OMB performs that function from a budgetary standpoint it cannot do so from a policy standpoint. Development of a national security strategy has to take into consideration budgetary limitations but it cannot be driven by them.

The third option would consist of establishing a national military strategy planning staff under the direct authority of the Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff. Unlike the present entity responsible for planning in the organization in the Joint Chiefs of Staff, J-5, the new national military strategy planning staff would work exclusively for the Chairman of the JCS. It could be part of J-5 but it would work exclusively for the Chairman.

And finally a fourth option would call for the establishment of a joint committee on national security strategy by the Congress. This would enable Congress to oversee the process in a much more effective manner than currently possible. The interplay between diplomatic, military, and trade issues requires a more comprehensive oversight mechanism by Congress. Today, that oversight is divided among the various oversight committees—Armed Services, Foreign Affairs, Energy and Commerce, just to name a few.

SISYPHUS RECALLED

To accomplish any one of the four legislative options I have described above will entail much effort for there will be much resistance. Organizational change of any institution—whether at the White House, the Department of Defense, or up here on Capitol Hill—is extremely difficult and requires patience. For example, even after two sitting members of the Joint Chiefs of Staff called for substantial changes in the organization of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, it took 4 years to bring those changes about in a meaningful fashion. On many occasions during that long effort I felt much like Sisyphus, the figure of ancient Greek mythology condemned in Hades to roll a huge stone up a hill only to have it roll back down once he had reached the top. At least for those of us involved in that effort, our years of labor were crowned with success in a relatively short period of time. As a result, the Goldwater-Nichols Act is on the law books.

As yet, there is no guaranteee that even if all four pieces of legislation I have briefly described today were to be enacted over the next few months that the system would work any better. Yet the aim is worth the effort. Good, wise, and effective policies cannot be brought about by organizational changes alone. For those policies to be adopted we need good, wise, and effective people in government crafting those policies. But good organizational structures can help those individuls by removing unnecessary obstacles that too often get in the way of crafting those effective policies. In the long run, I firmly believe that the national interests of the United States can be promoted much more effectively with the changes I have proposed. Over the next few weeks and months I will give more detail to the proposals I have touched upon in my speech today in an effort to gather the support that this important task will require.

TARGETING THE BENEFITS OF THE 1990 FARM BILL

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. VISCLOSKY). Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. GLICKMAN] is recognized for 60 minutes.

Mr. GLICKMAN. Mr. Speaker, for all of us who eat, the 1990 farm bill will be the most important legislation this House considers this year. In a political and policy environment dominated by constraints on spending, we have to make hard choices about how we spend each taxpayer dollar. My colleagues and I who serve on the Agriculture Committee, and all of us who share my own perspective on the importance of the 1990 farm bill, will have to make some of the hardest choices in this regard this year. Those choices will require us to spend less than the needs dictate for the continuation of a stable food supply. Those choices will also force us to decide who should get the benefit of the funds available to spend for farm, food, and rural programs?

I commend to my colleagues' attention the remarks the distinguished chairman of the committee, Mr. DE LA GARZA, has made repeatedly on the proportion of total Federal spending allocated to agriculture and farm programs. In comparison to other functions, it is minuscule, yet it continues to be besieged. Indeed, the President in his fiscal year 1991 budget proposed that we cut spending on farm programs by an additional $1.5 billion. This proposed reduction is particularly significant in light of the fact that Federal agricultural spending has been cut over 50 percent in the past few years.

I believe that the Bush administration's agricultural dollar allocation is irresponsible and fails to account for the demonstrated need we have to sustain an adequate, responsible Federal investment in our food security infrastructure. I am confident that in the end, while agriculture will do its share to meet out budget guidelines it will not have to be forced to bear an unreasonable share of cuts as the administration desires and that the ultimate budget reduction will be substantially below the administration's mark.

As I said, while I do not accept the magnitude of these proposed cuts nor the need for cuts at a time of such demonstrated need, I want to set that debate aside and suggest options for making reductions if we are faced with that eventuality. Furthermore, I think it is appropriate for us to consider those reductions in the context of what I believe ought to be our highest priority: Preserving family sized agriculture.

I believe now is the time for us to consider targeting these funds, specifically the funds for income support payments—commonly known as deficiency payments or target price payments—so they go to mid to smaller sized family operators. Now is the time, in some capacity, to place an upper ceiling on the size of farms which qualify for such support, or at least determine eligibility for farm programs to insure that if cuts are made, they are directed at the wealthiest of producers and not to the bulk of family sized operators. While some targeting already exists in the form of a $50,000 payment limitation under the program, there are clearly additional ways to insure the equity and fairness of farm program spending cuts.

Today I want to suggest some options for doing so but most importantly in setting the stage for this debate, I want to bring to the attention of my colleagues a report on farmers' attitudes on these questions and some statistics on this issue. In short, the support for this approach exists in farm country. Just last week my subcommittee completed the last of 10 field hearings in preparation for the writing of the 1990 farm bill. We were fortunate to have traveled to virtually every part of the country and what we heard will be invaluable in writing that legislation as will the views we have collected from other sources, especially as we have to make the tough choices the budget will force upon us. We conducted those hearings because I believe firmly that the new farm bill should reflect the preferences and opinions of those who will be most directly affected by it.

The National Public Policy Education Committee recently released a survey conducted by agricultural economists in 21 States with the assistance of USDA's Economic Research Service, "U.S. Farmers' Preferences for Agricultural and Food Policy in the 1990's." The survey covered many diverse issues and represents the responses of over 12,000 farmers from the heart of farm country.

Two questions in this survey go to the heart of the issue of targeting. When asked to state their preferences for ways to reduce farm commodity program expenditures, 29 percent said they favored percentage cuts across-the-board and 7 percent said they favored deeper cuts. Fifty-two percent of the responding farmers said they favor instead some form of targeting. Thirty-seven percent said they favored directing aid to small farms and 15 percent said they favored giving such support only on the basis of financial need.

When asked whether future farm programs should give more benefits to farmers with annual sales under $250,000, 16 percent of the famers said they disagreed. However, 53 percent of the farmers said they agreed.

On these two questions to test the amount of support for further targeting farm program benefits, farmers favor such a shift in policy. In an era of budget-driven farm policy changes and at a time when rural America is losing population, farmers clearly realize that now is the time to target those limited resources to those who most do indeed need income support and to make sure that our countryside do not lose more farm families.

In view of the fact that substantial support exists for such a change in policy, how will it affect production agriculture, how many farms would be affected? First of all, let me note that I have asked USDA to analyze this question to provide the subcommittee with up to date information for use in preparing an option. However, some figures do exist which I believe will be constructive for Members to review as this debate begins.

According to figures compiled by USDA for 1988, the most recent currently available, there are 2,197,000 farms in the United States. Of that number, 30,000 have gross sales annually in excess of $500,000, less than 1½ percent of total farms.

These farms, however, account for over 8 percent of total Government spending on farm programs, approximately $1,221,000,000 altogether. Each farm in this category earned in excess of $40,000 in direct Government payments in 1988.

In sum, the largest farms in this country earn a disproportionate share of the total payment made under Government programs. Can we continue policies which exacerbate this sort of distribution of Federal resources or, as we are looking at ways to ensure that agriculture programs meet this reasonable share of deficit reduction, can we target these benefits to even out the distribution of benefits, save funds, and ensure that only those farms which need Government income support to remain viable are recipients of the dollars?

I believe we can and we should. I am not alone in my belief. As I noted, farmers in huge numbers share this view. In addition, the President's budget, for all of its other problems, also suggests such a targeting approach which has been picked up by our colleague, Mr. ARMEY of Texas. This proposal to limit spending on farms with adjusted gross incomes in excess of $100,000 annually is too draconian and goes too far.

I am examining alternatives which move in the same direction of targeting, will save dollars, and which will not do undue damage to the agriculture economy. I am examing proposals to place a ceiling on eligibility for income support payments at the following levels of gross farm cash marketings annually: $500,000; $750,000; and $1 million. With the assistance of the USDA's analysis, I intend to have a proposal prepared by the time the subcommittee meets to write its part of the 1990 farm bill. Along the same line, Congress could also phase down those target prices to farmers who have reached a certain size, rather than eliminating them from the program automatically once they have reached that size. There are many, many fair and equitable ways to skin this cat, and I do not at this time want to lock myself into any one proposal, except to say that benefits to the overwhelming majority of farmers and ranchers will be protected and could even be increased under these ideas. For example, it may be possible to actually raise target prices to many producers who are family sized operators by adopting an approach along the lines I have discussed.

In addition to stimulating debate on an income ceiling on income supports, I am also reserving the right to examine further options to target benefits. I believe we should reevaluate the changes made to existing payment limit rules in the 1987 budget bill and effective for the 1989 crops. While these changes, which I played a role in writing and instigating, are steps in the right direction, I am concerned they have fallen short of their intention and that as opposed to limiting farm reorganizations done to capture program benefits, they have simply caused more creative ways to reorganize farms.

I am also concerned about the inequity which prevents farm spouses, in most cases farm wives, from being eligible for assistance. I believe we should examine ways to redress this problem, in recognition of the contribution farm wives make to farm operations, and that we can pay for such a change by further tightening the 1987 payment limit reforms.

Mr. Speaker, I am under no illusion that the proposals I have sketched here today are controversial. There are many questions raised by them: How do you define a family sized operator? Won't these proposals remove the ability of the Government to control supply since big operators will be out of the farm programs? Won't some farmers reorganize their farms just to stay under the new limitations? Will this just create more bureaucracy?

These and other questions are legitimate ones and must be answered successfully to make the ideas of targeting farm programs work. But the fact that proposals are controversial does not mean they are wrong. This is why I came here today to get the debate going and put forward a set of options for the farm community, and others, to discuss. As I indicated at the beginning of my remarks, I do not believe agriculture should be singled out for huge budget cuts and I fully support these programs and the spending which goes into them. At the same time, I also believe we need to make a bold stroke to address questions of fairness, need for Government assistance, need in rural communities, and fiscal constraints while protecting the underlying strength of our Nation's farmers.

The concepts I am raising here just might lead to a gradual restructuring of agriculture away from the trends toward bigness and consolidation we have seen over the past 20 years. Those trends have resulted in a depopulation of rural America, wreaking havoc on rural health care, education, and overall rural infrastructure. Our Federal farm programs should not just be geared to preserve the status quo but should be geared to provide the bulk of the benefits to average sized producers—not just the wealthiest of producers and certainly not to folks who live far away from our farms and have no personal input into farming at all. A farm program truly geared to the family sized operator could do more to repopulate rural America and preserve equity and fairness in our farm programs than just about any other rural development program I can think of. I hope that my colleagues on and off the Agriculture Committee will join me in this effort.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GLICKMAN. I am glad to yield to the gentleman from Montana.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding. I have been listening to him and following his activity and the activities of the other members of the House Agriculture Committee. I want to commend the gentleman from Kansas for his leadership on a coming piece of legislation as well as his leadership through the years on past pieces of farm legislation that mean so much not only to his district and the Midwest, but also to my State of Montana.

I wonder if the gentleman will continue to yield for the purpose of a statement I wish to make with regard to the recent election in Nicaragua.

Mr. GLICKMAN. I am pleased to yield to the gentleman from Montana.

NICARAGUAN ELECTION

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for his courtesy.

There will, of course, be great differences of opinion about how Mrs. Chamorro was elected and why, and what role the United States has had in her election, which I believe is applauded by the majority of the membership of this House.

Let me say though, as one who has opposed American intervention and particularly military assistance in that country consistently since I have been in the Congress, I believe that had America not spent between a half a billion to a billion dollars in attempting to bomb that little nation flat, had we not had the loss of 50,000 lives in that nation and in the surrounding countries, we would have been able to move to an earlier election in Nicaragua, and we would have seen Mr. Ortega and his people voted out of power.

The hard fact is that this Nation, through military intervention, did exactly the opposite of what we had hoped they would do. For all these years we inadvertently kept Mr. Ortega in power because he was able, with his constituencies, to play off his leadership against Yankee imperialism. So all of those years of wasted taxpayers' dollars, all of those lives lost in Central America and throughout Nicaragua have at last we hope now ended through the process that I hope everyone in this House applauds, and that is free, democratic elections throughout Central America and particularly in Nicaragua.

Let me make the point again: What we were attempting to do through military might cannot be done in Nicaragua or anywhere else. It is not bombs that are going to change a nation. If this Nation, if the United States is going to affect democracy in these nations, it will be through penicillin and schoolbooks, and repairing the thatched roofs on classrooms in these countries. It is through sending them textbooks, it is through real, genuine humanitarian aid, and then in assisting them to hold free elections. We cannot export democracy through the barrel of a gun, and yesterday's election in Nicaragua has once again proven, it seems to me, that those who were in favor of humanitarian rather than military assistance in Central America have been proven to be correct.

Again I thank the gentleman for his courtesy in yielding.

Mr. GLICKMAN. I thank the gentleman and also applaud him for the content of his remarks, which are right on target.

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

SPECIAL ORDERS GRANTED

By unanimous consent, permission to address the House, following the legislative program and any special orders heretofore entered, was granted to:

Mrs. MARTIN of Illinois, for 60 minutes, each day, on May 1 and May 2.

(The following Members (at the request of Mr. GLICKMAN) to revise and extend their remarks and include extraneous material:)

Mr. ANNUNZIO, for 5 minutes.

Mr. OWENS of New York, for 5 minutes, each day, on February 27 and 28 and on March 1.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

By unanimous consent, permission to revise and extend remarks was granted to:

Mr. WAXMAN, notwithstanding the fact that it exceeds 2 pages of the RECORD and is estimated by the Public Printer to cost $1,849.

(The following Members (at the request of Mr. GILLMOR) and to include extraneous matter:)

Mr. SOLOMON.

Mr. SCHUETTE.

Mr. FORD of Michigan.

Mr. LEVINE of California.

SENATE BILLS REFERRED

Bills of the Senate of the following titles were taken from the Speaker's table and, under the rule, referred as follows:

S. 535. An act to increase civil monetary penalties based on the effect of inflation; to the Committee on Government Operations.

S. 580. An act to require institutions of higher education receiving Federal financial assistance to provide certain information with respect to the graduation rates of student-athletes at such institutions; to the Committee on Education and Labor.

SENATE ENROLLED JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED

The SPEAKER announced his signature to an enrolled joint resolution of the Senate of the following title:

S.J. Res. 186. Joint resolution designating the week of March 1 through March 7, 1990, as "National Quarter Horse Week."

BILLS PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT

Mr. ANNUNZIO, from the Committee on House Administration, reported that that committee did on the following date present to the President, for his approval, bills of the House of the following title:

On February 22, 1990:

H.R. 2281. An act to amend the Elementary and Secondary Education Act of 1965 to extend the authorization for certain school dropout demonstration programs, and

H.R. 150. An act to amend the Immigration and Nationality Act to provide a procedure for an alien who dies while serving on active-duty with the U.S. Armed Forces during certain periods of hostilities to be considered a citizen of the United States at the time of the alien's death.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. GLICKMAN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 12 o'clock and 56 minutes p.m.) the House adjourned until tomorrow, Tuesday, February 27, 1990, at 12 noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

2567. A letter from the Chairman, Council of the District of Columbia, transmitting a copy of D.C. Act 8-155, "Closing of a Public Alley in Square 105, S.O. 87-336, Act of 1990," and report, pursuant to D.C. Code section 1-233(c)(1); to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

2568. A letter from the Secretary of Health and Human Services, transmitting a draft of proposed legislation to extend and amend programs under the Head Start Act; to the Committee on Education and Labor.

2569. A letter from the Acting Director, Defense Security Assistance Agency, transmitting notification of the Department of the Army's proposed letter(s) of offer and acceptance [LOA] to Greece for defense articles and services (Transmittal No. 90-24), pursuant to 22 U.S.C. 2776(b); to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

2570. A letter from the Acting Director, Defense Security Assistance Agency, transmitting, notification of the Department of the Army's proposed letter(s) of offer and acceptance [LOA] to Greece for defense articles and services (Transmittal No. 90-23), pursuant to 22 U.S.C. 2776(b); to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

2571. A letter from the Deputy Associate Director for Collection and Disbursement, Department of the Interior, transmitting notification of proposed refunds of excess royalty payments in OCS areas, pursuant to 43 U.S.C. 1339(b); to the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs.

SENATE—Monday, February 26, 1990

(Legislative day of Tuesday, January 23, 1990)

The Senate met at 11:30 a.m. on the expiration of the recess, and was called to order by the President pro tempore [Mr. BYRD].

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. As we reverence God, the Senate will be led in prayer by the Senate Chaplain, the Reverend Dr. Richard C. Halverson.

PRAYER

The Chaplain, the Reverend Richard C. Halverson, D.D., offered the following prayer:

Let us pray:

I just learned as I came into the lobby that Frankie Johnson, wife of retired Sgt. Walter Johnson, of the Capitol Police, is very, very ill in the hospital. We want to remember her and any others who might be in this situation in silent prayer.

Bless the Lord, O my soul: and all that is within me, bless his holy name. Bless the Lord, O my soul, and forget not all his benefits: Who forgiveth all thine iniquities; who healeth all thy diseases; who redeemeth thy life from destruction; who crowneth thee with lovingkindness and tender mercies.—Psalm 103:1-4.

Gracious God, perfect in truth, justice, mercy, and love, our Father in Heaven, as we begin this week we want to begin with praise and adoration for Thee. We acknowledge that Thou art the Lord of history, the Ruler of the nations, the Giver of life. We glorify Thee, not because Thou dost need our praise, but our humanness demands it. We need to honor Thee, to worship Thee, and when we fail, we demean ourselves. Save us from pride which refuses to acknowledge Thee, from ambition which seeks only ego-satisfaction, from lust for power that corrupts and destroys.

We need Thee, Lord, never more than when we refuse to acknowledge our need. Help us, we pray, in the name of Jesus whose love is unconditional, universal, and eternal. Amen.

RECOGNITION OF THE MAJORITY LEADER

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under the standing order, the majority leader is recognized.

THE JOURNAL

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Journal of the proceedings be approved to date.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

SCHEDULE

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, this morning, following the time for the two leaders, there will be a period for morning business until 12 noon, with Senators permitted to speak therein for up to 5 minutes each. At noon, the Senate will begin consideration of S. 1430, the national and community service bill. There will be no rollcall votes today. Any votes ordered today relative to S. 1430 will be stacked for tomorrow, Tuesday, with the possibility of votes occurring before the Senate recesses for the conference luncheons tomorrow. I encourage those Senators who wish to offer amendments to S. 1430 to come forward and offer them today. I hope that today we will be able to move ahead with this measure in an expeditious manner.

Mr. President, as I indicated, there will be no rollcall votes today. There will be tomorrow. I expect that we will continue on the national service bill tomorrow until the time of the party conferences. After the party conferences, there will be 2 hours of debate on the motion to proceed to the Armenian resolution, with a vote occurring on the motion to invoke cloture on that resolution at 4:15 p.m.

Following that vote, it is my intention to return to the national service bill and to continue until action is completed on that. It is my hope and intention that we will be in a position to submit a substitute amendment to the clean air bill on Thursday morning and be ready to consider that measure for the remainder of this week and next week, as well, until we complete action on that bill.

ELECTION OF MRS. CHAMORRO

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, the election of Mrs. Chamorro as the next President of Nicaragua is a reaffirmation of the right of people everywhere to determine their own future freely and fairly in an open electoral process. It is yet another example of the desire for democratic government that is being courageously expressed by people throughout the world, people who have been living under Communist totalitarian regimes.

This is a victory for peace and another step toward an ultimate settlement of the conflict in Central America. I congratulate Mrs. Chamorro on her victory and President Ortega on the conduct of the campaign. I hope that the administration will move quickly to assist Mrs. Chamorro's government in working to achieve national reconciliation and economic recovery.

This result also vindicates the bipartisan accord on Central America reached by the congressional leadership and the administration last spring. When the United States turned from promoting war to promoting a peaceful democratic process in Nicaragua, we helped make this result possible. I commend all who participated in that process, especially Secretary of State James Baker who initiated the discussion which led to that bipartisan accord. Let us now all work together with equal cooperation and sincerity to achieve a program to encourage national reconciliation and recovery in Nicaragua.

Mr. President, I yield the remainder of my leader time. I am pleased now to yield to the distinguished Republican leader.

RECOGNITION OF THE REPUBLICAN LEADER

The PRESIDENT pro termpore. Under the standing order, the Republican leader is recognized.

TWO DOWN, ONE TO GO

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, it appears that Daniel Ortega used the same pollster I did in New Hampshire. This time, though, the result is one I can enthusiastically celebrate.

As I look around this hemisphere—at Panama, at Nicaragua, and Cuba—it seems to me it is: two down, and one to go: Noriega is history, and now so is Ortega.

No doubt about it, it is a day—yet another day—to celebrate. The message from Managua is the same simple message we heard in Poland, and in Czechoslovakia, and, in fact, in Lithuania just yesterday—given a free choice, people will always choose freedom.

Given a free choice between Sandinista tyranny and democracy—the people of Nicaragua have ignored intimidation, overcome a stacked-deck, and taken back their own future.

We congratulate them—their President-elect, Mrs. Violeta Chamorro, an extraordinarily brave and tenacious woman; all of those from UNO who stuck together when the chips were down; and most of all the citizens of Nicaragua. They have suffered grievously for many, many years. They deserve peace, freedom, and a fair shot at prosperity.

They have taken a giant first step. But they still have a long way to go.

Last August, I visited Poland, arriving on the very day that Prime Minister Mazowiecki took office. During that visit, I also met with President Jaruselski.

Perhaps the most striking thing that Jaruselski said to me was that he was determined, in his remaining days, to do everything he could to help his country—not as a Communist, but as a Pole. I was convinced at the time that he was sincere. Events since have indicated he was.

I hope that Daniel Ortega will follow President Jaruselski's example.

Much of what happens in the coming weeks will be up to him, and his Sandinista colleagues. The people of Nicaragua have spoken, loud and clear. With every advantage, fair and unfair, in his favor—Ortega has been rejected by something like a 3 to 2 margin.

The people of Nicaragua have "thrown the rascals out." I hope the rascals will accept that verdict, and give up all the levers of power—not only the Presidency, but the armed forces, the state security apparatus, and the entire range of governmental authority.

The people of Nicaragua have elected UNO starting on inauguration day, April 25—UNO should rule.

What about our own policy? Obviously, we all join in celebrating this victory for freedom. Over the years, we have had different prescriptions for restoring democracy to Nicaragua. But we have shared a common goal. There is real hope, now, that our goal can be achieved. And as the majority leader just referred to I think perhaps the turning point may have been the bipartisan accord agreed to between the administration and Republicans and Democrats in the House and the Senate.

But I also believe that the final outcome is a vindication of the Reagan policies over the years, and there is no doubt in my mind that had it not been for the contrast it would never have been an election notwithstanding the bipartisan accord.

For those who have supported Contras over the years, with much criticism—never was that popular with some of the American people—my view is that policy has been vindicated as demonstrated, and perhaps, as I have indicated, that coupled with the bipartisan accord may have led to this outcome.

It is time, now, that we try to form a sound, bipartisan policy, to support Mrs. Chamorro's government and help ensure its long-term success.

In the first instance—as I said—we should insist that the Sandinistas really give up power. So far, Ortega is saying the right things. I hope the Sandinistas follow up his good words with good deeds.

If they do, our three principal concerns will be taken care of.

Nicaragua's unholy alliance with Moscow and Havana.

Sandinista support for the Communist insurgency in El Salvador.

And Sandinista suppression of the Nicaraguan people.

Under those circumstances, we must be prepared to move swiftly to help Mrs. Chamorro succeed.

The first step, of course, is eliminating all of the sanctions now in place against the Sandinista regime. I hope we will do whatever we need to, so that can be accomplished when Mrs. Chamorro becomes President Chamorro on April 25.

But much more will be required. We should—we must—provide her new government with aid. And let us not kid ourselves: We are talking about "big bucks" in aid.

The Nicaraguan economy is flat on its back. "Capital flight" is not a problem—because there is no more capital left to "fly." Foreign investment is nothing but a memory. Domestic investment is zero.

Meanwhile, the country is physically devastated by years of war. Inflation is sky high. Unemployment is the rule, not the exception.

If any newly elected leader ever faced an economic and social emergency, Mrs. Chamorro does.

She needs our help, and she deserves it.

But it raises the same old question—the question we are facing for Eastern Europe, for Panama. Where are we going to get the money?

I hope that the understandable exhilaration that we all feel this morning will give way later today to renewed, sober consideration of the new economic burdens we in this country face.

The world is changing. The frontiers of freedom are expanding. But our bank account is not.

We have great new opportunities, and major new responsibilities. But we do not have one single cent in new revenues to pay for it.

And, as far as I know, we do not have a whole bunch of Senators lining up to introduce legislation to spend more in foreign aid.

So how are we going to pay for it all?

On this day of new freedom in the hemisphere, I do not want to raise an old cry. But the fact is: the only way we are going to pay for new aid to Nicaragua, Panama, Czechoslovakia, name any country—is to look into the foreign aid budget that now exists, and make some tough calls.

This is a new reality. It was not around 6 months ago—a new reality in international affairs. It demands that we at least ask the question: Is it not time to consider some new priorities in American aid? What are our priorities? Are they never going to change? Are we going to go out and find billions of dollars more in foreign aid? How many Senators are going to vote for it? How much? What percent of the American people support it? It will not be a very high percentage.

So I simply pose that question again today, and I hope that all Senators will consider it seriously in the days ahead. I know when I suggested an aid review before, 73 of my colleagues voted. "Oh, don't cut Israel one cent"—73, which would be a clear majority in this Chamber.

I never suggested anything except to take a look at it, some small reduction, right across the board. And again I think the victory of Mrs. Chamorro—in any event, whoever would have won this election—we would have had some new obligations. Maybe there is some money somewhere that was not discovered. Maybe the Presiding Officer can find some in the Appropriations Committee. Maybe I just do not understand how this works—so we do not have to go back and take the review. Once you are in that program, you are never going to be reduced, never going to be examined, and never going to be asked to justify what you received last year as we are in all other programs including agriculture, education, whatever it is.

So it seems to me that this is a happy day for democracy. But I would guess Mrs. Chamorro, when she talks with President Bush, as I am certain she will probably sometime today, will make it clear to President Bush that "we need help. We need American help." That means dollars. It means economic aid. It means investment, and it means eliminating sanctions.

So I just suggest, as I did earlier this year, that perhaps it is time to take a look to see where we can find the money.

Mr. President, I reserve the remainder of my time.

MORNING BUSINESS

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There will now be a period for the transaction of morning business to expire at 12 o'clock noon. Senators are permitted to speak therein for not to exceed 5 minutes each.

The Senator from California [Mr. CRANSTON] is recognized for 5 minutes.

NICARAGUAN ELECTIONS

Mr. CRANSTON. Mr. President, it is wonderful indeed that the Nicaraguan people have finally been able to express their views and elect their own leaders in free and fair elections. President Ortega has already stated that he will cede power to Violeta Chamorro and her newly elected UNO government. I commend all Nicaraguans for participating in this election which spells the end of the Contra conflict and the beginning of a new, democratic era for their war-ravaged country.

I believe that the United States should move swiftly to assist the new Nicaraguan Government. The moment is clear that it is fully in charge in its efforts to bring peace and prosperity to the people of Nicaragua and to improve United States-Nicaraguan ties.

This means we should send an Ambassador immediately. We should also end the embargo and begin to assess the possibility of economic aid. An aid initiative in partnership with the Organization of American States would not only bring economic assistance to Nicaragua but would visibly show the entire region support for the democratic process in Central America.

This election demonstrates that freedom is indeed breaking out all over the world. I am hopeful that a peaceful, democratic Nicaragua will pave the way to a peaceful, democratic Central America.

The Republican leader spoke just now of one way to find the money to help the new Nicaraguan Government, and to cover other unmet underfunded needs.

I suggest there is a better way than the ways suggested by our Republican leader. Astounding developments are occurring in the world, in Central Europe, and in the Soviet Union. We have seen 50 divisions of the Warsaw Pact swept from the table or perhaps swept toward our side of the table. We see the Soviet Union in turmoil, and we see Mikhail Gorbachev seeking to lead the Soviet Union in new and better directions; beginning to test steps toward democracy, beginning to explore moving toward a market-oriented economy.

Plainly the threat that we have perceived for so long from that part of the world against us, against the free world, is greatly diminished. I believe we should take a look at the military budget, figure out exactly what we need under the new circumstances, and then invest only that in security; and plainly, in view of the reduced threat, that should allow for quite substantial savings not so much perhaps in the first year but increasingly large sums in coming years. I find it hard too believe that President Bush, given these changes, has actually asked for a dollar increase in military spending, from $301 billion last year to $306 billion this year. If we reordered our priorities in a sensible way and cut military spending to the degree that we can, consistent with our security, I believe that in the course of time we might well find it possible, A, to reduce the deficit and B, to find the funding we need for assistance to new fledging democracies like those in Central Europe, and now in Nicaragua, to find more funds for housing, health care, education, child care, protecting the environment, rebuilding the infrastructure, and the war against crime and drugs in ways that were impossible and beyond reach; that we might find it possible to do all that without any significant increase in taxation. That would be a new era in America, an era of far larger priorities. I urge my colleagues and I urge the administration to explore how far we can go in the new direction that is opening up to us as the world changes and as freedom takes its march forward.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Mississippi [Mr. LOTT] is recognized for not to exceed 5 minutes.

Mr. LOTT. I thank the Chair.

THE NICARAGUAN ELECTION

Mr. LOTT. Mr. President, I rise to express my enthusiasm, in fact very pleasant surprise, at the results of the election in Nicaragua. If we all had listened just to the media and Washington, and in fact if we had relied on the polling data we were given, it was obvious that President Daniel Ortega was to have been the newly elected leader in Nicaragua.

But that election has proven once again when the people, whether it is in the United States, or Eastern Europe, or Central America, or South America, are given the opportunity to cast votes in a free and fair election, they will make their voices clearly heard not only for peace but also for democracy and freedom.

So I rise to congratulate Violeta Chamorro for her great victory, and also to say that I am very pleased Daniel Ortega has recognized that the people have elected Mrs. Chamorro and her UNO coalition. I hope there will be a swift and orderly transition to this democratically elected government; that the United States will quickly send an Ambassador to Nicaragua; that we will lift all sanctions we have had imposed against Nicaragua; and, yes, we will find ways to provide assistance to a country that is flat on its back, because the people now have reached out for opportunity and for freedom and we need to assist them as they get on their feet and trying to make this fledging democracy work.

I am very pleased that we will see an end to the oppression of the Sandinistas, but I do not think this is the time we should say it is this group's fault or that person's fault or to this or that person's credit. I think the credit goes to the people of Nicaragua for this great victory.

I want to also emphasize one other thing which I do not think we talk enough about in this country and that is we have not been seeing democracy and freedom move just in Eastern Europe; it has been happening finally in South America and Central America. In country after country that has had a military dictatorship or socialistic government, with all kinds of oppression, they are moving toward demoracy.

I hope we can now look at this new government in Central America and build on it a better relationship with the United States and all of the other Central American countries and in fact South America, because when you look at those countries and the battles they are fighting, like in Argentina where they are trying so hard to move away from government domination to freedom of the people, or countries like Honduras and El Salvador, they are moving in the right direction; they are moving toward a system that we in America love and appreciate so much, free enterprise and democracy. I commend them all. I am real excited about what we see happening in Central America, and I am especially excited about what we see happening in Nicaragua.

I thank the Chair. I yield the floor.

Mr. President, I observe there is not a quorum present.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The absence of a quorum has been suggested. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

CHAMORRO VICTORY

Mr. LIEBERMAN. Mr. President, Violeta Chamorro's apparent victory in the Nicaraguan elections is good news for the people of that country, and good news for democracy. The grassroots movement toward freedom is not limited to Eastern Europe; the people's desire for basic human rights is being heard from the Soviet Union to South Africa to Central America. The people of the world continue to make history by relegating their oppressors to the scrapheap of history.

I urge President Bush to recognize the new Government of Nicaragua, and I hope we can play a role in helping Nicaraguans build a strong foundation of freedom and opportunity. I was pleased to have supported legislation which provided funding for the National Endowment for Democracy. That organization helped make sure that the election was fairly conducted.

With democracy sweeping the world, attention will be focused on the remaining bastions of repression. That includes Cuba, where Fidel Castro continues to try to swim against the tide of freedom. For Fidel Castro, reading the news this morning is like reading the handwriting on the wall. It is twilight in the age of the dictator. His continued presence on the world stage would be comic, were his rule not so deadly.

THE ANNIVERSARY OF THE ALAR CONTROVERSY

Mr. LIEBERMAN. Mr. President, it was exactly one year ago today that the great Alar controversy began. It was a Sunday evening, and a report on CBS' "60 Minutes" disclosed that this pesticide was still being widely used on apples, despite the fact that the Government had known it was a probable human carcinogen for 17 years.

My wife and I watched that episode, and we were particularly disturbed to learn that many scientists and doctors believe that children are at greater risk from pesticides like Alar than had previously been suspected. We immediately threw out apple juice and apple sauce that we had been giving to our baby girl Hana.

The day after the "60 Minutes" broadcast, on February 27, 1989, the Natural Resources Defense Council released its report, "Intolerable Risk: Pesticides in Our Children's Food." That report not only disclosed in detail the failure of Government to get Alar off the market, it demonstrated the Environmental Protection Agency's inability to regulate a whole host of pesticides on our foods, many of which may threaten our health.

The Alar controversy provoked action throughout the land. Here is Washington, hearings were held, and through them the public became more aware of the extent to which they are exposed to chemicals on their foods. My colleague, Senator HARRY REID, was a real leader in efforts to expose the problems associated with Alar and pesticide regulation, and I was proud to work with him on the Toxic Substances Subcommittee of the Environment Committee. I joined with Senator REID and several of our colleagues in legislation to ban Alar, despite the fact that the company that makes Alar was headquartered in my State. Finally, in June, the Alar manufacturer agreed to withdraw Alar from the market.

It is now 1 year later. Apples are free of Alar, but not much else has changed. Our system of regulating pesticides—which resembles a cross between a Rube Goldberg invention and a Joseph Heller novel—remains intact, so to speak. No significant improvements have been made in Government regulation of pesticides. The pesticide EBDC was targeted for withdrawal from use on many foods last December, but that was 19 years after the Government learned that it posed a threat to human health. Actual removal of EBDC from those foods could take many more years to accomplish; and it will still be allowed for use on potatoes and tomatoes, two vegetables often eaten by children.

Mr. President, we need sweeping changes in the way our Government controls chemcials on the food we eat. I am now drafting legislation which would ensure that pesticides known to be damaging to human health are removed far sooner than they can be under current laws and regulations. My bill will also provide for the periodic expiration of pesticide registrations to ensure that bureaucratic delay does not prevent the removal of harmful substances from the food supply. Simply put, the shoe must be on the other foot. Only people should be presumed innocent until proven guilty, not chemicals.

My bill will also requires the Environmental Protection Agency to pay closer attention to the health risks faced by children when it makes pesticide registration decisions. The EPA will also be required to review the cumulative effect of pesticides on our food; fruits and vegetables often contain many pesticides which may interact. The Government should examine food and chemicals in the context of how they are eaten, not as isolated substances to be considered separately in laboratory settings.

And finally, I intend to make sure that the EPA's Scientific Advisory Panel—which reviews all pesticides decisions—contains at least one public health specialist and one pediatrician. Members of that panel should also provide full disclosure of their consulting activities prior to and during service on the panel. Disclosure is necessary to avoid the kinds of conflicts of interest we have experienced in recent years with the Scientific Advisory Panel.

The President once indicated a desire to change pesticide regulations, too. Back in October, he made a speech about the subject. The few proposals he made at that time were clearly insufficient to provide for the kind of major change in pesticide regulation I believe is necessary to protect public health. Since that time, he has completely failed to provide us with any actual legislation. His administration has demonstrated the same kind of lack of initiative in proposing changes in the law as the EPA has demonstrated in enforcing it.

On this anniversary of the beginning of the Alar controversy, let us rededicate ourselves to the pursuit of better laws, and faster, more effective regulation of the chemicals that exist on the food we all eat. Alar is gone, but hundreds of potentially harmful pesticides remain, so our fight must endure.

DESIRE FOR DEMOCRACY

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, the results of the elections in Nicaragua are a dramatic tribute to the irresistible desire for democracy by the people of Nicaragua, and an equally dramatic repudiation of the repressive totalitarian rule of the Sandinistas.

All of us hope that the transition to the Government of President-elect Chamorro will be peaceful, and that the years of confrontation between the United States and Nicaragua are finally over.

A free Nicaragua will find Congress and the administration ready to join Nicaragua in building a new partnership for peace and progress in Central America and throughout our hemisphere.

TRANS-ANTARCTIC INTERNATIONAL EXPEDITION

Mr. DURENBERGER. Mr. President, I take this occasion to give my weekly update on the six-man Trans-Antarctica expedition. This will be my last as the team will accomplish its 4,000-mile, 6-month dogsled traverse of Antarctica this coming weekend. They are about 140 miles away from their destination, which is the Soviet research station at Mirnyy.

Next week we will be celebrating their accomplishment and, Mr. President, on Tuesday next I will introduce a joint resolution honoring the team and its accomplishment.

In addition, the team will come to Washington on March 26 so I will introduce them, and hopefully as importantly a couple of their dogs, to the Senate.

Right now, the team is racing to meet a Soviet icebreaker at Mirnyy that must leave by March 5 or risk being locked in by ice. Winter is coming to the southern hemisphere, and the team is experiencing its most extreme weather. A week ago temperatures dropped to lower than 50 degrees below zero with winds over 30 miles per hour and a windchill of over 110 degrees below zero.

As the team gets close to Mirnyy, they descend from the Antarctic plateau toward the sea. The temperatures are warmer but storms are more frequent and violent. Winds on the coast at Mirnyy have been clocked at as much as 180 miles per hour. The weather extremes are comparable to that which they faced on the Antarctic Peninsula last fall.

Storms are dangerous and make travel impossible because of poor visibility. It was a storm that trapped the famous South Pole explorer Robert Scott 11 miles from his food cache in 1912. Scott and his crew, as we know, perished.

In this final stretch, the team faces dangerous crevasses like those on the peninsula. Crevasses are formed when glaciers move downhill to meet the sea. As the glaciers move great cracks and fissures occur, often 50 feet deep. To minimize the danger of falling into a hidden crevasse, the team is following the path laid out by Soviet trucks that travel between their Vostok and Mirnyy bases. The trucks use radar to detect dangerous crevasses.

Awaiting the team's arrival at Mirnyy are journalists from all over the world. Television crews from Japan, France, Italy, Australia, the Soviet Union, and the United States will record the team's historic finish. French and Japanese television stations plan major live coverage of the finish, and ABC Sports, which has given several updates, will televise a 90-minute special on March 25.

In addition, reporters like Angus Phillips of the Washington Post have written stories on the expedition.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Phillips article be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

WARM WELCOME AWAITS ANTARCTIC CROSSERS

(By Angus Phillips)

With Southern Hemisphere winter closing in, Minnesotan Will Steger plods on, leading an international team of five men, three sleds and 40 dogs down a narrow, fozen track toward the conclusion of man's greatest Antarctic adventure.

Steger's 4,000-mile trek across the barren continent is due to end at Mirnyy on the east coast March 2, right on schedule, ending a 6½-month test that started inauspicously but is finishing in style.

The team has steadily clocked days of 26, 27, 28 and even 30-plus miles since leaving Vostok, the coldest place on Earth, on Jan. 22 for the final 850 miles to the sea. The way is easier now as the men trudge downhill, following the track of a Soviet tractor used to ferry scientists between Vostok and the port at Mirnyy.

Over the weekend, Steger's crew winnowed the remaining distance to about 200 miles, but the final stetch is expected to take longer than usual as the trekkers are joined by a French camera crew, which will document their triumphant last steps.

If the $11 million voyage, the first nonmotorized crossing of Antarctica, seems assured of success, it's only as certain as things get at 75 degrees south latitude.

"In Antarctica you can't count on anything," said Jennifer Kimball Gasperini, U.S. coordinator of the expedition, who regularly talks with Steger by radio. "In the next week or so it will probably get down to minus-79 degrees Fahrenheit, which is extremely hard on man and dogs, and the weather gets worse the nearer they get to the sea. Winds in Mirnyy have been recorded up to 180 mph.

"Storms are dangerous. Remember, in 1912 [South Pole explorer Robert] Scott perished only 11 miles from his food cache. A blizzard came up, they couldn't move and they died there. The same thing could happen here."

And if the explorers lose their trail in a storm, crevasses are a serious peril, she said. "But we feel very confident right now, and they're confident."

That's a big change from the early days of the voyage, when Steger's group weathered a 60-day storm on the rugged Antarctic Peninsula, with day after day of winds up to 100 mph and temperatures of 45 below. The storms left the group tentbound for 13 days and they arrived at the halfway point at the South Pole 10 days behind schedule, with continuation of their trip in jeopardy.

But they got help from the Soviet science mission there, which donated fuel to help set up food caches by airplane along the 800-mile "Area of Inacessibility" east of the Pole. All has gone smoothly since.

"We've had no major crises since the Pole," said Gasperini. "The first half of the trip was far more difficult than anyone imagined, but the second half has gone pretty much as planned."

Steger, 45, and his co-leader, Frenchman Jean-Louis Etienne, 43, organized the voyage to call attention to the environmental fragility of the Antarctic and the need for international cooperation to protect it. Their colleagues are from the Soviet Union, England, China and Japan.

But in his lastest dispatches from the trail, Steger writes mostly about his troubles as the cold sets in. In order to write in his journal, "The usual procedure in the morning is to warm these pages over the Coleman stove. This drives away moisture and heats the pages so the ink will dry. The other instrument, the pen, is placed immediately upon getting out of the bag in my crotch for a five-minute warming session. This wakes the ink into a liquid state."

Britisher Geoff Somers chronicles his morning ritual: "All the inside of the tent is covered in ice. Your sleeping bag is hard and stiff with ice. And you're stiff, your back aches. You crawl out into these freezing temperatures and you feel absolutely horrible. The first thing to do is light the stove. Touch the bottle and it's minus-50 Fahrenheit . . . then you get the matches, and as soon as you open the box, ice forms on the matches. It's colder than a deep freeze. . . . All you want to do is stay in your bag. But you have no choice . . . you have to go."

The worst dangers of the final stretch, however, have been sidestepped by following the track of the Soviet tractor, which is equipped with radar to detect hidden crevasses that could swallow the team whole. This outside assistance was part of the original plan, Gasperini said. "We couldn't have succeeded without it."

The trekkers are rushing to meet a Soviet ice-breaker that will carry them and a group of Soviet scientists out of Antarctica March 5, just before sea-ice closes the region. Their voyage has attracted world attention, and television crews from Italy, Japan, Australia, the Soviet Union, France and the United States are flying to Mirnyy to record the final steps. ABC-TV plans to air a live segment on March 5 during "Wide World of Sports," and a 90-minute special March 25, Gasperini said.

Steger, who led the first unresupplied trek to the North Pole three years ago with his dog sleds and five companions, will embark on a publicity tour when he returns to the United States to plug his book, "Saving the Earth; a Citizens Guide to Environmental Action."

Eventually, however, he plans to retreat to the log cabin he built three miles from the nearest road in Ely, Minn.

Any chance the slender, bespectacled adventurer will become star struck by success?

"I doubt it," said Gasperini. "He's lived on $3,000 a year most of his life. He doesn't have electricity; he doesn't have running water. He's one of nine kids from a very conservative family. He doesn't care for fancy hotels. He just wants to use his life to promote the environment and work for a cleaner world. Fame is probably one his biggest fears."

Mr. DURENBERGER. Mr. President, I am very pleased that the team is receiving this media attention. They deserve it. They deserve international recognition of their accomplishments.

Also, as the world debates the future of Antarctica, it is important that we understand that although the continent is a barren and hostile land, it is also very fragile. Intrusions last forever. The huts and garbage of 19th century explorers are still present for modern scientists and tourists to see.

Through the expedition, citizens of the world are more aware of this often overlooked continent. For this, the team has performed not only a historic feat but provided a valuable service to the future of mankind.

CONGRATULATIONS TO THE NICARAGUAN PEOPLE

Mr. DURENBERGER. Mr. President, I rise to extend my most sincere congratulations to the people of Nicaragua for their great democratic victory in the elections yesterday. Against considerable odds, the Nicaraguan opposition has secured a stunning victory. The people have courageously expressed their political will in what turned out to be an overwhelming vote for peace, democracy, and, hopefully, for prosperity.

The elections yesterday are the first step in a long process of democratization. The next few months will be crucial for the people of Nicaragua.

The struggle, as we know, is not yet over. In some sense it may just be the beginning. Sandinista actions in the aftermath of the elections will be critical.

Will the Sandinistas relinquish power in a peaceful transition as they have pledged to do? Will they give up Sandinista party control of the military, of police, of the security forces as they pledged to do? Will they in coordination with the demobilization of the Contra army drastically cut the size of their military and security forces, which they have been trying to get all of the rest of the Central Americas to do? And will the Sandinistas finally end their support for the FMLN guerrillas in El Salvador?

Mr. President, nothing has surprised us more in a year full of surprises than that election. But not to underestimate the value of elections, I think Americans will be watching events in Nicaragua very closely. We now also have the opportunity to forge a new and constructive relationship not only with Nicaragua but El Savador, Guatemala, Honduras, and Costa Rica. The new leaders of this country will have even tougher obligations than we. They must rebuild after a natural disaster. Managua has been visited in the 1970's by two terrible earthquakes. But nothing has been closer to a natural disaster than the political and economic problems this country has faced in the last 10 years. The new leaders will have a huge problem just to heal the divisions between the Nicaraguan people.

The first election like this, in El Salvador, its neighbor, was held in 1982 and the first one really comparable in 1984 and look how far the El Salvadorans remain from peace. So it is a huge, huge undertaking for Mrs. Chamorro.

And third, the new leadership will be responsible for making Nicaragua a responsible member of a regional effort to bring peace and eventually prosperity to all of these countries—again, an enormous undertaking to a very, very small country.

Mr. President, I know Nicaragua. I have known Nicaragua since the early seventies. I cannot imagine a time which has been more significant to the people of this country than today. And if I were to give any words of encouragement to any of my colleagues, I would say if I had to pick any one of the countries whose people do have the capability of coming back and taking on this responsibility, I think it is Nicaragua.

The United States should move to normalize diplomatic relations, to lift the trade embargo with Nicaragua. We also have an obligation to the people of Nicaragua to provide economic aid to assist them in rebuilding their economy and assisting in building democratic institutions.

In conclusion, Mr. President, I would like to say just a couple of words to Daniel Ortega and to other members in the junta. For those who have followed the history of this country, I must say it is you, the Ortega brothers, and others who really began the revolution to democracy in Central America. It was not the President of the United States. It was not the CIA. It was not any of the so-called democratic institutions of this country. It began with the people who took to the hills in the sixties and seventies against the Somoza regime. It is these people who began the revolution to democracy when they went to the hills. Few people endorsed their tactics. No one today endorses their tactics. But the results are in that election.

The question has always been whether or not the members of the junta who took control in Nicaragua had a greater commitment to their politics, which was unquestionably Marxist-Leninist, or to their country.

And so I stand here today, Mr. President—I know I am remote from Mr. Ortega and others—to say this is a great opportunity for the people who were the true revolutionaries in that country, who were the people who sought to bring some kind of a representative system to what was a totalitarian country, to prove that their interests are in the people of Nicaragua and the future of that tremendous country rather than in their own political ideology.

HOPES RISE FOR THE RELEASE OF TERRY ANDERSON

Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, I rise to inform my colleagues that today marks the 1,808th day that Terry Anderson has been held in captivity in Beirut.

I would also like to make note of a little-remarked but quite positive development which took place over the weekend. On Friday, February 23, the Washington Post reported that the Tehran Times, which usually expresses the views of Iran's President Ali Akbar Hashemi Rafsanjani, called for the release of all foreign hostages being held in Lebanon. The next day, according to the Post, Sheik Mohammed Hussein Fadlallah, spiritual leader of the pro-Iranian Hezbollah, also advocated freedom for the 17 hostages in Lebanon, 8 of whom are Americans. The Tehran Times and the Shiite cleric both pointed out that dramatic changes in the world order are now requiring the Muslim world to rethink some of its present policies.

These reports, though buried in the back pages of the Post, are no small thing. Here we have a media arm of the Iranian Government, and a chief cleric of one of Lebanon's major fundamentalist parties saying that it is time to seek out humanitarian means for resolving the hostage situation in Lebanon. Indeed, the indefatigable Peggy Say, who was in Damascus pleading for the release of her brother Terry Anderson, called the statements "the most encouraging news that I have heard."

In recent months, as we know, ideological dogmatism has rapidly been giving way to reason in many areas of the world. For the sake of the hostages and their families, let us hope that the news of these latest reports signals to us that the same transformation is beginning to take place—even if on a very small scale—in the Near East.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the two Washington Post articles, as well as a New York Times article on the subject, be reprinted in the Post at this point in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the articles were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

TEHRAN PAPER CALLS FOR UNCONDITIONAL RELEASE OF HOSTAGES

(By Sharif Imam-Jomeh)

TEHRAN, February 22.—The English-language Tehran Times, which usually voices the opinions of President Ali Akbar Hashemi Rafsanjani, called today for the unconditional release of all foreign hostages being held in Lebanon, saying that Iran can continue its "rightful struggle against the West" in other ways.

Diplomats and analysts here and abroad said it was unclear what would be the effect of the call, which appeared in no other Iranian news media. In Damascus, however, Peggy Say, sister of Terry Anderson, the longest-held American hostage, wept at the report and called it "the most encouraging news that I have heard," Reuter news service reported.

The Tehran Times said all the factions in Lebanon "should regard the hostages as victims of imperialist policies of the West and make attempts to get them all freed." It complained that the continued captivity of the hostages has benefited Western propaganda against Iran, and said, "Maybe 1990 will be the year for the release of all the hostages."

The editorial reflected many of the points made by Rafsanjani in a speech to parliament Tuesday, in which he said he saw the political upheaval in the Soviet bloc posing threats to countries such as Iran.

"The world is getting unipolar," Rafsanjani said. "Lots of chances of independent countries to exploit the conflicts between superpowers are fading. Conflicts are turning into understandings that mainly benefit those who are hostile to us."

Iran has pressed for Moslem unity as a response to the changed world situation, and the editorial suggested that release of the hostages could further that goal.

Lebanese militants, most of them pro-Iranian and believed to be under Tehran's influence, hold 17 Western hostages, including eight Americans.

Say was in Damascus today as part of a campaign seeking the release of her brother, Middle East correspondent for the Associated Press, who was abducted March 16, 1985.

"I have been hoping very much for this kind of statement," she told Reuter. "All we can do now is to wait and see how those people in Lebanon would react. I do not personally consider Tehran the problem. I consider it part of the solution.

SHIITE CLERIC CALLS FOR RELEASE OF HOSTAGES

BEIRUT, February 23.—The spiritual leader of Hezbollah, believed to be an umbrella organization for Moslem groups holding hostages, said today the 18 Western captives in Lebanon should be freed.

"We have to think of finding realistic and humanitarian means to free the foreign hostages," Sheik Mohammed Hussein Fadlallah said in a sermon at today's prayers in Bir el-Abed, a district in the Shiite Moslem slums of south Beirut.

"This problem has been widely exploited by Western forces to distort the image of Islam and Moslems," he said

Fadlallah is the spiritual leader of Hezbollah, or Party of God, which is allied with Iran.

Fadlallah's statement came a day after the English-language Tehran Times, which is close to Iranian President Ali Akbar Hashemi Rafsanjani, said the hostages should be freed because they had become a propaganda tool of Iran's enemies. The editorial was the first known call by an Iranian newspaper for freeing the hostages.

Shiite kidnappers are believed to hold most of the hostages who include eight Americans, four Britons, two West Germans, two Swiss, an Italian and an Irishman.

Said Fadlallah, "There should be a new study of this problem in order to be able to bring about a political and humanitarian solution that guarantees the freedom of the captives and the rights of Moslems."

HOSTAGE'S SISTER AGAIN TOURS MIDEAST

(By Alan Cowell)

CAIRO, February 23.—As her brother approaches the fifth anniversary of his kidnapping in Beirut, Peggy Say has embarked on her fourth tour of this troubled region to keep people from forgetting about him and the other foreigners still held in Lebanon.

This time, she said in a telephone interview from Damascus, she has gotten a sense that "everybody is trying their best" to get her brother, Terry A. Anderson, a correspondent for The Associated Press, and 16 other Westerners, freed. Everybody, that is, except their faceless, elusive captors.

Perhaps the most positive signal, she said, was an editorial in The Teheran Times on Thursday that urged that the hostages be released.

"Regardless of the West's propaganda ploys, Muslim forces, out of Islamic and humanitarian considerations, should work to get the hostages free with no conditions," the newspaper said. Within Iran's faction-ridden politics, the newspaper is seen by Western analysts as close to President Hashemi Rafsanjani.

A STRONG SIGNAL

"I had a very emotional reaction to that story," Mrs. Say said. "It was a strong signal, I believe, that Iran is not so much the problem as part of the solution." The issue, she said, is "how those people in Lebanon react."

Iran is viewed as the sponsor of several militant Islamic groups in Lebanon, but the direct lines of support are generally held to run to figures in the Teheran leadership who hold less conciliatory views than President Rafsanjani.

Mr. Anderson was kidnapped in Muslim West Beirut on March 16, 1985, and is one of eight Americans still believed to be in captivity. Western diplomats say they believe that he is held by the pro-Iranian group Islamic Holy War.

Along with representatives of The Associated Press and her husband, David, Mrs. Say has met with members of the European Parliament, the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, known as Unesco, Pope John Paul II and Yasir Arafat, the chairman of the Palestine Liberation Organization.

When she talked with Mr. Arafat in Tunis, Mrs. Say said, "he admitted to me that he had no real influence."

"However, if he finds himself in a position to exert influence, he said he would do so," she said.

In the complex patchwork of Lebanon's myriad militias, armed groups, proxy forces and conventional armies, Mr. Arafat's P.L.O. fighters recently sided with a pro-Syrian Shiite Muslim group, Amal, against a pro-Iranian Shiite Muslim group, the Party of God.

The conflict between the rival Shiite groups has also damaged relations between their sponsors in Damascus and Teheran, reducing Syria's ability to press Iran for a release of the Western hostages, diplomats in Damascus say.

Mrs. Say met on Thursday night with the Syrian Foreign Minister, Farouk al-Sharaa, in Damascus.

"I would say that everybody, including the Syrians, sees it in their best interests for this situation to end and because of that conviction everybody is trying to do their best," she said.

Syria maintains 40,000 troops in Lebanon but has resisted demands that it free hostages by force. A high Syrian official said no one had provided the "address" where hostages were kept. A previous effort to storm a place where hostages were said to be held ended in Syrian casualties but nothing else, because the information was wrong, the official said.

Western diplomats in Damascus said there was no indication that any release of hostages was imminent. The diplomats said it was possible that with tensions high on virtually all fronts in Lebanon, the hostages were under closer guard than ever.

Mr. Anderson has been held longer than any Western hostage and has been able to communicate with his family only through occasional videotapes released by his captors.

SHEIK ASKS RELEASE OF HOSTAGES

BEIRUT, LEBANON, February 23.—A leading pro-Iranian Muslim cleric appealed today for the release of Western hostages in Lebanon, saying the West had used their plight to defame Islam.

The cleric, Sheik Mohammed Hussein Fadlallah, the spiritual mentor of the Party of God, issued the appeal during Friday prayers. The sheik visited Iran this month.

"We have to find practical and humanitarian means to free the kidnapped foreigners because this issue has been exploited a lot by Western powers in order to disfigure the image of Islam and Muslims," he said.

A LOOK BACK: THE COLD WAR ERA

Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, few journalists have reported the cold war from the front lines so intelligently and extensively as Flora Lewis of the New York Times. Now she is doing as much with the transition from that era to a new period of history. On Saturday, she paused a moment to look back. The result was masterful.

I ask unanimous consent that her column be reprinted in the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the column was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the New York Times, Feb. 24, 1990]

A NECESSARY COLD WAR?

(By Flora Lewis)

PARIS.—Unraveling the cold war is causing enormous concern and unease. The big headaches confronting Europe would have been settled long ago if World War II hopes had been fulfilled for maintaining at least friendly East-West relations, if not an actual alliance.

There's no counting the number of lives lost and ruined because of the cold war—in wars such as Korea, Vietnam, Cambodia, Afghanistan, in repression, in suspicion that led to persecution in the West as well as the East. There's no counting the amount of resources wasted on huge armies and devastating weapons.

If hopes are fulfilled for an end to the global power-ideology conflict of the last four decades, future generations will wonder what drove their forefathers to such madness. Did they really mean to nuclearize each other out of existence? Did each side really imagine it had the ultimate answer to the good society and could only survive by doing in its rival?

Communism is an ideology, a system that claimed with "scientific certainty" that it knew how to resolve all social problems and that it had a monopoly on historical foresight. Capitalism was never more than a method for bringing together what it takes to produce—labor, tools, management—with no pretense that constant adjustment of the social machinery would not be necessary. The dispute wasn't between two creeds but between the messianic and the practical view of making things work.

Now Mikhail Gorbachev and his Foreign Minister, Eduard Shevardnadze, tell the world there is no difference in basic values. In that case, what was the fight about?

In Ottawa a week ago, Mr. Shevardnadze did admit that "our country took too much time grappling with the dilemma" of truth versus happiness, whether "to prefer the anxiety of someone who knows the truth or the tranquillity of those who ignore it." And to prove the right choice had been made at last, he said candidly, "Today our country is indeed sick."

But having recognized "universal human values and the dignity of the individual," having "renounced force as an instrument for solving any domestic or foreign problems," seeking friends not enemies, he pronounced, "Such a state has to survive."

"We shall become not only a big and strong country but a genuinely comfortable and civilized home for women and men," he said.

Whether or not the Muscovite prediction comes closer to the target this time than when Stalin proclaimed the "inevitable" victory of Communism, or when Khruschev told the West "We will bury you," Mr. Shevardnadze's forecast had a different tone.

So the answer probably has to be that the cold war was, unfortunately, necessary. There were absurd excesses, of course, in the witch hunts, the secrecy, the military extravagance of the American response. It is strange now to recall what panic, what lack of confidence drove the democracies to feel they were in danger of being overwhelmed by Communist ideas, not only by Red armies.

There was an unacknowledged link between the Victorian idea of inevitable progress, the promise of the Industrial Revolution, and the Marxist idea of inevitable collapse, the demons of the Industrial Revolution devouring themselves. It stokes fears that the ideologists had a better crystal ball, or a master plan, that might be irresistible and therefore had to be resisted at any cost. President Kennedy pledged we would "pay any price" to preserve our own vision.

We may have paid more than required. But it is questionable that the understanding awakening in the world that there will always be problems, that utopias are mythical, would have been achieved without the demonstration that the cold war provoked. There is a more skeptical idea of progress now, a realization that there will always be trade-offs that bring pain as well as benefit.

The key lesson is not that righteousness will triumph—both sides wallowed in righteousness—but that there is need for a certain humility in establishing man's place. Perfect systems bring perfect disaster. Leaving room for error, and admitting error in ways that encourage correction, offer a better chance. That is the great strength of democracy, which isn't an ideology either but a way of enabling people to settle quarrels by argument instead of force.

There is still a yearning for a grand design, a guaranteed formula to discern and deflect the tide of history. It is a romantic notion, and while romantic ideals have their role as inspiration, they are the source of catastrophe when they are imposed by dreamers who acquire might. If it took the cold war to destroy the illusion that the grubby real world can be ignored, it was worth it. Now for getting on with everyday repairs, which makes all the difference.

JAPANESE TRADE BARRIERS ON AMERICAN WOOD PRODUCTS

Mr. GORTON. Mr. President, I wish today to address an issue of utmost importance in our trade relations with Japan—our efforts to open the Japanese wood products market.

We have been told repeatedly by some Japanese opinion leaders that there is nothing that America makes that the Japanese people want to buy. That is utter nonsense. Japanese consumer, for example, are eager to buy American wood products, if only they were allowed to do so.

It is important that Super 301 negotiations with Japan on wood products succeed. Although our wood products industry is the most efficient in the world, its access to the Japanese market is limited by a web of trade barriers. Those barriers include sky-high tariffs on value-added products, unnecessary building code and standards restrictions, subsidies, and a closed distribution system.

The elimination of these barriers could increase our exports to Japan by as much as $2 billion a year, as well as create or maintain 10,000 American mill jobs. Thousands of other jobs in transportation and other related industries might well be created as well. While many of these jobs would be in the State of Washington, others would be generated across the country.

In addition, Mr. President, we should not be satisfied to eliminate only one or two of Japan's most egregious barriers. It is the cumulative effect of the intricate web of trade barriers, working together, that keeps our wood products out of the Japanese market. The U.S. Trade Representative is working to eliminate the entire range of barriers, and I applaud those efforts. In addition, of course, the President of the United States now seems likely to meet the newly reelected Prime Minister of Japan, and I hope this subject comes up at that meeting as well.

Mr. President, consider this example of the type of barriers U.S. companies face: An American firm developed a fire retardant coating for wood that prevents the spread of flames. The Japanese Government requires that all building materials undergo testing with an open flame to determine combustibility. Because the American product actually puts out the flame, Japanese bureaucrats have refused to approve it. That absurd practice has denied United States companies export opportunities and Japanese consumers safer building materials.

Japan simply must stop that kind of behavior. We should let the Japanese Government know—in no uncertain terms—that we expect real results from the Super 301 negotiations, results that are measurable in the marketplace. We will not be satisfied with excuses, half-measures, or cosmetic concessions.

Opening the wood products market would also provide real benefits to the Japanese consumer. Houses in Japan are so small that the Japanese have come to call them "rabbit hutches." The price of the average condominium in Tokyo is now eight times a wage earner's annual income. By comparison, the price of an average home in the United States is only three times the average household income. Even at those prices, the average Japanese has half the living space that the average American enjoys. The Government of Japan could improve the quality and affordability of housing for its own people by allowing more wood products to be imported from the United States.

Mr. President, this country sells, at competitive prices, quality wood products that the Japanese consumer wants to buy. The major obstacles standing in the way are Japan's trade barriers.

Japan has promised to become an import superpower. Importing more American wood products would be an appropriate way to begin to honor that pledge.

Mr. President, the wood products negotiations have proceeded slowly at best. In passing the Super 301 legislation, Congress intended that serious consequences be imposed if trade negotiations do not yield significant results.

Although it may be premature to presume the failure of the wood products negotiations, I am not optimistic that they will obtain results significantly better than last week's stalemated trade talks on structural impediments. Our administration and Japanese officials would do well to bear in mind the special importance that Congress attaches to the Super 301 talks and act accordingly.

WALNUT STREET BAPTIST CHURCH 175TH ANNIVERSARY

Mr. FORD. Mr. President, I rise today to honor the Walnut Street Baptist Church of Louisville, KY, which is celebrating its 175th anniversary this year.

Starting with only 13 members, Walnut Street Baptist has grown to a congregation of over 6,000 members in the past 175 years. Originally named the First Baptist Church of Louisville, during the early years the congregation met in the homes of its members. This changed in 1834 when along with the Free Masons the church constructed a two-story building to be shared by the two groups.

Membership continued to grow, and in 1849 the First Baptist Church united with the city's Second Baptist Church, which had been formed in 1838. They erected a building on the northwest corner of Fourth and Walnut Streets, and the new congregation became known as the Walnut Street Baptist Church. This building remained the home of the church until the early 1900's when it was sold and the present facility was constructed on the southeast corner of Third and St. Catherine Streets.

When other churches moved to the suburbs during the fifties and sixties, Walnut Street resisted this trend and, instead, reaffirmed its commitment to ministering to the needs of all people. Today, the overwhelming majority of its members live in the Louisville area, and its Sunday morning service is seen in more than 40,000 homes. Through its day care center and various ministries programs, Walnut Street Baptist Church has strengthened its ties to the community and remained a prominent fixture in Louisville. May its next 175 years be as blessed.

NICARAGUAN ELECTION

Mr. NUNN. Mr. President, yesterday's election in Nicaragua is the latest in a stunning series of events which demonstrate a worldwide desire for democracy and a rejection of communism and totalitarian regimes.

I join freedom loving peoples throughout the world in congratulating the Nicaraguan people, the victorious candidate Violeta Chamorro and the National Opposition Union. I understand that the Nicaraguan people turned out in unprecedented numbers, exceeding 90 percent of the eligible voters in many areas of that country in their exercise of the right of self determination.

I also would like to note that the ability of the voters to cast their ballots in secret and free of any significant fraud was made possible because of the international focus and the special efforts of a number of observer groups, including those of the United Nations and the Organization of American States. The participation of former President Jimmy Carter, who continues to be a symbol of fairness and of mankind's desire for self determination, was also a significant factor in ensuring that there were free and fair election procedures.

It also must be noted that Daniel Ortega's commitment to a smooth and effective transition of governmental power to the newly elected government is very welcome. The role of the army and the police will bear close watching.

The United States must now monitor the transition process and be ready to review and to respond quicky to legitimate request that might be forthcoming from Mrs. Chamorro, particularly with respect to the removal of trade sanctions.

The prospects for peace and stability in Central America have been significantly enhanced as a result of this election. This is indeed a happy day for all freedom loving peoples and especially for the people of Nicaragua and the rest of Central America.

TWO IMPORTANT EVENTS IN CENTRAL AMERICA THIS WEEKEND

Mrs. KASSEBAUM. Mr. President, I would like to spend just a few minutes discussing two important events that have taken place in Central America this weekend, the passing away of El Salvador's former President, Jose Napolean Duarte, and the elections in Nicaragua.

On Friday, President Duarte died after a long struggle with cancer. President Duarte demonstrated the same resilience and defiance of the odds in his struggle against cancer that he demonstrated in political life.

Throughout his career, President Duarte was a forceful advocate for democracy, justice, and tolerance. For over a quarter century, he fought for these values. His most intense struggle was perhaps in the last 5 years of his political life when he served as President and oversaw El Salvador's experiment in democracy.

We were very fortunate in Kansas to have President Duarte accept the invitation in 1984 to lecture at Kansas State University. During his speech, President Duarte said he had told both the left and the right that he was "offering to change the concept of hate for the concept of tolerance." President Duarte emphasized that his struggle was to bring El Salvador's reality closer to democracy. As we remember President Duarte, we must remember his message.

President Duarte's efforts did not end in El Salvador. He also fought for democracy and justice throughout Central America. He played a key role in the Central American peace effort until the time of his death.

The peaceful elections in Nicaragua are a result of these regional efforts. They are also the result of a courageous people who demonstrated the power of the individual vote.

I would like to join my colleagues who have this morning been congratulating Mrs. Chamorro on her election victory. Both in her struggle to keep a free press running in Nicaragua and as the opposition's Presidential candidate, Mrs. Chamorro has demonstrated that she is a light that could not be diminished in Nicaragua. Her efforts embody the principles of democracy. There is no better example of courage than Violeta Chamorro.

As well as congratulating the winner of that election, I would also like to commend President Daniel Ortega. It is surprising, to a certain extent, that one would do that after having regarded him as an oppressive leader in Nicaragua. But largely due to his commitment, the conduct of the elections were sufficiently fair. And, in his first statement after the early returns, he has promised to abide by the result.

There are many difficulties that lie ahead for a peaceful transition of power. But, in my view, these are issues that must be resolved by Nicaraguans. The most appropriate role for the United States at this point is to be supportive but to step back and let the new government and the old government respond to the people's will.

The most useful and appropriate form of aid that the United States can give is not huge sums of money, but rather aid that is targeted toward building democratic institutions and improving Nicaragua's trading ability. Our goal should be to help rebuild a self-sufficient economy, not an economy dependent on U.S. foreign aid dollars. Too often we have seen our best foreign aid intentions result in the exact opposite of our intended goals.

Mr. President, I also believe that the election result in Nicaragua provides an opportunity for us to reevaluate our policy in El Salvador. Democracy in the region has been strengthened, which sends an important signal to both the left and the right in El Salvador. Negotiation and respect of the people's will is the only route to reconciliation. As President Duarte told us, the keys are democracy, justice, and tolerance.

Mr. President, this has been an amazing year for democracy. But, despite the number of elections we have already witnessed, the excitement for each new demonstration of the people's will does not diminish. I know I join many Americans in hoping that yesterday's election in Nicaragua will not only mean a more peaceful and prosperous future for Nicaragua, but for all Central Americans as well.

NICARAGUAN ELECTION RESULTS

Mr. THURMOND. Mr. President, today, I rise in strong support of Mrs. Violeta Chamorro who scored a stunning election victory in Nicaragua. Her defeat of Daniel Ortega is truly a victory for freedom, democracy, and peace in Central America.

This rejection of Communist rule proves that the Nicaraguan people want democracy rather than a totalitarian regime in their homeland. The elections would probably not have occurred if the United States had not pressed Ortega's Sandanista regime by supporting the freedom fighters.

The Nicaraguan election mirrors recent events which have occurred in Eastern Europe and the Soviet Union where the death knell for communism has sounded. I hope this election represents the beginning of the end for communism in Central America.

VICTORY FOR DEMOCRACY IN NICARAGUA

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, the announcement that Violeta Chamorro, the long-time editor of La Prensa, and Virgilio Godoy have led their political party, UNO, to victory over the Marxist regime of Daniel Ortega is stunning, wonderful, welcome news. Ms. Chamorro has replaced Daniel Ortega without a shot having been fired. I congratulate them, and have cabled them this morning my congratulations. It is my hope and my belief that the dark days for the people of Nicaragua are coming to a close.

The victory of Ms. Charmorro as the new President of Nicaragua is a validation of the steadfast policy which we Democrats in this body have promoted, in the face of the hostility and recalcitrant policies of the previous administration for 8 long years. We consistently argued that diplomacy and peaceful evolution are the correct road for American policies in Central America, instead of the violent path represented by the single-focused and single-minded militancy of the so-called Contra aid policy. I believe the turning point was the amendment worked out with great difficulty in 1988 to the fiscal year 1989 Department of Defense Appropriations Act, which substituted humanitarian aid for military aid to the Contras, rejected the violent road, and put Ortega on the spot by fully placing the responsibility for Nicaragua's failed economy on the shoulders of the Sandinistas. After nearly 3 weeks of continuous negotiations, my colleagues will recall, a compromise across the aisle on the text of that amendment had been reached, only to be rejected at the last minute by a reluctant White House. It had to be passed along party lines because of that reluctance, but the text and details were worked out in a long cooperative effort with Mr. DOLE. The distinguished Senator from Oklahoma, Mr. BOREN, deserves great credit for his long labors on that amendment, but there were many other Senators involved, trying to develop a peaceful solution to the crisis in Nicaragua. The distinguished Senator from Tennessee, Mr. SASSER was deeply involved over the years, as were Senators DODD, HARKIN, KERRY, and many others. They are all to be congratulated.

The amendment validated the peaceful road espoused by all the Central American Presidents, led by President Oscar Arias of Costa Rica and the late President Napoleon Duarte of Salvador. They exhibited enlightened leadership in the democratic tradition, and we owe them the credit their historic actions, embodied in the Esquipulas accord of August 7, 1987, and other followup accords and declarations have led to today in Managua.

It led to the bipartisan accord of last fall referred to by the distinguished majority leader, Mr. MITCHELL, in his remarks today. The new administration was persuaded to break decisively with the policies of the past and to join with the Congress on a gamble on the democratic road.

Together we took away Ortega's embattled hero excuse for his government's failures. And it was not long before the pressures for elections became inexorable.

Today marks a new beginning for the people of Nicaragua. It is appropriate to immediately review our economic policies toward Nicaragua, with an eye to doing all we can to help this new government get Nicaragua back on her feet, to revive Nicaragua's economy, to provide whatever assistance we can, and to help the Nicaraguan people shape their own destiny.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that my cablegram to Mrs. Chamorro and Mr. Godoy be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the cablegram was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

FEBRUARY 26, 1990.

From: Senator Robert C. Byrd, President Pro Tempore, U.S. Senate.

To: Violeta Chamorro, President-elect, Virgilio Godoy, Vice President-elect, Managua, Nicaragua.

Congratulations on your well-deserved and stunning, overwhelming election victory. Yours is a triumph of democracy and national pride. I look forward to renewing our friendship, and I look forward to your assuming your high offices and long service on behalf of the Nicaraguan people. Best wishes and, again, congratulations.

A GREAT DAY FOR DEMOCRACY

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. President, this is a great day for democracy. Yet, another society on Earth has elected, through a free and fair democratic process, to adopt the values which the democratic nations of the world share and which we attempt to provide for others.

We rejoice in this decision of the people of Nicaragua. We rejoice in the fact that positive change has occurred as a result of yesterday's election without bloodshed.

I commend the Nicaraguan people, who have proceeded through this process, the first truly democratic election in at least a half century of that nation's history, and have done so in an exemplary manner. According to accounts from Nicaragua, from the many observers who have been in that country for weeks and culminated in intense review of the election process yesterday, this election was free and fair. I commend those many observers, who brought a healthy international spotlight to this election.

The advent of democracy in Nicaragua underscores the importance of decisions that we will be making in this Congress over the next several weeks. I anticipate that we will receive from the administration a recommendation relative to the restoration of economic and diplomatic relations with Nicaragua. As soon as we are certain that there will be a transition of power to the Government that has been freely elected by the people of Nicaragua, I hope that we will take those steps.

I also wish to underscore the importance of Nicaragua becoming a full participating member in the Caribbean Basin Initiative. Mr. President, this was an initiative adopted in 1983 by the U.S. Congress in an attempt to establish a special trading relationship with our nearest neighbors in the Caribbean and Central America. Nicaragua has not been a participant in this program to date. I anticipate that they will soon become an active member. In the next few days we are going to be debating the question of expanding the benefits of the Caribbean Basin Initiative and making the program a permanent commitment.

I hope that the events in Nicaragua and their predecessor events in Panama have underscored the importance of the United States having an effective long-range trade program within our own hemisphere.

Finally, Mr. President, this election means that another nation has rejected communism. The Sandinista government had many advantages in this election. The Sandinistas controlled the army, the Sandinistas controlled the police, the Sandinistas controlled all of the mechanisms of government. They provided State media, State vehicles, all to support their political campaign. But the opposition had something even more powerful than money and government position. The opposition had the hopes of the Nicaraguan people for positive change.

When the people were given an opportunity in Nicaragua to choose, they chose democracy. In so doing, they have joined an impressive expanding list of nations around the world who were given the opportunity to choose between authoritarian rule and rule by the people, of the people and for the people, have elected democracy.

Mr. President, I believe that we, as Americans, who for 200 years have held high the beacon of democracy around the world, who believe in the words of our Declaration of Independence, can share the pride of the people of Nicaragua for their victory yesterday. Thank you.

THE NAMIBIAN CONSTITUTION

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, last November nearly 700,000 Namibians, approximately 97 percent of that country's total electorate, cast their ballots to elect a constituent assembly to write a constitution for an independent Namibia.

The Constituent Assembly has now fulfilled its mandate, and the Constitution adopted last week will put Namibia well on the road to being the most liberal democracy in Africa. Rooted in the rule of law, the Namibian Constitution centers around a system of separation of powers, provides checks and balances, and guarantees fundamental rights and human dignity for all.

The people of Namibia, and particularly its founding fathers, deserve our praise and congratulations. They have truly given Africa and the world a lesson in democracy.

I would like to submit for the record a statement made by two American constitutional scholars, Profs. Dennis L. Thompson of Brigham Young University and John Norton Moore of the University of Virginia. The statement was made at the conclusion of their visit to Namibia as guests of the Foundation for Democracy in Namibia to observe the constitutional process.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

PRESS STATEMENT OF AMERICAN CONSTITUTIONAL SCHOLARS ON THE HISTORIC OCCASION OF THE FRAMING OF THE NAMIBIAN CONSTITUTION JANUARY 26, 1990

We congratulate the people of Namibia at this historic time of preparing a national constitution and imminent independence. The independence of Namibia as a free and democratic nation based on equal rights for all is a triumph of the human spirit and the rule of law.

It has been an honor and a privilege to observe the development of a Constitution for Namibia at the invitation of the Foundation for Democracy in Namibia. We have come as private citizens to observe and our comments are not necessarily those of the Foundation, our government or our universities. We are particularly appreciative of the opportunity to have met with all political parties represented in the newly elected Constituent Assembly as they have participated in the historic framing of the Constitution. And we have been encouraged by the goodwill extended by the delegates in the Constituent Assembly toward each other. There is a sense of cooperation and determined effort to succeed in drafting a document which will endure through the generations.

The preparation of a national constitution is one of the most important events in the life of any nation. It is essential that it takes place in an atmosphere of careful and full deliberation. Indeed, such an atmosphere conducive to full embodiment of the principles of democracy, fundamental rights of mankind and the rule of law, which are a reflection of the basic principles in the Namibian struggle for independence, can only facilitate the immediate realization of full independence. Moreover, a careful process of consensus building in the preparation of the Constitution would begin an important tradition in the national life of Namibia and would greatly strengthen the first national government. As such, we would emphasize a point repeatedly made to us in our discussions with national leaders that it is strongly in the interest of the new Nation to proceed carefully and with full deliberation in its preparation of a Constitution.

As we observe the historic process of Constitution building in Namibia—itself an important milestone in progress toward universal realization of freedom and human dignity—we are mindful of the framing of our own Constitution by the founding fathers some 200 years ago and of the great debt our Nation owes to their work. In 1987 the United States proudly celebrated the bicentennial of our Constitution and next year we will celebrate the bicentennial of the Bill of Rights. In great measure the enduring of the Republic is due to the sound principles of democratic governance bequeathed by our constitutional framers enabling progressive realization of human freedom and dignity for all in a government genuinely of the people, by the people and for the people.

We believe that all nations must develop their own Constitution and law. Experiences and circumstances differ and constitutions must reflect those differences. Nevertheless, we are mindful of certain constitutional principles underlying our own experience which we believe are broadly reflective of the successful experience of many democratic nations throughout human history. The most important of these are that democratic governments should be constructed around a system of separation of powers, checks and balances and division of powers encouraging both consensus building in government and democratic responsiveness to the people; that a just constitutional system must be rooted in the rule of law rather than decree by might; that an effective democracy must guarantee fundamental rights and human dignity for all, and that government which encourages freedom in the economic sphere, as it encourages freedom elsewhere, will be far more successful in unleasing the creative potential of its citizens and realizing its developmental aspirations.

As we have observed the historic Constitution building in Namibia we are mindful of these fundamental principles and heartened by the trends we see. The basic thrust of the draft Constitution to date reflects the determination of the people of Namibia for a multi-party democratic Nation with equal opportunity and human dignity for all. We are also heartened by the consensus building at work in the Constitutional drafting process.

CONSTITUTION THE MOST LIBERAL IN AFRICA

The controversial paragraphs four to seven of article 11 were dropped after Shadow Attorney-General Hartmut Ruppel informed the CA that Swapo had agreed, in the words of Namibia National Front (NNF) President, Mr Vekuui Rukoro, "To give humanity and human rights a chance."

Detention without trial in independent Namibia will now only be possible under martial law or State of Emergency. In such cases it will be subject to Parliamentary reviews.

The CA also on Wednesday accepted that freedom of speech and the Press was a nonderogable right which could not be taken away even in a state of war or under national emergency.

With the abolition of the death penalty this makes the constitution one of the most liberal in Africa.

LIMIT

The CA also decided to limit the powers of the Executive President even further by creating, at the suggestion of Shadow Minister of Information, Mr Hipido Hamutenya, and Action Christian National Chairman Mr Jan de Wet, a Security Service Commission to advise the President on the appoint of the Chief of Defense Force and the Inspector-General of Police.

After a long and somewhat heated exchange of the matter, the Assembly reached what the Chairman Mr. Hage Geingob called "An historic compromise."

NOMINATING

These important—and in a recently wartorn society like Namibia potentially divisive—positions will now be filled by a Parliamentary-approved Commision naming candidates for appointment by the President.

The first appointments, however, will be made by the President in consultation with the leaders of other parties in the Assembly.

The Assembly, after a long and inconclusive discussion on the role of the Attorney-General and that of the Prosecutor-General, decided that the lawyers in the House would meet legal advisers and completely redraft two articles dealing with these positions.

BESSINGER

It also accepted two proposals by Shadow Minister of Wildlife, Conservation and Tourism, Mr Niko Bessinger, to make stronger provision for environmental issues by focusing on the need to preserve natural resources, eco-systems and biological resources, as well as the beauty and character of the country, not only for the present generation but also for the future.

These measures were also placed under the authority of the independent ombudsman who will control and monitor abuses in the Civil Service.

ACADEMIC

The Assembly decided, at the suggestion of Mr Katjiuongua, to include academic freedom as a fundamental and irrevocable right in the Bill of Rights. It decided that only citizens by birth or decent could become president.

A paragraph giving the President power to declare Martial Law "Whether or not a state of war with another country exists, but only in a situation in which war prevails." was referred back to legal advisers for clarification after an objection from Mr. Katjiuongua.

APPROVAL

The CA made it obligatory for the President to seek Parliamentary approval for a Declaration of War, after Mr Katiuongua used the example of the Vietnam war to point out the danger of Presidents waging unpopular armed conflicts.

A decision on whether Deputy Ministers had to be appointed from among the members of the National Assembly and whether they were part of the Cabinet was deferred.

NUJOMA

President-in-waiting Sam Nujoma made his first contribution to the debate in the Assembly when he told the House the Namibian people had suffered under apartheid and bantustans and that the aim was to create a central government.

Therefore Regional Governors would be appointed from Windhoek, he said during a discussion on what the Chairman of a Regional Council Management Committee should be called.

It was decided they would be called "Chairperson of the Management Committee" and hold office for three years.

The CA now has only about 20 of the 138 articles of the constitution left to discuss, as well as seven schedules, while some clauses have to approved after consultation with legal advisers.

The rest of the Constitution is expected to be discussed in the Assembly this afternoon.—Sapa

CONCLUSION OF MORNING BUSINESS

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under the order, morning business is closed.

NATIONAL AND COMMUNITY SERVICE ACT

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Also under the order, the Senate will now proceed to the consideration of S. 1430, which the clerk will report.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 1430) to enhance national and community service, and for other purposes.

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill, which had reported from the Committee on Labor and Human Resources, with an amendment to strike all after the enacting clause and insert in lieu thereof the following:

SEC. 2 FINDINGS.

Congress finds that—

(1) service to the community and the Nation is a responsibility of all citizens of the United States, regardless of the economic level or age of such citizens;

(2) citizens of the United States who become engaged in service at a young age will better understand the responsibilities of citizenship and continue to serve the community into adulthood;

(3) serving others builds self-esteem and teaches teamwork, decision making, and problem-solving;

(4) the 70,000,000 youth of the United States who are between ages 5 and 25 offer a powerful and largely untapped resource for community service;

(5) conservation corps and human service corps provide important benefits to participants and to the community;

(6) the Volunteers in Service to America Program (hereinafter in this Act referred to as "VISTA"), as established by title I of the Domestic Volunteer Act of 1973 (42 U.S.C. 4951 et seq.), is one of the most cost effective means to fight poverty in the United States;

(7) the cost of higher education, loan indebtedness, and the high price of housing deter many young adults from volunteering for VISTA and other service programs that involve a substantial time commitment;

(8) older Americans, through the Older American Volunteer Programs (as established by title II of the Domestic Volunteer Service Act of 1973 (42 U.S.C. 5001 et seq.)), provide 500,000,000 hours of service each year and are a vital force in addressing national problems;

(9) many potential volunteers cannot participate in a full-time volunteer service program, but should have the option of part-time service in such a program; and

(10) a range of full-time and part-time national and community service opportunities should be made available to all citizens, particularly youth and older Americans.

SEC. 3. PURPOSES.

It is the purpose of this Act to—

(1) renew the ethic of civic responsibility in the United States;

(2) ask citizens of the United States, regardless of age or income, to engage in full-time or part-time service to the Nation;

(3) begin to call young people to serve in national volunteer programs;

(4) enable young Americans to make a sustained commitment to national service by removing barriers to such service that have been created by high education costs, loan indebtedness, and the cost of housing;

(5) build on the existing organizational framework of Federal, State, and local programs and agencies to expand full-time and part-time service opportunities for all citizens, particularly youth and older Americans;

(6) involve volunteers in activities that would not otherwise be performed by employed workers; and

(7) generate 1,000,000,000 additional volunteer service hours to help meet human, educational, environmental, and public safety needs, particularly those needs relating to poverty.

TITLE I—SCHOOL BASED COMMUNITY SERVICE

PART A—SCHOOL BASED COMMUNITY SERVICE

SEC. 101. SHORT TITLE.

This part may be cited as "Serve America, the Service to America Act of 1989".

SEC. 102. PROGRAM AUTHORIZED.

(a) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary is authorized, in accordance with the provisions of this Act, to make grants to States or local applicants to create or expand service opportunities for students and out-of-school youth and for community members, particularly senior citizens, to volunteer in schools.

(b) TERM OF GRANT.—The term of the grants may be for a period of not longer than 3 years.

SEC. 103. DEFINITIONS.

For purposes of this part—

(1) COMMUNITY-BASED AGENCY.—The term "community-based agency" means a private nonprofit organization that is representative of a community or a significant segment of a community and that is engaged in meeting human, educational, or environmental community needs.

(2) EDUCATION INSTITUTION.—The term "education institution" means a local educational agency, elementary or secondary school or a community-based agency that provides educational services.

(3) EDUCATION PARTNERSHIP PROGRAM.—The term "education partnership program" means a program in which school volunteers work in an educational institution in support of the school's objectives to enhance the education of students.

(4) ELEMENTARY SCHOOL.—The term "elementary school" has the same meaning given that term in section 1471(8) of the Elementary and Secondary Education Act of 1965 (20 U.S.C. 2891(8)).

(5) INSTITUTION OF HIGHER EDUCATION.—The term "institution of higher education" has the same meaning given that term in section 1201(a) of the Higher Education Act of 1965 (20 U.S.C. 1141(a)).

(6) LOCAL EDUCATIONAL AGENCY.—The term "local educational agency" has the same meaning given that term in section 1471(12) of the Elementary and Secondary Education Act of 1965 (20 U.S.C. 2891(12)).

(7) LOCAL GOVERNMENT AGENCY.—The term "local government agency" means a public agency that is engaged in meeting human, social, educational, or environmental needs.

(8) OUT-OF-SCHOOL YOUTH.—The term "out-of-school youth" means an individual who has not attained the age of 25, has not completed college or the equivalent, and is not enrolled in an elementary or secondary school or institution of higher education.

(9) PARTICIPANT.—The term "participant" means a student or out-of-school youth who provides services pursuant to a program funded under this title.

(10) PARTNERSHIP PROGRAM.—The term "partnership program" means a cooperative effort to enhance the education of students among an education institution and one or more of the following:

(A) the private sector;

(B) public and non-profit agencies;

(C) institutions of higher education; and

(D) community organizations.

(11) PLACEMENT.—The term "placement" means the matching of a participant or team with a specific project.

(12) PROJECT.—The term "project" means any activity that results in a specific identifiable service or product that otherwise would not be done with existing funds, and which shall not duplicate the routine services or functions of the employer to whom participants are assigned.

(13) SCHOOL VOLUNTEER.—The term "school volunteer" means a person beyond the age of compulsory schooling, including an older American, an employee of a private business, an employee of a public or nonprofit agency, or any other individual working without financial remuneration and under the direction of professional staff within a school or school district.

(14) SECONDARY SCHOOL.—The term "secondary school" has the same meaning given that term in section 1471(21) of the Elementary and Secondary Education Act of 1965 (20 U.S.C. 2891(21)).

(15) SECRETARY.—The term "Secretary" means the Secretary of Education.

(16) SERVICE OPPORTUNITY.—The term "service opportunity" means a program or project enabling students or out-of-school youth to perform meaningful and constructive service in agencies, institutions, and situations where the application of human talent and dedication may help to meet human, educational, and environmental community needs, especially those relating to poverty.

(17) STATE.—The term "State" means a State, the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico, Guam, the District of Columbia, American Samoa, the Virgin Islands, the Commonwealth of the Northern Mariana Islands, the Republic of the Marshall Islands, the Federated States of Micronesia, or Palau.

(18) STATE AGENCY FOR HIGHER EDUCATION.—The term "State agency for higher education" means the State board of higher education or other agency or officer primarily responsible for the State supervision of higher education, or, if there is no such officer or agency, an officer or agency designated by the Governor or by State law.

(19) STATE EDUCATIONAL AGENCY.—The term "State educational agency" has the same meaning given that term in section 1471(23) of the Elementary and Secondary Education Act of 1965 (20 U.S.C. 2891(23)).

(20) STUDENT.—The term "student" means an individual who is enrolled full-time or part-time in an elementary or secondary school or institution of higher education.

(21) STUDENT COMMUNITY SERVICE PROGRAM.—The term "student community service program" means a program in which students or out-of-school youths are offered service opportunities in the community or an educational institution.

SEC. 104. ALLOCATION OF FUNDS.

(a) GRANTS TO STATES.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary shall use 85 percent of the funds appropriated under section 111 to make grants to States that have submitted applications under section 105.

(2) CONSIDERATIONS IN AWARDING GRANTS.—

(A) IN GENERAL.—In awarding grants to States, the Secretary shall consider the number of students enrolled in elementary and secondary schools in the State, the quality of the proposal, and evidence of State commitment to the program.

(B) GRANT FORMULA.—If more than $50,000,000 is appropriated for this part, then the Secretary shall allocate 85 percent of the funds appropriated under section 110 according to the chapter 1 basic grant formula described in section 1005 of chapter 1 of title I of the Elementary and Secondary Education Act of 1965 (20 U.S.C. 2711) to States that have applications approved under section 105.

(b) REMAINDER.—The Secretary shall use the remaining 15 percent of the funds appropriated under section 111 for program support, evaluation, training, technical assistance, and activities described in section 109.

(c) LOCALITY APPLICATION.—If a State does not apply for assistance under this part or if a State does not have an application approved under section 105, the Secretary, may make grants directly to local applicants. The Secretary shall apply the criteria described in section 106 in evaluating such local applications.

SEC. 105. STATE APPLICATION.

Each State desiring to receive a grant under this part shall, through the State educational agency, submit an application to the Secretary at such time and in such manner as the Secretary may reasonably require. Each of such applications shall describe how—

(1) local applications will be ranked according to criteria described in section 106;

(2) service programs in the State will be coordinated;

(3) cooperative efforts among education institutions, local government agencies, community-based agencies, businesses, and State agencies to provide service opportunities, including those that involve the participation of urban, suburban, and rural youth working together will be encouraged;

(4) economically and educationally disadvantaged students, including individuals with handicapping conditions, are assured service opportunities;

(5) service programs receiving funds under this title will be evaluated;

(6) programs funded under this part will serve urban and rural areas and any tribal areas that exist in such State;

(7) technical assistance and training will be provided to service programs in the State;

(8) non-Federal funds will be used to expand service opportunities for students and out-of-school youth; and

(9) disseminations of information and outreach will be used to ensure involvement of a broad range of organizations, particularly community-based organizations.

SEC. 106. LOCAL APPLICATION.

(a) APPLICATION REQUIRED.—

(1) PARTNERSHIP.—

(A) IN GENERAL.—Any education institution, local government agency, community-based agency or consortia thereof desiring to receive a grant under this part shall form a partnership consisting of 1 or more education institutions and 1 or more local government or community-based agencies.

(B) EXCEPTION.—The provisions of subparagraph (A) shall not apply if the applicant is (A) an education institution that plans to provide service opportunities solely within an education institution; or (B) an education institution that has formed a partnership with 1 or more private businesses to conduct an educational partnership program.

(2) CONTENT OF APPLICATION.—Applicants shall apply to the State educational agency at such time and in such manner as the State educational agency may reasonably require. Each such application shall—

(A) contain a written agreement between the institution with which participants or school volunteers are affiliated and 1 or more representatives of the community or education institution where service opportunities will be provided stating that the program was jointly developed by the parties and that the program will be jointly executed by the parties;

(B) specify the membership and role of an advisory committee consisting of representatives of community agencies, service recipients, youth serving agencies, students, parents, teachers, administrators, school board members, labor, and business;

(C) describe the goals of the program, including goals that are quantifiable, measurable, and demonstrate benefits to the participants or school volunteers and the community;

(D) set forth the service opportunities to be provided;

(E) describe how the participants or school volunteers will be recruited, including any special efforts to recruit out-of-school youth with the assistance of community-based agencies;

(F) describe how participants or school volunteers were or will be involved in the design and operation of the program;

(G) state the name, if available, qualifications, and responsibilities of the coordinator of any program assisted under this Part;

(H) describe preservice and inservice training to be provided to supervisors and participants or school volunteers;

(I) describe the means by which exemplary service will be recognized;

(J) describe potential resources that will permit continuation of the program, if needed, upon the conclusion of Federal funding; and

(K) contain assurances that, before a placement of a participant or school volunteer is made, the program will consult with any local labor organization representing employees in the area who are engaged in the same or similar work as that proposed to be carried out by such program.

(3) STUDENT COMMUNITY SERVICE PROGRAM.—If the applicant plans to operate a student community service program, in addition to the above information, each applicant shall—

(A) describe an age-appropriate learning component for participants that includes, but is not limited to, a chance for participants to reflect on service experiences and expected learning outcomes;

(B) describe whether or not the participants will receive academic credit for participation;

(C) set forth the target numbers of students and out-of-school youth who will participate in the program assisted under this part and the target numbers of hours of service such participants will provide individually and as a group;

(D) describe the proportion of expected participants who are educationally or economically disadvantaged, including participants with handicapping conditions;

(E) describe the ages or grade levels of expected participants;

(F) include other relevant demographic information about expected participants; and

(G) provide assurances that participants will be provided with information on VISTA, the Peace Corps (as established by the Peace Corps Act (22 U.S.C. 2501 et seq.)), chapter 30 of title 38, United States Code, chapter 106 of title 10, United States Code, full-time Youth Service Corps and National Service Demonstration programs funded under this Act, and other service options and their benefits, such as student loan deferment and forgiveness, as appropriate.

(b) APPROVAL.—

(1) STUDENT COMMUNITY SERVICE PROGRAMS.—In the case of student community service programs, the State educational agency shall approve only local applications describing programs that provide—

(A) an age-appropriate learning component for participants to reflect on service experiences;

(B) preservice and inservice training for both supervisors and participants involving representatives of the community where service opportunities will be provided; and

(C) evidence that participants will make a sustained commitment to the service project.

(2) SCHOOL VOLUNTEER AND PARTNERSHIP PROGRAMS.—In the case of school volunteer and partnership programs, the State educational agency shall only approve local applications describing programs that provide—

(A) preservice and inservice training for both supervisors and school volunteers;

(B) opportunities for school volunteers to work with at-risk children or their teachers.

(c) PRIORITY.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—In providing assistance pursuant to this part, the State educational agency shall give priority to applications describing—

(A) programs which involve participants in the design and operation of the program;

(B) programs in greatest need of assistance, such as programs targeting low-income areas;

(C) programs which involve individuals of different ages, races, sexes, ethnic groups, and economic backgrounds serving together; and

(D) in the case of applicants that are educational institutions, programs that are integrated into the academic program.

(2) SCHOOL VOLUNTEER AND PARTNERSHIP PROGRAM.—In the case of a school volunteer and partnership program, the State educational agency shall give priority to applications describing programs—

(A) involving older Americans as school volunteers;

(B) involving a partnership between an educational institution and a private business in the community; or

(C) which focus on drug and alcohol abuse prevention, school drop-out prevention, or nutrition and health education.

(d) DURATION.—Grants to local applicants under this part may be for up to a 3-year period and are renewable for a second period of up to 3 years to expand or improve an existing program or to initiate a new program.

SEC. 107. FEDERAL SHARE.

(a) FEDERAL SHARE.—

(1) REQUIREMENTS FOR STATES.—Funds provided pursuant to this part shall not be used by a State to pay more than 75 percent of the costs of programs assisted under this title.

(2) REQUIREMENT FOR LOCAL APPLICANTS.—

(A) LIMITATION ON FUNDS.—Funds provided pursuant to this part may not be used by a local applicant to pay more than—

(i) 80 percent of the costs of programs assisted under this title for the first year in which the applicant receives funds under this part;

(ii) 70 percent of the costs of programs assisted under this title for the second year in which the applicant receives funds under this part;

(iii) 60 percent of the costs of programs assisted under this title for the third year in which the applicant receives funds under this part; and

(iv) 50 percent of the costs of programs assisted under this title for the fourth and each succeeding year in which the applicant receives funds under this part.

(B) PAYMENT BY LOCAL APPLICANT.—

(i) NON-FEDERAL SOURCES.—The portion of the costs of programs assisted under this part that are to be paid by a local applicant from sources other than Federal funds may be paid in cash or in kind, fairly evaluated.

(ii) PRIVATE PROFITMAKING ORGANIZATIONS.—If the portion of the costs of programs assisted under this part to be paid by a local applicant from sources other than Federal funds are paid by private profitmaking organizations then subsection (a) shall be applied by substituting—

(I) "85 percent" for "80 percent";

(II) "75 percent" for "70 percent"; and

(III) "65 percent" for "60 percent".

SEC. 108. USE OF FUNDS.

(a) STATES.—

(1) ADMINISTRATION.—States shall use no more than 20 percent of funds allocated under section 104 for the costs of administration, including training, technical assistance, curriculum development, and coordination activities.

(2) SCHOOL VOLUNTEER AND PARTNERSHIP PROGRAMS.—States shall use no more than 10 percent of funds allocated under section 104 for school volunteer and partnership programs.

(b) LOCAL APPLICANTS.—Local applicants may use funds provided under this part for supervision of participants, program administration, training, reasonable transportation costs, insurance, and other reasonable expenses.

(c) STIPENDS.—Funds provided under this part shall not be used to pay any stipend, allowance, or other financial support to any participant except reimbursement for transportation, meals, and other reasonable out-of-pocket expenses incident to participation in a program assisted under this part.

SEC. 109. FEDERAL ACTIVITIES.

(a) CLEARINGHOUSES.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary, in consultation with the National Service Board authorized under title IV of this Act, is authorized to fund one or more national or regional clearinghouses on service.

(2) PUBLIC AND PRIVATE NONPROFIT AGENCIES.—Public and private nonprofit agencies with extensive experience in student community service and school volunteer and partnership programs shall be eligible to receive funds under paragraph (1) of this subsection.

(3) FUNCTION OF CLEARINGHOUSES.—National and regional clearinghouses funded under paragraph (1) shall provide information, curriculum materials, technical assistance, and training to States and local entities eligible to receive funds under this part.

(b) GRANTS.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary, in consultation with the Board of Directors for the Corporation for National Service as established under section 403, is authorized to make grants to fund national model youth service programs.

(2) ELIGIBILITY.—States, education institutions, local government agencies, community-based agencies, or consortia of the above organizations shall be eligible to receive grants under paragraph (1) of this subsection.

(3) DISSEMINATION OF INFORMATION.—The Secretary shall widely disseminate information about national model youth service programs funded under paragraph (1) of this subsection.

(c) INNOVATIVE CURRICULUM MATERIALS.—The Secretary is authorized to make grants for the development of innovative curriculum materials for use in student community service and school volunteer partnership programs.

SEC. 110. EVALUATION.

(a) EVALUATION.—The Secretary shall provide, through grants or contracts, for the continuing evaluation of programs assisted under this part, including evaluations that measure and evaluate the impact of programs authorized by this part, in order to determine program effectiveness in achieving stated goals in general and in relation to cost, the impact on related programs, and the structure and mechanisms for delivery. Such evaluations shall include, where appropriate, comparisons with appropriate control groups composed of individuals who have not participated in such programs. Evaluations shall be conducted by individuals not directly involved in the administration of the program evaluated.

(b) STANDARDS.—The Secretary shall develop and publish general standards for evaluation of program effectiveness in achieving the objectives of this part.

(c) INPUT.—In carrying out evaluations under this part, the Secretary shall include the opinions of program participants and members of the communities where services are delivered concerning the strengths and weaknesses of such programs.

(d) PUBLICATION.—The Secretary shall publish summaries of the results of evaluations of program impact and effectiveness no later than 60 days after the completion of such evaluation.

(e) OWNERSHIP OF PROPERTY.—All studies, evaluations, proposals, and data produced or developed with assistance under this part shall become the property of the United States.

SEC. 111. AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.

There are authorized to be appropriated to carry out this part, $65,000,000 for fiscal year 1991, and such sums as may be necessary for each of the 4 succeeding years.

PART B—HIGHER EDUCATION

SEC. 121. INNOVATIVE PROJECTS FOR COMMUNITY SERVICE.

Part C of Title X of the Higher Education Act of 1965 (20 U.S.C. 1135e et seq.) is amended to read as follows:

"PART C—INNOVATIVE PROJECTS FOR COMMUNITY SERVICE

"STATEMENT OF PURPOSE

"SEC. 1061. It is the purpose of this part to support innovative projects to determine the feasibility of encouraging student participation in community service activities before, during, or after the completion of such student's higher education.

"INNOVATIVE PROJECTS FOR COMMUNITY SERVICE

"SEC. 1062. (a) GENERAL AUTHORITY.—The Secretary is authorized, in accordance with the provisions of this part, to make grants to, and contracts with, institutions of higher education (including combinations of such institutions), and other public agencies and nonprofit organizations working in partnership with institutions of higher education, for purposes including, but not limited to—

"(1) encouraging students to participate in community service activities that will engender a sense of social responsibility and commitment to the community;

"(2) creating opportunities for students to engage in community service activities in exchange for financial assistance that reduces the debt acquired by students in the course of completing postsecondary education;

"(3) encouraging student-initiated and student-designed community service projects; and

"(4) encouraging the integration of community service into academic curricula.

"ADMINISTRATIVE PROVISIONS

"SEC. 1063. (a) APPLICATION.—No grant may be made, and no contract may be entered into, under section 1062 unless an application is made to the Director of the Fund for Improvement of Postsecondary Education (hereinafter referred to as the "Director") at such time, in such manner, and contained or accompanied by such information as the Director may reasonably require.

"(b) Consistent with the provisions of section 1003(c), the National Board of the Fund for the Improvement of Postsecondary Education shall advise the Director on programs, priorities, and the selection of projects developed under the authority of section 1062.

"(c) TECHNICAL EMPLOYEES.—(1) The Secretary may appoint, for terms not to exceed 3 years, without regard to the provisions of title 5 of the United States Code governing appointments in the competitive service, technical employees to administer this title who may be paid without regard to the provisions of chapter 51, and subchapter III of chapter 53 of such title relating to classification and General Schedule pay rates.

"(2) The Secretary may appoint no more than 1 technical employee for each $2,000,000 appropriated under section 1064.

"(d) The provisions of section 1004(b) shall apply to grants made under section 1062.

"(e) Nothing in this part shall be construed as requiring an institution of higher education to offer academic credit as a requirement of receiving assistance under this part.

"AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS

"SEC. 1064. There are authorized to be appropriated to carry out this part, $35,000,000 for fiscal year 1991, and such sums as may be necessary for each of the 4 succeeding years."

(c) Section 432 of the Act (42 U.S.C. 1082) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(j) PARTIAL CANCELLATION AUTHORITY.—(1) The Secretary shall enter into an agreement with any student borrower described in section 427(a)(2)(H) or 428(b)(1)(V) under which the borrower agrees to serve as a volunteer under the Peace Corps Act (22 U.S.C. 2501 et seq.) or under the Domestic Volunteer Service Act of 1973 (42 U.S.C. 4951 et seq.) or for comparable full-time service as a volunteer with a tax-exempt organization of demonstrated effectiveness.

"(2) The agreement under paragraph (1) shall contain provisions designed to assure that—

"(A) the Secretary will assume the obligation of paying the percent of any loan made, insured, or guaranteed under this part pursuant to the schedule described in paragraph (5); and

"(B) the student borrower who fails to volunteer for service in accordance with the agreement will assume the obligation of paying the amount of any such loan attributable to the period for which the student borrower failed to comply with the agreement.

"(3) The Secretary shall in each fiscal year pay to the holder of each loan for which the Secretary assumes responsibility under this subsection the amount specified in paragraph (5).

"(4) The Secretary shall waive or suspend any obligation of service or payment of any, or any part of, the loan to which the United States is entitled under paragraph (2)(A) whenever the Secretary determines that compliance by an individual with the agreement is impossible or would involve extreme hardship to the individual.

"(5)(A) The percent of a loan which shall be paid by the United States under paragraph (2)(A) of this subsection is 15 percent for the first or second year of service and 20 percent for the third or fourth year of service described in paragraph (1).

"(B) If a portion of the loan is paid by the Secretary under this subsection for any year, the entire amount of interest on such loan which accrues for such year shall be paid by the Secretary.

"(C) Nothing in this subsection shall be construed to authorize refunding of any repayment on the loan.".

SEC. 162. EFFECTIVE DATE.

The amendments made by section 161 of this part shall apply only to loans made to cover the costs of instruction for periods of enrollment beginning on or after 30 days after the date of enactment of this Act to individuals who are new borrowers on that date.

SEC. 203. PROGRAM AUTHORIZED.

(a) IN GENERAL.—The Board is authorized, in accordance with this title, to provide a grant to a State or local applicant to create or expand full-time or summer youth service corps programs.

(b) TERM OF GRANT.—The term of such grant shall be for a period not greater than three years.

(c) RENEWING GRANT.—The Board may renew such grant for an additional three-year term.

SEC. 204. ALLOCATION OF FUNDS.

(a) COMPETITIVE GRANT.—The Board may make competitive grants to States that have submitted applications under section 205.

(b) DIRECT GRANTS.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—If a State does not apply for assistance under this title, the Board may make a grant directly to a local applicant in such State.

(2) EVALUATION.—The Board shall apply the criteria described in section 205 in evaluating such local applicant.

(c) LIMITATION.—

(1) CAPITAL EQUIPMENT.—Not more than 10 percent of the amount of funds made available to a program agency under section 219 may be used for the purchase of major capital equipment.

(2) ADMINISTRATIVE EXPENSES.—Not more than 15 percent of the amount of funds made available to a program agency under section 219 may be used for administrative expenses.

(3) SUMMER PROGRAMS.—Not more than 10 percent of the amount of funds made available to a State under section 219 may be used for summer Youth Service Corps programs.

SEC. 205. STATE APPLICATION.

(a) SUBMISSION OF APPLICATION.—In order to receive a grant under section 219, a State shall submit an application to the Board at such time and in such manner as the Board may reasonably require.

(b) CONTENT OF APPLICATION FOR A STATE.—In such application, the State shall describe—

(1) any Youth Service Corps program proposed to be conducted directly by such State with funds provided under section 219; and

(2) any grant program to entities within such State proposed to be conducted by such State with funds provided under section 219.

(c) CONTENT OF APPLICATION FOR A STATE OR LOCAL APPLICANT.—In order to receive funds under section 219 to directly conduct a Youth Service Corps program pursuant to section 204 (a) or (b), each applicant shall include in the application for such funds—

(1) a comprehensive description of the objectives and performance goals for the program, a plan for managing and funding the program, and a description of the types of projects to be carried out, including a description of the types and duration of training and work experience to be provided by such program;

(2) a plan for certification of the training skills acquired by participants and award of academic credit to participants for competencies developed from training programs or work experience obtained under this title;

(3) an estimate of the number of participants and crew leaders necessary for the proposed projects, the length of time that the services of such participants and crew leaders will be required, the support services that will be required for such participants and crew leaders, and a plan for recruiting such participants, including educationally and economically disadvantaged youth and youth who have recently left foster care;

(4) a list of requirements to be imposed on such sponsoring organization of an individual serving in a program or project under this title, including a requirement that a sponsoring organization that invests in a project under this title by making a cash contribution or by providing free training of an individual participating in such program or project shall be given preference over a sponsoring organization that does not make such an investment;

(5) a description of the manner of appointment of sufficient supervisory staff (including participants who have displayed exceptional leadership qualities), who shall in turn provide for other central elements of a youth corps, such as crew structure and a youth development component;

(6) a description of a plan to ensure the on-site presence of knowledgeable and competent supervision at program facilities;

(7) a description of the facilities, quarters, and board (in the case of residential facilities), limited and emergency medical care, transportation from administrative facilities to work sites, and other appropriate services, supplies, and equipment that will be provided by such applicant;

(8) a description of basic standards of work requirements, health, nutrition, sanitation, and safety, and the manner that such standards shall be enforced;

(9) a description of the plan to assign participants to facilities as near to the homes of such participants as is reasonable and practicable;

(10) the assurance that, before a placement of a volunteer under this title is made, the program agency will consult with any local labor organization representing employees in the area who are engaged in the same or similar work as that proposed to be carried out by such program; and

(11) such other information as the Board may prescribe.

(d) GRANT PROGRAM.—Each State desiring to receive funds under this title to conduct a grant program pursuant to subsection (b)(2) shall describe in its application how—

(1) local applicants will be evaluated;

(2) service programs in the State will be coordinated;

(3) economically and educationally disadvantaged youth, including youth who have left foster care, will be recruited;

(4) programs will be evaluated;

(5) the State will encourage cooperation among programs and the appropriate State job training coordinating council established under the Job Training and Partnership Act (29 U.S.C. 1501 et seq.);

(6) such State will certify the training skills acquired by each participant and the credit to each participant for competencies developed from training programs or work experience obtained under this title; and

(7) before any placement of a volunteer under this Act is made, the State will ensure that program agencies consult with each local labor organization representing employees in the area who are engaged in the same or similar work as the work that is proposed to be carried out by such program.

SEC. 206. FOCUS OF PROGRAMS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Programs funded under this title may carry out projects that—

(1) in the case of conservation corps programs, focus on—

(A) conservation, rehabilitation, and improvement of wildlife habitat, rangelands, parks, and recreational areas;

(B) urban revitalization, and historical and cultural site preservation;

(C) fish culture, habitat maintenance and improvement, and other fishery assistance;

(D) road and trail maintenance and improvement;

(F) stream, lake, waterfront harbor, and port improvement;

(G) wetlands protection and pollution control;

(H) insect, disease, rodent, and fire prevention and control;

(I) the improvement of abandoned railroad beds and rights-of-way;

(J) energy conservation projects, renewable resource enhancement, and recovery of biomass;

(K) reclamation and improvement of strip-mined land; and

(L) forestry, nursery, and cultural operations; or

(2) in the case of human services corps programs, include service in—

(A) State, local, and regional governmental agencies;

(B) nursing homes, hospices, senior centers, hospitals, local libraries, parks, recreational facilities, day care centers, programs serving individuals with handicapped conditions, and schools;

(C) law enforcement agencies, and penal and probation systems;

(D) private nonprofit organizations that primarily focus on social service;

(E) activities that focus on the rehabilitation or improvement of public facilities, neighborhood improvements, literacy training that benefits educationally disadvantaged individuals, weatherization of and basic repairs to low-income housing, energy conservation (including solar energy techniques), removal of architectural barriers to access by handicapped individuals to public facilities, and conservation, maintenance, or restoration of natural resources on publicly held lands; and

(F) any other nonpartisan civic activities and services that the Board determines to be of a substantial social benefit in meeting unmet human, educational, or environmental needs (particularly needs related to poverty) or in the community where volunteer service is to be performed.

(b) INELIGIBLE SERVICE CATEGORIES.—In order to be eligible to receive assistance under this title, the service projects referred to in subsection (a) shall not be conducted by any—

(1) business organized for profit;
(2) labor union;
(3) partisan political organization;
(4) organization engaged in religious activities, unless such project does not involve any religious functions; or
(5) domestic or personal service company or organization.

(c) LIMITATION ON SERVICE.—No participant shall perform services in any project for more than a 1-year period.

SEC. 207. RELATED PROGRAMS.

An activity administered under the authority of the Secretary of Health and Human Services, that is operated for the same purpose as a program eligible to be carried out under this title, is encouraged to use services available under this title.

SEC. 208. PUBLIC LANDS OR INDIAN LANDS.

(a) LIMITATION.—The Board shall only fund programs that involve projects on public lands or Indian lands or that provide a public benefit.

(b) REVIEW OF APPLICATIONS.—The Board shall consult with the Department of the Interior in reviewing applications proposing programs or projects on public lands or Indian lands.

(c) CONSISTENCY.—A project carried out under this title for conservation, rehabilitation, or improvement of any public lands or Indian lands shall be consistent with—
(1) the provisions of law and policies relating to the management and administration of such lands, and all other applicable provisions of law; and
(2) all management, operational, and other plans and documents that govern the administration of such lands.

(d) RESERVATION OF FUNDS.—The Board shall reserve not more than 5 percent of funds appropriated under section 219 for Federal disaster relief programs.

SEC. 209. TRAINING AND EDUCATION SERVICES.

(a) ASSESSMENT OF SKILLS.—Each program agency shall assess the educational level of participants at the time of entrance into the program, using any available records or simplified assessment means or methodology.

(b) ENHANCEMENT OF SKILLS.—Each program agency shall, through programs and projects administered under this title, enhance the educational skills of participants in the program.

(c) PROVISION OF IN-SERVICE TRAINING AND EDUCATION.—
(1) REQUIREMENT.—A program agency shall use not less than 10 percent of the funds made available to such agency to provide in-service training and educational materials and services for participants and individuals serving in a project.
(2) AGREEMENTS FOR ACADEMIC STUDY.—A program agency that is receiving assistance under this Act may enter into arrangements with academic institutions or education providers, including—
(A) local education agencies;
(B) community colleges;
(C) 4-year colleges;
(D) area vocational-technical schools; and
(E) community based organizations; for academic study by a participant in order for such participant or individual to upgrade literacy skills, to obtain a high school diploma or the equivalent of such diploma, to obtain a college degree, or to enhance employable skills.
(3) COUNSELING.—Career and educational guidance and counseling shall be provided to a participant during a period of in-service training as described in this subsection.
(4) PRIORITY FOR PARTICIPANTS WITHOUT HIGH SCHOOL DIPLOMAS.—A participant who has not obtained a high school diploma or the equivalent of such diploma shall have priority to receive services under this subsection.

(d) POST-SERVICE EDUCATION AND TRAINING ASSISTANCE.—
(1) USE OF FUNDS.—A program or project receiving funds under section 219 shall use not less than 10 percent of such funds to meet the requirements of section 215 for post-service education and training assistance.
(2) ACTIVITIES.—The activities conducted under this section may include activities available to an eligible participant under in-service education and training assistance programs, career and vocational counseling, assistance in entering a program under the Job Training Partnership Act (29 U.S.C. 1501 et seq.), and assistance for other activities considered appropriate for such participant by the appropriate program agency and the Board.

(e) STANDARDS AND PROCEDURES.—
(1) CONSISTENCY WITH STATE AND LOCAL REQUIREMENTS.—Appropriate State and local officials shall certify that standards and procedures with respect to the awarding of academic credit and the certification of educational attainment in programs conducted under subsection (c) are consistent with the requirements of applicable State and local law and regulations.
(2) ACADEMIC STANDARDS.—Such standards and procedures shall specify that an individual serving in a program or project under this title—
(A) who is not a high school graduate shall participate in an educational curriculum so that such individual can earn a high school diploma or the equivalent of such diploma; and
(B) may arrange to receive academic credit in recognition of the education and skills obtained from service satisfactorily completed.

SEC. 210. AMOUNT OF AWARD.

In determining the amount of funds to be awarded to an applicant under this title, the Board shall consider—
(1) the proportion of the unemployed youth population of the area to be served; and
(2) the type of project or service proposed to be carried out with funds appropriated under this title.

SEC. 211. MATCHING REQUIREMENT.

(a) FEDERAL SHARE.—The Federal share of the cost of programs assisted under this title shall not exceed 75 percent.

(b) STATE OR LOCAL APPLICANT.—The State or local applicant share of the costs of programs assisted under this title shall be at least 25 percent.

SEC. 212. PREFERENCE FOR CERTAIN PROJECTS.

In the approval of applications for programs and projects submitted under section 205, the Board shall give preference to programs and projects that—
(1) will provide long-term benefits to the public;
(2) will instill a work ethic and a sense of public service in the participants;
(3) will be labor intensive, and involve youth operating in crews;
(4) can be planned and initiated promptly; and
(5) will enhance skills development and educational level and opportunities for the participants.

SEC. 213. EFFECT OF ALLOWANCES ON ELIGIBILITY FOR OTHER FEDERAL ASSISTANCE.

Living allowances and benefits received under this title by an economically disadvantaged youth, as defined in section 4(8) of the Job Training Partnership Act (29 U.S.C. 1503(8)), shall be disregarded in determining the eligibility of the family of the youth for, and the amount of, any Federal benefits based on need.

SEC. 214. AGE AND CITIZENSHIP CRITERIA FOR ENROLLMENT.

Enrollment in programs funded under this title shall be limited to individuals who, at the time of enrollment, are—
(1) not less than 16 years or more than 25 years of age, except that summer programs may include individuals not less than 15 years and not more than 21 years of age at the time of the enrollment of such individuals; and
(2) citizens or nationals of the United States (including those citizens of the Federated States of Micronesia, the Republic of the Marshall Islands, and Palau) or lawful permanent resident aliens of the United States.

SEC. 215. POST-SERVICE BENEFITS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—The program agency shall provide post-service education and training benefits (such as scholarships and grants) for each participant in an amount not less than $50 per week nor more than $100 per week.

(b) EXCLUSION FROM GROSS INCOME.—For purposes of section 61 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986, in the case of an individual, gross income shall not include any amount received as assistance under this section.

SEC. 216. LIVING ALLOWANCE.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Each participant in a full-time youth service corps program shall receive a living allowance of not less than 100 percent of the poverty line for a single individual (as defined in section 673(2) of the Community Services Block Grant Act (42 U.S.C. 9902(2))) and not more than 100 percent of the amount such participant would have earned if such participant had been paid at a rate equal to the minimum wage for a 40-hour work week under section 6(a)(1) of the Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938 (29 U.S.C. 206(a)(1)) during the period of service of such participant.

(b) HEALTH INSURANCE.—In addition to the living allowance provided under subsection (a), each participant in a full-time youth service corps shall be provided with health insurance.

(c) FACILITIES, SERVICES, AND SUPPLIES.—
(1) IN GENERAL.—The program agency may deduct, from amounts determined under subsections (a) and (b), a reasonable portion of the costs of the rates for room and board provided at residential facilities for a participant.
(2) EVALUATION.—The program agency shall establish the deductions and rates under paragraph (1) after evaluating of costs of providing such room and board.
(3) DUTIES OF PROGRAM AGENCY.—A program agency may provide facilities, quarters, and board and shall provide limited and emergency medical care, health insurance, transportation from administrative facilities to work sites, and other appropriate services, supplies, and equipment to each participant.

(d) GUIDANCE AND PLACEMENT.—
(1) IN GENERAL.—Each program agency shall provide such job and educational guidance and placement information and assistance for each participant as may be necessary.
(2) COORDINATION WITH OTHER ENTITIES.—Such assistance shall be provided in coordination with appropriate State, local, and private agencies and organizations.

SEC. 217. JOINT PROJECTS INVOLVING THE DEPARTMENT OF LABOR.

(a) DEVELOPMENT.—The Board may develop, in cooperation with the Secretary of Labor, regulations designed to allow, where appropriate, joint projects in which activities supported by funds authorized under section 219 are coordinated with activities supported by funds authorized under employment and training statutes administered by the Department of Labor (including the Job Training Partnership Act (29 U.S.C. 1501 et seq.)).

(b) STANDARDS.—Regulations promulgated under paragraph (1) shall provide standards for approval of joint projects that meet both the purposes of this title and the purposes of such employment and training statutes under which funds are available to support such projects.

SEC. 218. FEDERAL AND STATE EMPLOYEE STATUS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Participants and crew leaders are considered as being responsible to, or the responsibility of, the program agency administering the project on which such participants, crew leaders, and volunteers work.

(b) NON-FEDERAL EMPLOYEES.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Except as otherwise specifically provided in this subsection, a participant or crew leader in a project that receives assistance under this title shall not be considered a Federal employee and shall not be subject to the provisions of law relating to Federal employment.

(2) WORK-RELATED INJURY.—For purposes of subchapter I of chapter 81 of title 5, United States Code, relating to the compensation of Federal employees for work injuries, a participant or crew leader serving in a program that receives assistance under this title shall be considered an employee of the United States within the meaning of the term "employee" as defined in section 8101 of title 5, United States Code, and the provision of that subchapter shall apply, except—

(A) the term "performance of duty", as used in such subchapter, shall not include an act of a participant or crew leader while absent from the assigned post of duty of such participant or crew leader, except while participating in an activity authorized by or under the direction and supervision of a program agency (including an activity while on pass or during travel to or from such post of duty); and

(B) compensation for disability shall not begin to accrue until the day following the date that the employment of the injured participant or crew leader is terminated.

(3) TORT CLAIMS PROCEDURE.—For purposes of chapter 171 of title 28, United States Code, relating to tort claims procedure, a participant or crew leaders assigned to a Youth Service Corps project shall be considered an employee of the United States within the meaning of the term "employee of the government" as defined in section 2671 of such title.

(4) ALLOWANCE FOR QUARTERS.—For purposes of section 5911 of title 5, United States Code, relating to allowances for quarters, a participant or crew leader shall be considered an employee of the United States within the meaning of the term "employee" as defined in paragraph (3) of subsection (a) of that section.

SEC. 219. AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.

There are authorized to carry out this title $100,000,000 for fiscal year 1991, and such sums as may be necessary for each of the fiscal years 1992, 1993, 1994, and 1995.

TITLE III—NATIONAL SERVICE DEMONSTRATION PROGRAM

SEC. 301. SHORT TITLE.

This title may be cited as the "National and Community Service Demonstration Act".

As used in this title—

(1) BOARD.—The term "Board" means the National Service Board authorized under title IV.

(2) ELIGIBLE ORGANIZATION.—The term "eligible organization" means a public or private nonprofit organization engaged in meeting human, educational, environmental, or public safety needs.

(3) INSTITUTION OF HIGHER EDUCATION.—The term "institution of higher education" has the same meaning given that term in section 1201(a) of the Higher Education Act of 1965 (20 U.S.C. 1141(a)).

(4) PARTICIPANT.—The term "participant" means an individual participating in a program under this title.

(5) PLACEMENT.—The term "placement" means the matching of a participant or team with a specific project.

(6) PROGRAM.—The term "program" means an activity carried out under this title.

(7) SPECIAL SENIOR SERVICE MEMBER.—The term "special senior service member" means an individual who is age 60 or over and willing to work full-time or part-time in conjunction with a full-time national service program.

(8) SPONSORING ORGANIZATION.—The term "sponsoring organization" means an organization, eligible to receive assistance under this title, that has been selected by a State to provide a placement for a participant.

(9) STATE.—The term "State" means a State, the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico, Guam, the District of Columbia, American Samoa, the Virgin Islands, the Commonwealth of the Northern Mariana Islands, the Republic of the Marshall Islands, the Federated States of Micronesia, or Palau.

SEC. 303. GRANTS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Not later than 1 year from the date of enactment of this title, the Board shall, in accordance with the provisions of this title, make grants to States to create full-time and part-time national service demonstration programs.

(b) TERM OF GRANT.—The term of such grant shall not extend beyond September 30, 1995.

(c) CRITERIA FOR RECEIVING APPLICATIONS.—In awarding such grant to a State, the Board shall consider—

(1) the ability of the proposed program of such State to serve as an effective model for a large-scale national service program;

(2) the quality of the application of such State, including the plan of such State for training, recruitment, placement, and data collection;

(3) the extent that the proposed program builds on existing programs; and

(4) the expediency with which the State proposes to make the program operational.

(d) DIVERSITY.—The Board shall ensure that programs receiving such a grant are geographically diverse and include programs in both urban and rural States.

(e) ALTERNATIVE VOUCHER OPTION LIMITED.—The Board shall ensure that no more than 25 percent of States are authorized to exercise the alternative voucher authorized under section 307(d)(3).

(f) COMPOSITION OF PROGRAMS.—The Board shall ensure that at least 25 percent of programs under section 314 include full-time, part-time and special senior service participants.

(g) NUMBER OF STATES.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—The Board shall ensure that—

(A) no more than five States are authorized to operate full-time programs and no more than five States are authorized to operate part-time programs in fiscal year 1991;

(B) no more than eight States are authorized to operate full-time programs and no more than eight States are authorized to operate part-time programs in fiscal year 1992;

(C) no more than 10 States are authorized to operate full-time programs and no more than 10 States are authorized to operate part-time programs in fiscal year 1993; and

(D) no less than 12 States are authorized to operate full-time programs and no more than 35 States are authorized to operate part-time programs in each of the fiscal years 1994 and 1995.

(2) SINGLE PROGRAM.—For purposes of this subsection, a State operating a single national service program with both full-time and part-time options shall be counted as a State operating a full-time program and a State operating a part-time program.

(3) COOPERATIVE ARRANGEMENT.—For purposes of this subsection, a State operating a national service program involving a cooperative arrangement with a multi-State organization or with sites in more than one State shall be counted as a single State.

(h) STATE APPLICATION FOR GRANT.—In order to receive a grant under this title, a State shall submit an application to the Board at such time and in such manner as the Board may reasonably require. Each such application shall describe—

(1) the State administrative plan for the program, including such functions, if any, that will be carried out by public and private nonprofit organizations pursuant to a grant or contract;

(2) the method that participants, including economically and educationally disadvantaged youth, college-bound youth, and employed individuals, shall be recruited and selected for a program receiving assistance under section 314;

(3) procedures for training, supervising, and organizing participants in such program;

(4) the geographical areas within such State in which the program would be operated to provide the optimum match between the need for volunteer services and the anticipated supply of volunteers;

(5) the plan for placing such participants in teams or making individual placements in such program;

(6) assurances that, before such placement is made, such State will consult with any local labor organization representing employees in the area who are engaged in the same or similar work as that proposed to be carried out by such program;

(7) assurances that, before such placement is made, such State will consult with employees at the proposed project site who are engaged in the same or similar work as that proposed to be carried out by such program;

(8) the anticipated number of full-time and part-time participants and special senior service members in such program;

(9) a plan for recruiting and selecting sponsoring organizations that will receive participants under this title;

(10) procedures for matching such participants with such sponsoring organizations;

(11) the State budget for the program;

(12) whether the State desires to exercise the voucher alternative option authorized under section 307(d)(3);

(13) a plan for evaluating the program and assurances that such State will fully cooperate with any evaluation undertaken by the Board pursuant to section 414; and

(14) other such information as the Board may reasonably require.

SEC. 304. TYPES OF NATIONAL SERVICE.

(a) IN GENERAL.—A participant in a program funded under section 314 shall perform national service to meet unmet educational, human, environmental, and public safety needs, especially those needs relating to poverty.

(b) TYPES OF NATIONAL SERVICE.—Such national service may include the following types of service—

(1) educational service, such as literacy programs, Head Start, (as established under 42 U.S.C. 9831)) and other early childhood education programs, tutorial assistance, and service in schools, libraries, and adult education centers;

(2) human service, such as—

(A) service in hospitals, hospices, clinics, community health centers, public health organizations, facilities serving individuals with acquired immune deficiency syndrome, homes for elderly individuals, programs serving individuals with handicapping conditions, and child-care centers; and

(B) service in programs to assist elderly, disabled, poor, and homeless individuals, including programs to build, restore, and maintain housing for poor or homeless individuals and self-help programs;

(3) environmental service, such as service in programs to conserve, recycle, maintain, and restore natural resources in urban and rural environments, to provide recreational opportunities, and to encourage community betterment or beautification;

(4) public safety service, including placement with police, fire departments, courts, and prisons; and

(5) in the case of special senior service members, service to assist a State in administering a program, including mentoring, supervision, and other functions.

SEC. 305. TERMS OF SERVICE.

(a) LENGTH OF SERVICE.—

(1) PART-TIME.—An individual volunteering for part-time national service under this Act shall agree to perform community service for at least 3 years but not more than 6 years, at the discretion of such individual.

(2) FULL-TIME.—An individual volunteering for full-time national service shall agree to perform community service for at least one year but not more than two years, at the discretion of such individual.

(3) SPECIAL SENIOR SERVICE.—A special senior service participant performing national service shall serve for a period of time as allowed by the Board.

(b) PARTIAL COMPLETION OF SERVICE.—If the State releases a participant from completing a term of service in the program for compelling personal circumstances shown by such participant, the Board may provide such participant with a portion of the financial assistance specified in section 307 corresponding to the quantity of the service obligation completed by such individual.

(c) TERMS OF SERVICE.—

(1) PART-TIME.—A participant performing part-time national service shall serve for—

(A) 2 weekends a month and 2 weeks during the year; or

(B) an average of 9 hours per week.

(2) FULL-TIME.—A participant performing full-time national service shall serve for not less than 40 hours per week.

SEC. 306. ELIGIBILITY.

(a) PART-TIME.—

(1) ELIGIBILITY REQUIREMENTS.—An individual may serve in a part-time national service program if such individual—

(A) is age 17 or over;

(B) is a citizen of the United States or lawfully admitted for permanent residence.

(2) PRIORITY.—In selecting applicants for a part-time program, States shall give priority to applicants who are currently employed.

(b) FULL-TIME.—An individual may serve in a full-time national service program if such individual—

(1) is age 17 or over;

(2) has received a high school diploma or the equivalent of such diploma, or agrees to achieve a high school diploma or the equivalent of such diploma while participating in the program; and

(3) is a citizen of the United States or lawfully admitted for permanent residence.

(c) SPECIAL SENIOR SERVICE.—An individual may serve as a special senior service member if such individual—

(1) is age 60 or over; and

(2) meets the eligibility criteria for special senior service membership established by the Board.

SEC. 307. VOUCHERS.

(a) PART-TIME.—The Board shall annually provide to each part-time participant a nontransferrable voucher that is equal in value to $3,000 for each year of service that such participant provides to the program.

(b) FULL-TIME.—The Board shall annually provide to each full-time participant a nontransferrable voucher that is equal in value to $8,500 for each year of service that such participant provides to the program.

(c) SPECIAL SENIOR SERVICE PARTICIPANT.—A special senior service participant shall be ineligible to receive a voucher under this section.

(d) USE OF VOUCHER.—

(1) PART-TIME.—A voucher issued pursuant to subsection (a) shall only be used for—

(A) payment of a student loan from Federal or non-Federal sources;

(B) downpayment or closing costs for a first home; or

(C) tuition at an institution of higher education on a full-time basis, or the expenses incurred in the full-time participation in an apprenticeship program approved by the appropriate State agency.

(2) FULL-TIME.—A voucher issued pursuant to subsection (b) shall only be used for—

(A) payment of a student loan from Federal or non-Federal sources;

(B) downpayment or closing costs for a first home; or

(C) tuition, room and board, books and fees, and other costs associated with attendance (pursuant to section 472 of the Higher Education Act of 1965 (20 U.S.C. 1087ll)) at an institution of higher education on a full-time basis, or the expenses incurred in the full-time participation in an apprenticeship program approved by the appropriate State agency.

(3) ALTERNATIVE VOUCHER OPTION.—A State administering a full-time national service program may apply to the Board for authorization to offer an alternative voucher option limiting the use of vouchers to either education or housing.

(e) EXCLUSION FROM GROSS INCOME.—For purposes of section 61 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986, any compensation received under this section by a participant shall not be considered gross income.

SEC. 308. LIVING ALLOWANCE.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Each participant in a full-time national service program shall receive a living allowance of not less than 100 percent of the poverty line for a single individual (as defined in section 673(2) of the Community Services Block Grant Act (42 U.S.C. 9902(2))) and not more than 100 percent of the amount such participant would have earned if such participant had been paid at a rate equal to the minimum wage for a 40-hour workweek under section 6(a)(1) of the Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938 (29 U.S.C. 206(a)(1)) during the period of service of such participant.

(b) HEALTH INSURANCE.—In addition to the living allowance provided under subsection (a), each participant in a full-time national service program shall be provided with health insurance.

(c) SPECIAL SENIOR SERVICE PARTICIPANT.—

(1) FULL-TIME.—Each full-time special senior service participant shall receive a living allowance equal to the living allowance provided to full-time participants under subsection (a) and such other assistance as the Board considers necessary and appropriate for a special senior service participant to carry out the service obligation of such participant.

(2) PART-TIME.—Each part-time special senior service participant shall receive a living allowance equal to a share of such allowance offered to a full-time special senior service participant under paragraph (1), that has been prorated according to the number of hours such part-time participant serves in the program and such other assistance that the Board considers necessary and appropriate for a special senior service participant to carry out the service obligation of such participant.

SEC. 309. TRAINING.

(a) PROGRAM TRAINING.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Each participant shall receive 3 weeks of training conducted by the Board in cooperation with the State.

(2) CONTENTS OF TRAINING SESSION.—Each training session described in paragraph (1) shall—

(A) orient each participant to the nature, philosophy, and purpose of the program;

(B) build an ethic community service; and

(C) train each participant to effectively perform the assigned program task of such participant by providing—

(i) general training in citizenship and civic and community service; and

(ii) if feasible, specialized training for the type of national service that each participant will perform.

(b) ADDITIONAL TRAINING.—Each State may provide additional training for participants.

(c) AGENCY OR ORGANIZATION TRAINING.—In addition to the training described in subsections (a) and (b), each participant shall receive training from the sponsoring organization in skills relevant to the work to be conducted.

SEC. 310. USE OF FUNDS.

(a) PROHIBITED USES.—No Federal funds shall be expended for training provided pursuant to section 309(b), State administration, State recruitment, supervision of participants, inservice education benefits provided pursuant to section 312, grievance procedures and arbitration required under subsection 411(e), the State cost of data collection, the expenses of State advisory committees, or constructing, building, or renovating any physical structure or facility.

(b) ALLOWABLE USES.—The expenditure of Federal funds shall be limited to training provided pursuant to section 309(a), vouchers provided pursuant to section 307, living allowances and health insurance provided pursuant to section 308(b), Federal administrative costs under sections 414 and 416, and the costs of evaluations conducted pursuant to section 414.

SEC. 311. PUBLIC-PRIVATE PARTNERSHIP.

The Board shall consider and develop opportunities for cooperation between public and private entities in the funding and execution of a program funded under section 314, including cost-sharing arrangements with sponsoring organizations.

SEC. 312. IN-SERVICE EDUCATION BENEFITS.

Each State that receives funds under section 314 shall provide to each participant enrolled in a full-time program funded under section 314 in-service educational services and materials to enable such participant to obtain a high school diploma or the equivalent of such diploma.

SEC. 313. NATIONAL SERVICE DEMONSTRATION PROGRAM AMENDMENTS.

(a) TREATMENT OF EDUCATION AND HOUSING VOUCHER.—For purposes of determining eligibility for programs under title IV of the Higher Education Act of 1965 (20 U.S.C. 1070 et seq.) (hereafter in this section referred to as the "Act"), vouchers received under this Act shall be considered as estimated financial assistance as defined in section 428(a)(2)(C)(i) of title IV of the Act (20 U.S.C. 1078(a)(2)(C)(i)), except that in no case shall such a voucher be considered as—

(1) annual adjusted family income as defined in section 411F(1) of subpart 1 of part A of title IV of the Act (20 U.S.C. 1070a-6); or

(2) total income as defined in section 480(a) of part F of title IV of the Act (20 U.S.C. 1087vv(a)).

(b) TREATMENT OF STIPEND FOR LIVING EXPENSES.—In no case shall stipends received under this Act be considered in the determination of expected family contribution or independent student status under—

(1) subpart 1 of part A of title IV of the Act (20 U.S.C. 1070a et seq.); or

(2) part F of title IV of the Act (20 U.S.C. 1087kk et seq.).

(c) CONFORMING AMENDMENTS.—The Act is amended—

(1) in section 411F(9) (20 U.S.C. 1070a-6(9)), by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(F) Annual adjusted family income does not include any stipend received by a participant in the National Service Demonstration Program established under the National and Community Service Act of 1989.";

(2) in section 411F(12)(B)(vi) (20 U.S.C. 1070a-6(12)(B)(vi)), by striking "(including all sources of resources other than parents)" and inserting "(including all sources of resources other than parents and stipends received as a result of participation in the National Service Demonstration Program established under the National and Community Service Act of 1989.";

(3) in section 480(f) (20 U.S.C. 1087vv(f)), by—

(A) striking "and" at the end of paragraph (1);

(B) by striking the period at the end of paragraph (2) and inserting a semicolon and "and"; and

(C) adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"(3) any stipend received by a participant in the National Service Demonstration Program established under the National and Community Service Act of 1989."; and

(4) in section 480(d)(2)(F) (20 U.S.C. 1087vv(d)(2)(F)), by inserting after "other than parents" "and stipends received as a result of participation in the National Service Demonstration Program established under the National and Community Service Act of 1989)".

SEC. 314. AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.

There are authorized to be appropriated to carry out this title $100,000,000 in fiscal year 1991, $125,000,000 in fiscal year 1992, $150,000,000 in fiscal year 1993, $300,000,000 in fiscal year 1994, and $300,000,000 in fiscal year 1995.

(2) CORPORATION.—The term "Corporation" means the Corporation for National Service, as established by section 402(a).

(3) ELECTION.—The term "election" has the same meaning, when referring to an election for Federal office, as given such term in section 301(1) of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 (2 U.S.C. 431(1)).

(4) FEDERAL OFFICE.—The term "Federal office" has the same meaning as given that term in section 301(3) of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 (2 U.S.C. 431(3)).

SEC. 402. ESTABLISHMENT OF CORPORATION; APPLICATION OF DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA NONPROFIT CORPORATION ACT.

(a) ESTABLISHMENT.—There is established a nonprofit corporation, to be known as the "Corporation for National Service", that shall not be considered an agency or establishment of the United States Government.

(b) APPLICATION OF DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA NONPROFIT CORPORATION ACT.—The Corporation shall be subject to this Act, and to the extent consistent with this Act, to the District of Columbia Nonprofit Corporation Act.

SEC. 403. BOARD OF DIRECTORS.

(a) APPOINTMENT.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—The Corporation shall be directed by a National Service Board consisting of 11 members appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate.

(2) TIME PERIOD FOR APPOINTMENTS.—The President shall appoint members of the Board not later than 90 days after the date of enactment of this title.

(3) POLITICAL AFFILIATION.—Not more than six members of the Board shall be members of the same political party.

(4) NOMINATIONS.—Three of the members of the Board shall be appointed from individuals nominated by the Speaker of the House of Representatives, and three of such members shall be appointed from individuals nominated by the majority leader of the Senate.

(b) QUALIFICATIONS.—The President shall select the members of the Board—

(1) from among citizens who are eminent in such fields as community service, youth service, education, civic affairs, business, labor, or military service; and

(2) so as to provide as nearly as practicable a broad representation of various regions of the United States, various professions and occupations, and a variety of talent and experience appropriate for the performance of the functions and responsibilities of the Corporation.

(c) INCORPORATION.—The members of the initial Board of Directors shall serve as incorporators and shall take whatever actions are necessary to incorporate the Corporation under the District of Columbia Nonprofit Corporation Act.

(d) TERM OF OFFICE.—The term of office of each member of the Board shall be 7 years, except that—

(1) any member appointed to fill a vacancy within the Board occurring prior to the expiration of the term for which the predecessor of such member was appointed shall be appointed for the remainder of such term;

(2) initial appointments to the Board shall be for terms of 3, 5, or 7 years; and

(3) no member of the Board shall be eligible to serve more than two consecutive terms.

(e) VACANCY.—A vacancy in the Board shall not affect the power of the Board and shall be filled in the same manner as the original appointment.

(f) MEETINGS.—

(1) REQUIREMENT.—A member of the Board shall attend not less than 50 percent of all duly convened meetings of the Board in any calendar year.

(2) PENALTY.—

(A) IN GENERAL.—A member who fails to meet the requirement of paragraph (1) shall forfeit membership on the Board.

(B) APPOINTMENT OF NEW MEMBER.—The President shall appoint a new member to fill such vacancy created under subparagraph (A) (while meeting the requirements of subsection (e)), not later than 30 days after such vacancy is determined by the Chairperson of the Board, as elected in subsection (g).

(3) QUORUM.—Six members of the Board shall constitute a quorum.

(g) ELECTION OF CHAIRPERSON AND VICE CHAIRPERSON.—Members of the Board shall annually elect one such member to be Chairperson and elect one or more of such members as a Vice Chairperson.

(h) COMPENSATION OF BOARD MEMBERS.—

(1) NON-FEDERAL EMPLOYEE.—A member of the Board shall not, by reason of such membership, be considered to be an officer or employee of the United States.

(2) COMPENSATION.—Except as provided in paragraphs (3) and (4), a member of the Board shall, while away from the home or regular place of business of such member, be allowed travel and actual, reasonable, and necessary expenses.

(3) FEDERAL EMPLOYEE.—A member of the Board who is a full-time officer or employee of the United States shall receive no additional pay, allowances, or benefits by reason of such membership.

SEC. 404. OFFICERS AND EMPLOYEES.

(a) IN GENERAL.—

(1) RATE OF BASIC PAY.—The Corporation shall have a President, and such other officers and employees as may be named and appointed by the Board for terms and at rates of compensation fixed by the Board, except that no officer or employee of the Corporation may receive compensation at an annual rate of pay that exceeds the rate of basic pay payable from time to time for level I of the Executive Schedule under section 5312 of title 5, United States Code.

(2) ADDITIONAL COMPENSATION.—No officer or employee of the Corporation shall receive any salary or other compensation from any source other than the Corporation for services performed for the Corporation.

(3) TERM OF OFFICE.—All officers and employees of the Corporation shall serve at the pleasure of the Board.

(b) EMPLOYMENT OF SPECIAL SENIOR SERVICE MEMBERS.—In selecting employees, the Board is encouraged to include members of the Special Senior Service as defined in section 302(8).

(c) DETAIL OF GOVERNMENT EMPLOYEES.—Any Federal Government employee may be detailed to the Corporation without payment of reimbursement to the detailing agency. A detail of a Federal employee under this subsection shall not result in the interruption or loss of civil service status or privilege of such employee.

SEC. 405. NONPROFIT AND NONPOLITICAL NATURE OF THE CORPORATION.

(a) LIMITATIONS ON POWERS.—

(1) ISSUANCE OF STOCK.—The Corporation shall not issue any shares of stock or declare or pay any dividends.

(2) INCOME OR ASSETS OF THE CORPORATION.—No part of the income or assets of the Corporation shall inure to the benefit of any director, officer, employee, or any other individual except as salary or reasonable compensation for services on behalf of the Corporation.

(b) NONPOLITICAL NATURE OF CORPORATION.—The Corporation shall not contribute to or otherwise support any political party or candidate for elective public office.

SEC. 406. HOUSING AND EDUCATION VOUCHERS; LIVING ALLOWANCES.

(a) HOUSING AND EDUCATION VOUCHERS.—The Corporation shall issue housing and education vouchers pursuant to section 307. The Board shall consult with the Department of Education in issuing education vouchers.

(b) LIVING ALLOWANCES.—The Corporation shall establish living allowances pursuant to section 308, taking into account regional variations in the cost of living.

SEC. 407. REPORTS.

(a) STATE REPORTS.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Each State receiving funds under part A of title I and titles II and III shall submit an annual report to the Board on the status of national and community youth service programs in such State.

(2) LOCAL GRANTEES.—Each State may require local grantees receiving funds under part A of title I and titles II and III to supply such information as is necessary to complete such report, including a comparison of actual accomplishments with the goals established for the program, the number of participants in the program, the number of service hours generated, and the existence of any problems, delays or adverse conditions that have affected or will affect the attainment of program goals.

(3) REPORT DEMONSTRATING COMPLIANCE.—

(A) IN GENERAL.—Each State receiving funds pursuant to this title shall include information in such report that demonstrates compliance with the provisions of section 412.

(B) LOCAL GRANTEES.—Each State may require local grantees to supply such information as is necessary to comply with paragraph (1).

(4) AVAILABILITY OF REPORT.—Such report shall be available to the public on request.

(b) REPORT TO CONGRESS.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—The Board shall, not later than 120 days after the end of each fiscal year, prepare and submit to the appropriate authorizing and appropriation committees in Congress a report on programs funded under part A of titles I and titles II and III.

(2) CONTENT.—Such report shall summarize information contained in State reports required under subsection (a) and reflect the findings and actions taken as a result of any evaluation conducted by the Board.

SEC. 408. SUPPLEMENTATION.

(a) IN GENERAL.—All Federal funds and funds used to pay the remainder of the costs of programs assisted under part A of title I and titles II and III shall be used to supplement the level of State and local public funds expended for services assisted under this Act in the previous fiscal year.

(b) AGGREGATE EXPENDITURE.—Subsection (a) shall be satisfied, with respect to a particular program, if the aggregate expenditure in such program for the fiscal year in which services are to be provided will not be less than the aggregate expenditure in such program in the previous fiscal year, excluding Federal funds and funds used to pay the remainder of the costs of programs assisted under this title.

SEC. 409. PROHIBITION ON USE OF FUNDS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Funds provided under part A of title I and titles II and III shall not be used by program participants and program staff to—

(1) give religious instruction, conduct worship services, or engage in any form of proselytization;

(2) assist, promote, or deter union organizing; and

(3) finance, directly or indirectly, an activity designed to influence the outcome of an election to Federal office or the outcome of an election to a State or local public office.

(b) CONTRACTS OR COLLECTIVE BARGAINING AGREEMENTS.—A project assisted under this title shall not impair existing contracts for services or collective bargaining agreements.

SEC. 410. NONDISCRIMINATION.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Any financial assistance provided under this Act shall constitute Federal financial assistance for purposes of title VI of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 (42 U.S.C. 2000d et seq.), title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (20 U.S.C. 1681 et seq.), the Rehabilitation Act of 1973 (29 U.S.C. 701 et seq.), the Age Discrimination Act of 1975 (42 U.S.C. 6101 et seq.), and the regulations issued thereunder.

(b) NONDISCRIMINATION.—An individual with responsibility for the operation of a program funded under this part A of title I and titles II or III shall not discriminate in the selection of participants to such program because of race, religion, color, national origin, sex, age, handicap, or political affiliation.

(c) RULES AND REGULATIONS.—

(1) EDUCATION.—In the case of programs funded under part A of title I, the Secretary of Education shall issue rules and regulations to provide for the enforcement of this section that shall include provisions for summary suspension of assistance for no more than 30 days, on an emergency basis, until notice and an opportunity to be heard can be provided.

(2) VOLUNTEER SERVICE.—In the case of programs funded under title II and title III of this Act, the Board shall issue rules and regulations to provide for the enforcement of this section that shall include provisions for summary suspension of assistance for not more than 30 days, on an emergency basis, until notice and an opportunity to be heard can be provided.

SEC. 411. NOTICE, HEARING, AND GRIEVANCE PROCEDURES.

(a) IN GENERAL.—

(1) SUSPENSION OF PAYMENTS.—The Secretary of Education (in the case of a program funded under title I) or the Board (in the case of a program funded under title II or III), is authorized, in accordance with the provisions of this Act, to suspend payments or to terminate payments under a contract or grant providing assistance under this Act whenever the Secretary determines there is a material failure to comply with this Act or the applicable terms and conditions of any such grant or contract issued pursuant to this Act.

(2) PROCEDURES TO ENSURE ASSISTANCE.—The Secretary of Education (in the case of a program funded under part A of title I) or the Board (in the case of a program funded under title II or III) shall prescribe procedures to ensure that—

(A) assistance under this Act shall not be suspended for failure to comply with the applicable terms and conditions of this Act except, in emergency situations, a suspension may be granted for 30 days; and

(B) assistance under this Act shall not be terminated for failure to comply with applicable terms and conditions of this Act unless the recipient of such assistance has been afforded reasonable notice and opportunity for a full and fair hearing.

(b) HEARINGS.—Hearings or other meetings that may be necessary to fulfill the requirements of this section shall be held at locations convenient to such recipient.

(c) TRANSCRIPT OR RECORDING.—A transcript or recording shall be made of a hearing conducted under this section and shall be available for inspection by any individual.

(d) STATE LEGISLATION.—Nothing in this Act shall be interpreted to preclude the enactment of State legislation providing for the implementation, consistent with this Act, of the programs administered under this Act.

(e) GRIEVANCE PROCEDURE.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—State and local applicants funded under part A of title I and titles II, and III shall establish and maintain a procedure to adjudicate grievances from participants, labor organizations, and other interested individuals concerning projects funded under this Act, including grievances regarding proposed placements of such participants in such projects.

(2) DEADLINE FOR GRIEVANCES.—Except for a grievance that alleges fraud or criminal activity, a grievance shall be made within 1 year after the date of the alleged occurrence.

(3) DEADLINE FOR HEARING AND DECISION.—

(A) HEARING.—A hearing on any grievance shall be conducted within 30 days of filing such grievance.

(B) DECISION.—A decision on any grievance shall be made not later than 60 days after the filing of such grievance.

(4) ARBITRATION.—

(A) IN GENERAL.—On the occurrence of an adverse grievance decision, or 60 days after the filing of such grievance if no decision has been reached, the party filing the grievance shall be permitted to submit such grievance to binding arbitration before a qualified arbitrator who is jointly selected and independent of the interested parties.

(B) DEADLINE FOR PROCEEDING.—An arbitration proceeding shall be held within 45 days after the request for such arbitration.

(C) DEADLINE FOR DECISION.—A decision on such grievance shall be made within 30 days after the date of such arbitration proceeding.

(D) COST.—The cost of such arbitration proceeding shall be divided evenly between the parties.

(5) PROPOSED PLACEMENT.—If a grievance is filed regarding a proposed placement of a participant in a program assisted under this Act, such placement shall not be made unless such grievance is resolved pursuant to this subsection.

(6) REMEDIES.—Remedies for a grievance filed under this subsection include—

(A) suspension of payments for assistance under this Act;

(B) termination of such payments; and

(C) prohibition of such placement described in paragraph (5).

SEC. 412. NONDUPLICATION AND NONDISPLACEMENT.

(a) NONDUPLICATION.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Funds provided under this Act shall be used only for a program that does not duplicate, and is in addition to, an activity otherwise available in the locality of such program.

(2) PRIVATE NONPROFIT ENTITY.—Funds available under this Act shall not be provided to a private nonprofit entity to conduct activities that are the same or substantially equivalent to activities provided by a State or local government agency that such entity resides in, unless the requirements of subsection (b) are met.

(b) NONDISPLACEMENT.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—An employer shall not displace an employee or position, including partial displacement such as reduction in hours, wages, or employment benefits, as a result of the use by such employer of a participant in a program established under this Act.

(2) SERVICE OPPORTUNITIES.—A service opportunity shall not be created under this Act that will infringe in any manner on the promotional opportunity of an employed individual.

(3) LIMITATION ON SERVICES.—

(A) DUPLICATION OF SERVICES.—A participant in a program under this Act shall not perform any services or duties or engage in activities that would otherwise be performed by an employee as part of the assigned duties of such employee.

(B) SUPPLANTATION OF HIRING.—A participant in any program under this Act shall not perform any services or duties or engage in activities that will supplant the hiring of employed workers.

(C) DUTIES FORMERLY PERFORMED BY ANOTHER EMPLOYEE.—A participant shall not perform services or duties that have been performed by or were assigned to any—

(i) presently employed worker;

(ii) employee who recently resigned or was discharged;

(iii) employee who is subject to a reduction in force;

(iv) employee who is on leave (terminal, temporary, vacation, emergency, or sick); or

(v) employee who is on strike or who is being locked out.

SEC. 413. STATE ADVISORY BOARD.

(a) FORMATION OF BOARD.—Each State applying for funds under part A of title I or titles II or III shall form a State Advisory Board for National and Community Service.

(b) APPOINTMENT OF MEMBERS.—The Governor of such State shall appoint members to such Advisory Board from among—

(1) representatives of State agencies administering community service, youth service, education, social service, and job training programs; and

(2) representatives of labor, business, agencies working with youth, community-based organizations such as community action agencies, students, teachers, Older American Volunteer Programs as established under title II of the Domestic Volunteer Act of 1973 (42 U.S.C. 5001 et seq.), full-time youth service corps programs, school-based community service programs, higher education institutions, local educational agencies, volunteer public safety organizations, educational partnership programs, and other organizations working with volunteers.

(c) DUTIES OF BOARD.—The State Advisory Board for National and Community Service shall assist the State agency administering a program funded under part A of title I or titles II or III in—

(1) coordinating service programs and related programs within the State;

(2) disseminating information about service programs funded under this Act;

(3) recruiting participants for programs funded under this Act; and

(4) developing programs, training methods, curriculum materials, and other materials and activities related to programs funded under this Act.

SEC. 414. EVALUATION.

(a) IN GENERAL.—The Board shall provide, through grants or contracts, for the continuing evaluation of programs assisted under titles II and III, including evaluations that measure and evaluate the impact of programs authorized by titles II and III, in order to determine—

(1) the effectiveness of such programs in achieving stated goals in general and in relation to cost;

(2) the impact of such programs on related programs, including VISTA, the military, the Peace Corps (as established by the Peace Corps Act (22 U.S.C. 2501 et seq.)), and the National Guard; and

(3) the structure and mechanisms for delivery of services for such programs.

(b) COMPARISONS.—The Board shall include in such evaluations, where appropriate, comparisons of participants in such programs with individuals who have not participated in such programs.

(c) CONDUCTING EVALUATIONS.—Evaluations of such program shall be conducted by individuals who are not directly involved in the administration of such program.

(d) PROGRAM OBJECTIVES.—The Board shall ensure that programs funded under title III are evaluated for effectiveness in—

(1) recruiting and enrolling of diverse participants in such programs, consistent with the requirements of section 306, based on economic background, race, ethnicity, age, marital status, education levels, and handicap;

(2) promoting of the educational achievement of each participant in such programs, based on earning a high school diploma or the equivalent of such diploma and the future enrollment and completion of increasingly higher levels of education;

(3) encouraging each participant to engage in public and community service after completion of the program based on career choices and service in other service programs such as the Volunteers in Service to America program established under the Domestic Volunteer Service Act of 1973 (42 U.S.C. 4950 et seq.), the Peace Corps (as established by the Peace Corps Act (22 U.S.C. 2501 et seq.)), the military, and part-time volunteer service;

(4) promoting of positive attitudes among each participant regarding the role of such participant in solving community problems based on the view of such participant regarding the personal capacity of such participant to improve the lives of others, the responsibilities of such participant as a citizen and community member, and other factors;

(5) enabling each participant to finance a lesser portion of the higher education of such participant through student loans;

(6) providing services and projects that benefit the community;

(7) supplying additional volunteer assistance to community agencies, but not overloading such agencies with more volunteers than can effectively be utilized;

(8) providing services and activities that could not otherwise be performed by employed workers and that will not supplant the hiring of, or result in the displacement of, employed workers or impair the existing contracts of such workers; and

(9) attracting a greater number of citizens to public service, including service in the active and reserve components of the Armed Forces, the National Guard, the Peace Corps (as established by the Peace Corps Act (22 U.S.C. 2501 et seq.)), and VISTA.

(e) COMPARISON OF PROGRAM MODELS.—The Board shall evaluate and compare the effectiveness of different program models in meeting the program objectives under subsection (d) including full-time and part-time programs, programs involving different types of national service, programs using different recruitment methods, programs offering alternative voucher options, and programs utilizing individual placements and teams.

(f) OBTAINING INFORMATION.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—In performing the evaluation required under subsection (d), the Board may require each program participant and State or local applicant to provide such information as may be necessary to carry out the requirements of this section.

(2) CONFIDENTIALITY.—The Board shall keep such information confidential.

(g) DEADLINE.—The Board shall complete the evaluation required under subsection (d) not later than 4 years after the date of enactment of this Act.

SEC. 415. FUNDING.

Of funds appropriated for title II and III of this Act, not less than $5 million or more than $25 million shall be made available to the Board for program support and activities referred to in sections 414 and 416.

SEC. 416. FUNCTIONS OF THE NATIONAL SERVICE BOARD.

The National Service Board shall—

(1) administer programs authorized under title II and title III of this Act;

(2) provide, directly or through contract with public or private nonprofit organizations with extensive experience in service programs, training and technical assistance to States, full-time youth service corps, and national service demonstration programs;

(3) in consultation with the Department of Education, provide one or more clearinghouses for information on service (the Board may contract with public or private non-profit organizations with extensive experience in service to perform such clearinghouse function);

(4) consult with appropriate Federal agencies in administering programs funded under titles II and III; and

(5) arrange for the evaluation of programs authorized under titles II and III of this Act, in accordance with section 414.

SEC. 417. PRESIDENTIAL AWARDS FOR SERVICE.

(a) PRESIDENTIAL AWARDS.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—The President is authorized to make Presidential Awards for service to individuals demonstrating outstanding community service and to outstanding service programs.

(2) NUMBER OF AWARDS.—The President is authorized to make one individual and one program award in each Congressional district, and one statewide program award in each State.

(3) CONSULTATION.—The President shall consult with the Governor of each State in the selection of individuals and programs for Presidential Awards.

(4) PARTICIPANTS IN PROGRAMS.—An individual receiving an award under this section need not be a participant in a program assisted under this Act.

(b) INFORMATION.—The President shall ensure that information concerning individuals and programs receiving awards under this section is widely disseminated.

SEC. 418. COMPREHENSIVE SERVICE STRATEGY.

The President shall design a comprehensive Federal service strategy that shall include—

(1) the review of existing programs to identify and expand opportunities for service, especially by students and out-of-school youth;

(2) the designation of a senior official in each Federal agency who will be responsible for developing youth service opportunities in existing programs nationwide;

(3) the establishment of service projects in each Federal agency;

(4) the encouragement of Federal employees to participate in service projects;

(5) the designation of an executive branch official to coordinate the Federal service strategy; and

(6) the annual recognition of outstanding service programs by a Federal agency.

SEC. 419. ENGAGEMENT OF PARTICIPANTS.

A State shall not engage a participant to serve in any program funded under this Act unless and until Federal funds have been appropriated for vouchers and other necessary expenses and costs associated with such participant in such fiscal year in such State.

TITLE V—EXPANSION OF VOLUNTEERS IN SERVICE TO AMERICA

SEC. 501. SHORT TITLE.

This title may be cited as the "VISTA Expansion Act of 1989".

RECESS UNTIL 12:45 P.M.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate stand in recess until the hour of 12:45 p.m., at the behest of the majority leader and at the request of the Senator from Utah [Mr. HATCH].

There being no objection, the Senate, at 12:17 p.m., recessed until 12:45 p.m.; whereupon, the Senate reassembled when called to order by the Presiding Officer [Mr. ROBB].

NATIONAL AND COMMUNITY SERVICE ACT

The Senate continued with the consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts is recognized.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, today the Senate begins consideration of S. 1430, the National and Community Service Act of 1990. Across the world, nations are beginning this new decade with interest in democracy. In unprecedented numbers, Eastern Europeans and Soviet citizens are standing up for new order, calling for the participation of the people in the institutions of government. It is tragedy that while brave, young people of oppressed nations risk their lives for the right to self-government, more and more young Americans do not vote and feel disconnected from their communities.

They have forgotten that democracy means not only the right to pursue one's own interest, but the responsibility to participate in the life of the Nation in return.

Three decades ago, we were in the beginning stages of the Cold War, and Americans lived in the deepening shadow of the nuclear arms race. In an effort to promote world peace and international understanding, President Kennedy called on all Americans to ask what they could do for their country. Americans responded by the millions, and today, the Peace Corps bears witness to those words and their enduring appeal.

Today, the challenges we face at home are as monumental as those we faced abroad three decades ago. Drug abuse has become a national scandal. America has unprecedented numbers of homeless families. One in five children grows up in poverty. Twenty-three million Americans are too illiterate to read the headlines of a daily newspaper. We have failed to preserve our natural resources of clean air and water and our great national forests are at risk through exploitation and pollution.

We cannot meet these challenges without the full participation of our citizenry. It is time to rekindle the sense of community service and commitment to others. The National and Community Service Act of 1990 is an attempt to provide Federal leadership and support in our common effort to reach these goals.

We began work on this issue a year ago when a task force of the Labor and Human Resources Committee reviewed proposals by a dozen Senators. The committee held four hearings, listening to over 50 witnesses. Senators PELL, MIKULSKI, DODD, NUNN, and I worked closely to draft S. 1430, which incorporates the best ideas of congressional sponsors of national service legislation.

The Labor Committee reported this legislation in August 1989, by a bipartisan vote of 11-4. Senators DURENBERGER, SPECTER, and JEFFORDS have all been helpful in building bipartisan support for the bill. Finally, Senator HATCH deserves great credit for his work in restructing the legislation and including President's Points of Light Initiative Foundation.

We will be offering a floor amendment on behalf of the Labor Committee. This amendment incorporates a compromise between the sponsors of S. 1430 and Senator HATCH. We are very grateful that Senator HATCH has been willing to work with us to craft legislation that accommodates all of our interests.

Title I of the bill provides funding for States and localities to establish a wide array of national and community service programs for Americans of all ages.

Title I funds will be used to start up part-time community service programs for young people through their schools or through community organizations like the YMCA or United Way. Funds may also be used to enable members of the community, particularly senior citizens, to volunteer in the schools. This model is based on legislation I proposed last year called Serve-America, and an educational partnership proposal by Senator GRAHAM. Its goal is to make such programs available to every student in America, from kindergarten to college.

Mr. President, we have seen some rather dramatic examples of these programs at work. In my own State of Massachusetts, the Springfield school system actually requires community service for grades K through 12—although there is nothing in this legislation that requires that children who are going to receive a diploma must perform community service. In this program young children in the kindergarten are involved in various community programs, such as folding napkins or developing various Valentines for senior citizens on Valentine's Day, there are a variety of different activities; 4th and 7th graders adopt a senior citizen, call that senior citizen in the nursing home, spend 5 minutes a day talking to that elderly person, visiting that elderly person on their birthday—this program has been well received by the students as well as the faculty and the community and their parents. It is just one of a variety of examples of which we take note.

We have also recognized the extraordinary interest of many of our retirees in being involved in community service. Last year I had the opportunity to visit the Date County school system. Under the then Superintendent of Education, Mr. Fernandez, they incorporated tens of thousands of senior citizens into the school system. Those senior citizens involved themselves with tremendous interest in what was happening in the schools, attending various academic programs, cultural programs, and educational programs. They involved themselves in an important way in the life of the community and in the future education of these young people. So we recognize that what we are trying to devise is some kind of path to draw on the extraordinary desire and willingness of many Americans to involve themselves in different community activities.

The educational partnership proposal was included in this program at the request of Senator GRAHAM of Florida, who will be here later to speak about it. It is something of which every community should take note and hopefully find some aspects of the program that are particularly worthwhile.

The goal, as I said, is to make such programs in this part of the legislation available to every student in America from kindergarten to college. Then, as various community programs begin, we will hopefully find that those who finish and complete school will have made voluntarism lifetime commitment. And by trying to provide these opportunities through the school system, we will begin to draw on that sense of commitment in our young people.

Our legislation also recognizes that many citizens, having learned the lesson of service, will want to make a more substantial commitment to the country. To expand the number of full-time service opportunities, title I will also support youth service and conservation corps programs, in which young Americans work in teams to clean up the environment, respond to hunger, homelessness, disease, and poverty, and meet other pressing needs.

Senators DODD and MOYNIHAN authored this provision, which is based on the Civilian Conservation Corps of the 1930's, and currently exists in 60 States and localities across the country. These programs have been successful in providing needed services to communities at minimal cost, while teaching young people jobs skills and enhancing their self-esteem.

As described during the Labor and Human Resources Committee hearings, for many of the youth in these programs, It is the first time in their lives that they have felt that they had something to contribute to their communities. For many, their corps experience is a turning point in their lives that can make the difference between lifelong employment and long-term reliance on social services.

We also believe that service opportunities ought to be available to all Americans, including those for whom a serious commitment to service might prevent them from pursuing the goal of a college education or the chance to own a home. Therefore, title I will also provide opportunities for students to earn college scholarships, and for young workers to make a downpayment on a home by serving their communities full time or part time. In a related provision, sponsored by Senator Bumpers, a portion of Federal student loans will be forgiven if students sign up for the Peace Corps, VISTA, or a comparable program after graduation.

A final option under title I enables States to design their own service programs. Over 30 States have begun service programs—ranging from full-time youth service corps to part-time volunteer programs. Several States have developed worthwhile models, offering an array of options—Massachusetts, Minnesota, Pennsylvania, and California are among the leaders in this effort. The innovative program under title I will enable States to implement their best ideas.

The National and Community Service Act also expands and modifies several existing programs. Two of these provisions—the doubling of the VISTA program and expansion of the Older American Volunteer Programs administered by the Action agency—have already been enacted as part of the reauthorization of the Domestic Volunteer Service Act. These programs are an important part of our national service effort and deserve to be funded at their full authorization levels.

Title II of S. 1430 expands another existing service program, the innovative projects for community service at the Department of Education, to encourage colleges and universities to make community service programs available on their campuses. This small program, administered by the fund for the improvement of postsecondary education, receives a dozen proposals for every one it is able to fund. The legislation also increases incentives for colleges to use their work-study funds for community service jobs, and for States to use their State student incentive grant money for community service programs.

For these work study programs the Federal Government will put up a substantial amount of the funds, and the colleges will put up the rest.

Finally, title III of S. 1430 includes President Bush's Points of Light Initiative Foundation. The purpose of the Foundation is to encourage every American to volunteer, to identify successful community service projects, and to promote leaders in community service. As the President has often said, the definition of a successful life must include service to others. The Points of Light Initiative Foundation will help us meet our goal of involving all Americans in voluntary service.

This legislation has many purposes. It will enable our Nation to respond to needs unmet by existing efforts with a force of citizens ready to combat drug abuse, homelessness and hunger, protect our forests, parks and streams, improve our schools and child care centers, and assist elderly and disabled members of the community.

It will remind all Americans of the responsibilities of citizenship, by starting service programs in the earliest grades.

Basically, what we are trying to do is encourage service programs in local communities that will be developed by the students or the community—but developed in such a way that they have both an educational component and make a contribution to the community. These are the criteria which we would try to set; programs that are particularly useful and worth while would be able to gain the seed money.

How important it is to have seed money. We had testimony of those that had been involved in ServVermont last year, where some of the high school seniors there wanted to have an alcohol-free graduations. They needed $100 in order to buy the paper and stamps to solicit the community and gain support for their project. This student was successful; she was able to develop sufficient resources. She had scores of other high schools uninvolved.

That $100 seed money provided important hope to many of the young people who, as a result, became involved in community service for the first time. This is the kind of timing we want to achieve with this legislation.

This legislation will benefit those who participate in service programs. It would expand access to higher education, job training, and home ownership to those who might not otherwise have those opportunities.

It will teach young people about the needs of the community. By teaching them to help others and also teach them that they can help themselves.

The bill applies a time-tested tool of educational reform, service learning. There is no better way to inspire a child's interest in science than by analyzing and cleaning up a polluted stream. There is no better way to help a teenager improve his reading skills than by helping a first grader learn to read.

This legislation will not restrict funding for student financial aid programs in any way. Nor will it require any person to serve in exchange for Federal benefits. It will not impose a new bureaucracy on States or localities. It is designed to work through existing agencies and programs. Most importantly, it will not compel any State, locality, institution, or individual to participate.

We hope that nationwide, every State will make available the array of opportunities available in many States today. In Massachusetts, for example, young people may serve for a year after high school through the City Year Program in Boston. In return, they earn a $5,000 scholarship. Students in the Springfield Public Schools begin a school-based community service program in kindergarten and continue through high school. Organizations like the Thomas Jefferson Forum, Youth Outreach Weekends, Boston Community Schools, the JFK Library Corps, Student Volunteer Resource Center, and Teens as Community Resources help young people volunteer outside the school setting.

Boston Partners in Education and Hand in Hand enable adult volunteers to assist schools and youth-serving agencies. Tufts University, Boston University, the University of Massachusetts, and other colleges and universities encourage their students to serve the surrounding communities.

I had the opportunity earlier to address what they call Campus Compact which is a series of over 100 colleges that are very much involved in trying to provide students with more opportunities for service in the community. Many of these colleges are actually providing school credits for community service. Some are not, but all understand the educational value of volunteering. When community service is supervised with the appropriate kind of academic oversight, it can be truly educational.

For those who believe that these programs benefit only the participants, I say, talk to the families in South Carolina whose homes, devastated by Hurricane Hugo, were repaired by members of the Montgomery County, MD, Greater Atlanta, and McKeesport, PA, Conservation Corps.

Talk to the rangers in Yellowstone Park who witnessed the strenuous work done by Conservation Corps crews from 14 States after the devastating fire in the summer of 1988. Talk to the residents of San Francisco, who saw how effectively the California Conservative Corps and the local corps in San Francisco and Oakland East Bay helped the city rebuild after the earthquake last October.

It is time for other Americans to roll up their sleeves too, and do what they can to serve their communities and the Nation. It is time to turn away from the "me" decade of the 1980's and make the 1990's the decade of helping others.

Mr. President, I remember attending, a little more than a year ago, the 25th anniversary of the Peace Corps. One of the events was a luncheon, and I had an opportunity to six at the table with the first volunteers. I asked all of them the same question, and they all gave virtually the same answer. The question was, why did they volunteer for the Peace Corps? And virtually the identical answer that came from all of them was that it was the first time that anyone had asked them to do something for someone else. It is that spirit out there among the young people of this country which I believe we as a society, whether it has been in the form of either family or church groups or local communities or State or at the national level, really have not tapped. It is very rich and powerful tradition which is unique to the whole American character and experience.

I believe it is one that we as a society desperately need, and our country needs. I think all of us who are aware of these programs know of the extraordinary value that it provides for those who participate.

Finally, Mr. President, I want to point out where we are today with the bill. The proposal which we are laying out to the Senate incorporates a variety of different approaches which have been proposed. All of the proposals have been modified substantially. But it has been an extraordinary indication of the sponsors' commitment to the concept that they are willing to make substantial adjustments and changes in their initiatives.

I see the Chair, now the Presiding Officer, Senator ROBB, who has, along with Senator NUNN, been involved in shaping a particular program.

We were able to work with Senator NUNN to ensure that the concepts which were the basis of that program, have been included.

As I mentioned, Senator DODD and Senator MIKULSKI have been longstanding advocates of the Conservation Corps and the part-time service opportunities.

We have been able to incorporate those ideas, and the principal sponsors of those programs will speak to them. We have urged them to do so.

Senator PELL and others have had a long-standing interest about how we could use the existing educational systems to provide greater opportunities and incentives for community service. Those have been incorporated. Senator BUMPERS and Members of the Senate have been equally committed to the expansion of VISTA, and have spoken to us about the concept of voluntary service. I know they will be addressing their particular interests and concern. What we hope, Mr. President, is that we will have a reasonable opportunity to consider all of these ideas. I call on my colleagues to examine this bill carefully.

This bill includes President Bush's proposal, and we have commended the President for speaking about this issue. The President, of course, first raised the issue in the 1988 Presidential campaign. His proposal has been more fully developed in the report by Governor Kean and his colleagues.

We have taken that particular recommendation, which was actually included in the President's 1991 budget, and have added that to our proposal as an indication of our willingness to put out a variety of programs. Then we plan, in the next year or two, to do a careful evaluation as to which programs have been the most effective, which ones have really been able to achieve support and interest, to evaluate the strengths and deficiencies of these programs and to continue to adjust and alter and changes these programs.

So that is basically the spirit of this legislation, Mr. President. We have a number of Senators on both sides of the aisle who will be over here speaking during the course of the afternoon about this proposal. We are prepared now to involve ourselves in considering any of the amendments.

I hope that Senator HATCH, who is our principal cosponsor, will have a chance to make a presentation on this particular proposal and then that we would welcome those Senators who have indicated a desire to speak, and also we are quite prepared, after that, to begin the debate on these amendments. We have had a number of amendments which have been recommended, and we are ready to discuss them. We know that the majority leader has been generous in setting this time, and it is our desire to work with those Members who want to offer amendments so that we could debate those fully this afternoon and then move to the disposition of some of those amendments.

Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The absence of a quorum has been suggested. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Ms. MIKULSKI addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair recognizes the Senator from Maryland [Ms. MIKULSKI].

Ms. MIKULSKI. Mr. President, I rise in enthusiastic support of the National and Community Service Act of 1990. I thank the Chair for being one of the leading architects of this legislative initiative and for the support that he has brought to it.

Mr. President, we are here today to talk not about a new program, but really enabling public policy to follow the basic American values we hold dear, the values of hard work and rewarding hard work, of civic obligation, and of lending a helping hand to others. We are particularly cognizant of the value in our county of continuing to develop social inventions that provide access to the American dream. Access to the American dream has brought people from all over the world to our shores, immigrants who then knew when they came that with hard work, initiative, self-reliance, and so on, they could own a home, they could go to school, they could enhance themselves and help this country.

These are the values we stand for, and these are the values we promote in this bill that we bring to the floor today.

These values are in trouble. Young people face a tremendous challenge in reaching for the American dream, trying to pay for that college or save for that downpayment on their first home. While they struggle to be able to afford higher education or to be able to buy a home, they often feel that they do not have the time to lend a helping hand to others.

We needed to find a way to help people put in some sweat equity and hard work while they learned the "habits of the heart" that keep America strong. We want to restore that sense of civic obligation, because we know there is no such thing as a no-cost democracy. The National Service Demonstration Program is our idea to tie those two values together: Access to the American dream, rewarding hard work, acknowledging that there is a sense of civil obligation in generating the "habits of the heart." We do that very concretely.

For those who want to spend a year or 2 in community service, who want to change their lives and devote their time to something larger than themselves, the full-time program offers a great opportunity to do that.

That is the one that I have been one of the leading architects of with Senator NUNN.

Participants will serve the community and earn vouchers that they can use to pay for higher education or a down payment on first-time home ownership.

From my discussions out in the community, what I have learned is that not everybody could go away and not everybody should go away.

Who cannot go away? Our high-technology graduates have to immediately go right into their fields before they lose the knowledge edge, the people in math, science, and civics, many working in some of the Federal laboratories like the National Institutes of Health or Goddard in our own community. We could sure use them running a Saturday scholar program or science fairs, and many would make an enormous contribution. And many people want to get on with their lives and relationships and stay in their own community.

Although they acknowledge that problems are global, they know that ultimately a lot of problems are local and they want to devote themselves to solving the problems in Baltimore. At the same time the mothers want to solve the problems in Bangladesh.

I am especially proud to be the author of the Part-Time Service Demonstration Program, complementary to the full one. Part-time service creates the opportunity for people to pay for higher education or have a first home down payment, while they continue with their lives in their own community.

This program asks people to devote 2 weekends a month and 2 weeks a year to their communities, just like the National Guard. These are people who do not think that they have the time to be out there to do what needs to be done. Our bill offers an opportunity for them to do that.

They would work primarily in nonprofit organizations doing the kinds of community service that needs to be done.

Mr. President, under the weekend model, it would be delivering weekend Meals on Wheels, which we now do not often have in our community. It means running tutoring programs; it means being library assistants, it means working habitats for the human hands where you get out there and do it. It also means doing scouting programs.

Much as the bill offers an opportunity, it also asks an obligation. We want to reach out to people and show them we want to help them with their aspirations, but we also want them to put a little perspiration into their own community, using their skills and talents to work with these programs that help people. And along the way we hope they get inspiration from the contributions they make.

I think this legislation is a terrific investment in human capital, for people who need help and access to the American dream benefit, our voluntary organizations getting infusion of energy and more volunteers than they have had benefit.

For example, in Maryland we are facing a short-fall in recruitment of voluntary firefighters, an old-fashioned tradition as old as barn-raising. Right now, we do not have the men and women out there doing it.

This is a program good for our kids. It rewards the ones who want to work and work hard. It teaches them valuable lessons and skills, and we get voluntary services being done. But it is not a jobs bill, or a ceta bill. It is a way to help us build better citizens.

Mr. President, like you, I do not want a big, bloated bureaucracy. This is not some big, new Federal program, and there is no room in this bill or in Washington for another bloated bureaucracy. We essentially set up a little mom and pop size foundation to oversee things, like public broadcasting. States will have to put some money into it so this will keep the cost low. And for the part-time program, it is under the Governors, and as a former Governor, you know those Governors know how to squeeze a dollar. We want to encourage voluntarism, not federalize it.

In drafting this bill, we looked outside the beltway. We talked to labor, business, educators, job trainers, and folks who work with youth. We talked to the people who are out there now, giving of themselves. And we talked to the people who said they always wanted to serve, but nobody asked. We asked, we listened, and then we acted.

We have worked hard to blend our many ideas into this one comprehensive bill, which calls on each of us to turn to our neighbor and extend our hand. I am very pleased that my idea for part-time vouchered community service is part of this far-reaching legislation.

The National and Community Service Act will create a continuum of community service, offering a variety of opportunities to people of all ages, from all backgrounds, who want to serve full or part time, at home or away. It will bring different kinds of people together in new ways and teach them the rewards of helping others. And I'm very proud to say that so many of those experts are now clamoring for this bill.

How did we get to the floor today? National Service bills have been offered for years—what's special about this year? Well, over a dozen bills were introduced, including innovative proposals from my colleagues like Senators NUNN, KENNEDY, DODD, PELL, ROBB, GRAHAM, and BUMPERS, whose ideas are the anchors of the bill we debate today. As we discussed these ideas, a real groundswell of support developed among the people whose lives will be touched by what is decided here.

I do not know about everyone in this room, but I didn't decide when I was 6 that I wanted to be a Senator. I was a social worker 20 years ago when I got involved in a community project to stop a highway from destroying my neighborhood. That involvement with others changed my life. It meant more to me than you can imagine, because it led me to a life of public service. This bill will lead millions of Americans to service, to caring, to better citizenship and involvement with others. And that's great, because that's what gives meaning to our lives.

I believe that those who give to others get far more than they give. And after they've graduated from school or a youth corps, after they've earned their vouchers, paid for school, bought that first house, I believe that the people who participate in this program will stick with service for life.

Those are the people who'll make a difference, for themselves and for all of us. I believe they'll change America. I'm eager to ask them to join us. Right now, I'm asking you all to join us in offering them that opportunity.

It was only a year and a half ago that I wrote an op-ed piece suggesting a new model for national service. We've come so far so quickly because people know a good idea when they see one. I want to thank Senator KENNEDY, whose work as chairman of the Labor and Human Resources Committee brought us all together and made this bill a reality. I also want to thank Senators NUNN, PELL, and DODD, who devoted long hours and careful consideration to this important bill.

Mr. President, we worked hard to plant many ideas. Senator KENNEDY had ideas, and Senator GRAHAM had one which involves the business community.

And what we have done here is create a continuum for public service and voluntarism from the elementary school all the way through senior citizens. What we have also done is create an ethic, an ethic of neighbor helping neighbor.

This National and Community Service Act will create that continuum of community service, offering a variety of opportunities to people of all ages and backgrounds who want to serve full-time or part-time at home or away. It will bring different kinds of people together in new ways and teach them the rewards of helping others.

I am proud to say many people are clamoring for this bill. We hope when they get out there and work together, they get a sense of community, a sense of the platoon, like the military had. I hope the boys and girls involved in this program are so proud to participate in it they will remember it all their lives.

There is a saying, Mr. President, you know, once a marine, always a marine. And people feel very proud of that esprit de corps, and they carry it through their lives.

Somehow or other, we are somewhat less enthusiastic in the bureaucracy. I have never heard anyone say once a member of HUD, always a member of HUD; once a member of EPA, always a member of EPA, because there is not necessarily the same identification when achieving a high public purpose. And that is what we want to do with this legislation: instill those values, give people an opportunity, structure, and I think this legislation does it.

Mr. President, I know a lot of people right now say we should not pay for volunteers. And I can appreciate that and I respect that position.

Mr. President, there are a lot of wonderful men and women out there doing volunteer work out there, like Jake Powell of Salisbury, who is in his late thirties and works for Wicomico County near Summerset that comes to Virginia. He works for Joseph House, a nonprofit organization that helps the homeless, the downtrodden. Sister Mary Elizabeth runs it; it is called the Mother Teresa of the Eastern Shore.

Jake helps her by doing shopping bag drives and actually gets out there and helps collect food for the homeless. Since 1985, Jack has collected 25 tons of food to help Sister Mary Elizabeth help others. He also understands human behavior. He runs prom night, Project Prom Night, so kids can have a good time. That does not mean having a good drink. He helps them have fun and sobriety at the same time.

You know, we also think about this bill in terms of post-high-school kids we talked about. I tell you, Mr. President, one of the other things that we enjoyed in our hearing was listening to the way children volunteer. Senator

KENNEDY's component will draw in children in middle school and high school.

Mr. President, I got the biggest kick out of 11-year-old Samantha Hodge-Williams, who volunteers at something called Magic Me in Baltimore. She visits elderly people in nursing homes, and it made her see that her world was only a small part of a larger world.

Also, we heard of another little girl who works for a program called Save a Heart, and what she did was go into senior citizens centers and actually help do aerobics. Can you imagine this 9-year-old coming in and turning on her music—actually she did more than turn on music, Mr. President. She turned on herself to help those senior citizens, and so on.

Mr. President, that is what this bill is all about, creating an ethic of voluntarism in our society, of neighbor helping neighbor. That is what made our country great. Because as we learn cooperation and compassion, that is what makes us competitive. Compassion and cooperation enabled us to become more competitive as a Nation. We were bound together as a community and knew that often you need to make a self-sacrifice of individual gratification for a greater good.

Mr. President, I think this is a great bill. I hope the Senate will listen carefully. I know there will be debate on various aspects of this, but I am so enthusiastic about supporting it and playing a part in it because we really do take our values and put them in public policy. We do not often get a chance to do that. This is the way we can do it.

Mr. President, I now yield back the floor. The Senate has been most indulgent in allowing me this time.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I have some comments to make about this bill, but I think I am going to defer in favor of my colleague from Georgia, who has been waiting for quite a while. I will speak, if I may, immediately after he has concluded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair recognizes the Senator from Georgia [Mr. NUNN].

Mr. NUNN. Mr. President, I thank Senator HATCH for his courtesy and also for his leadership on this bill.

Mr. President, I want to express my support for S. 1430 the National and Community Service Act of 1989.

I am especially gratified that title I, part D of this legislation would authorize a limited demonstration of the concept which Senator CHUCK ROBB—who is now occupying the chair—and I have been promoting through S. 3, the Citizenship and National Service Act of 1989.

S. 3, and its House counterpart, H.R. 660, introduced by Congressman DAVE MCCURDY, are based on two simple and time-honored principles. First, in introducing the original legislation, we believe that citizenship in a free society involves mutual obligations as well as individual rights and privileges—obligations that can and should be discharged in part by military or civilian service to the country. Second, we believe that in return our country should give young people who are willing to serve the opportunity to earn the kind of education, training, or housing benefits that can give them an honest chance to pursue the American dream of upward mobility.

To make these principles a fundamental part of American life, we provided in S. 3 for a permanent, national program whereby our young people could volunteer for 1 or 2 years of civilian service; 2 years of military service; or 8 years of military reserve service; and receive in exchange vouchers that could be used for college expenses, job training, or a downpayment on a first home.

Military volunteers who met the recruitment requirements of the armed services would serve as citizen soldiers, while those opting for civilian service would work in their own communities for public and private nonprofit agencies that provided social services ranging from home health care to illiteracy training to recycling and recreation—addressing those needs unmet by either the private or public sectors.

Even though Senator ROBB and I envisioned a full-time program, we were always very aware that Senator MIKULSKI's part-time proposal was the ideal complement to our concept. Under her plan, participants could work in community programs for 9 hours a week and 2 weeks in the summer and earn housing and educational vouchers. Our Citizens Corps would also have enlisted a number of volunteers over 65 who could work either full or part time and would earn a modest hourly wage.

Under our original concept, Federal student aid would gradually be converted into benefits earned through service in the Citizens Corps. This provision was at the heart of the controversy surrounding the legislation, but also was at the heart of the overall concept.

I remain fully committed to S. 3, and to a permanent, national program which could open up opportunities for our young people while giving them what my colleague, Senator BARBARA MIKULSKI, has termed sweat equity in the future of their communities and their country. But Senator ROBB and I recognized the day we introduced S. 3 that so fundamental a change in the way we provide educational benefits, and the way we deliver many social services, would not occur without a period of testing.

The program authorized by S. 1430 does not make service a condition of receiving other kinds of Federal student aid. Part D of title I of S. 1430 would authorize a demonstration program based on S. 3, based on Senator PELL's similar proposal, and the part-time approach developed by Senator MIKULSKI.

I congratulate Senator KENNEDY and the staff of the Labor and Human Resources Committee for crafting this legislation. I also thank Senator HATCH for his cooperation in crafting the compromise which we have before us today. This bill blends proposals ranging from Senator DODD's expansion of the conservation Corps Program to Senator GRAHAM's idea for promoting service in our public schools.

Basically, it is a bill that provides Americans from all walks of life the opportunity to serve each other and their country—the young and the retired, the college student and the business executive, the young mother who has a few hours a week and the young man who wants to give a year or more of his life.

This bill tests the concept of a civilian GI bill, calling for a new basis of citizenship in which citizens are once again asked to give something back to their nation. This approach will be an altogether new and mostly nongovernmental effort in which citizens, serving one by one in their own communities, work together to tackle the Nation's great social deficit.

The demonstration program authorized in the bill is truly a pilot project because it represents a carefully calculated experiment in determining the attractiveness of education and housing vouchers to those who might serve, the feasibility of training and placing volunteers effectively in a decentralized manner, and the value of their service to the community and the Nation.

One of the critical questions we will ask during this pilot phase is what effect a nationwide civilian community service program would have, if implemented, on military recruitment programs that offer similar benefits. Some have expressed specific concern that the level of educational benefits provided to civilian servers under this program is higher than the postservice benefits for some members of the military under the Montgomery GI bill. Let me respond to that.

First, while military service is one from of national service, I think all of us must keep in mind that it is different form most other forms of service because of the unique sacrifices we ask of those who serve in the military, not only the sacrifices they make, but also the potential for great sacrifices in terms of service and risk. Second, because of these sacrifices and the inherent risks involved, military members should receive more compensation than we give to people who perform other forms of national service.

I believe we have addressed this concern in the bill: The combination of in-service and postservice benefits is substantially higher for military service than the overall compensation for civilian national service under this legislation. In fact, a 2-year civilian national service participant will receive benefits which are approximately 40 percent lower than the total compensation of his or her military counterpart.

I ask unanimous consent that a table summarizing the weekly compensation for full-time service in the military and full-time service in the national service program be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the table was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

COMPARISON OF INSERVICE AND POSTSERVICE BENEFITS FOR MILITARY SERVICE AND CIVILIAN NATIONAL SERVICE

[Weekly compensation for full-time service—2 yrs of service]

	Military service		Civilian national service, S. 1430 as amended
	Montgomery GI bill—basic benefit	Montgomery GI bill—with kickers
Inservice pay	[1] $287	$287	$135
Value of postservice benefit	[2] 86	173	96
Total	373	460	231

[1] Based on total regular military compensation of $30,000 for 2 yrs of service minus $1,200 contribution for Montgomery GI bill benefits.
[2] Calculated as total postservice benefit divided by number of weeks served.

(Mr. KERREY assumed the chair.)

Mr. NUNN. Mr. President, I do not believe that this demonstration program will undermine military recruitment. In fact, as service to the Nation is given high visibility by the President and other national leaders, I anticipate that more young people will be attracted to service generally, which can only benefit the military.

The program we outline will provide a limited number of full-time, civilian placements in a limited number of States. Only 1,300 full-time participants would be serving in the first year of the program. The military recruits over 290,000 individuals each year. There is no way that this small program could have any appreciable impact on the overall recruiting effort of the military services, particularly at a time when the size of the active duty military force is declining and when recruitment requirements will be diminishing.

This also holds true for the part-time program. The level of the participation—potentially up to 4,500 participants—is simply not high enough to affect the overall recruiting effort of the Reserve and National Guard.

In my opinion, even if we went nationwide with this proposal rather than testing it, it still would not have an adverse impact on recruiting because it would instill a participation by so many young people who are not attracted to either the military or the civilian service.

I think in that revival of what we call the civic obligation in this country, that sentiment, it would do the military a world of good.

Finally, I think it is important to point out that anticipated reductions in our military forces may create an even greater need for civilian work that provides an opportunity for service and for upward mobility. I think one of the things that is going to fall out of the overall changes, the sweeping changes taking place in the world, is a reduced size in military force, and therefore fewer people being given the opportunity to go into the military. This is particularly one of the downside effects in terms of low income and minority students who have the military as, in some cases the only, in many cases the best, equal opportunity employer and the best job experience that they could possibly get. That is one of the few down sides of the overall events in the world which are primarily very positive.

S. 1430 is, in many ways, similar to the bill that Senator ROBB and I introduced last January. It would create a decentralized and cost-efficient way to deliver human services to needy citizens. When one older person can avoid a nursing home because she gets assistance with her meals from a young server or when one illiterate adult learns to read through the assistance of a part-time tutor, we can be sure that the investment is both meaningful and appropriate.

Moreover, the programs outlined in both S. 3 and S. 1430 would invest in the future productivity of the service providers themselves, which will pay enormous dividends as they enter the workforce.

Some critics have objected to the payment of stipends and educational and housing vouchers to the national service participants. This argument ignores the many service opportunities—including military service—which provide various forms of compensation to individuals.

Without some form of compensation, many individuals could not afford to serve their country. In my mind, service should not be limited to those who have the luxury to serve without compensation.

Before this bill becomes law, and I hope it will become law, we are going to hear an awful lot of argument along that line. Why not just let everybody volunteer? Why give anybody anything for volunteering? Why not let it be pure voluntarism?

We could have used that argument in the military but we did not because we knew it would not work. Some of the same people who are advocating that now were most vocal in the 1970's and 1980's in providing very large bonuses for people who served in the military, including very large bonuses for those willing to serve in combat arms.

So, this principle of voluntarism, as noble as it is, usually ends up, if it is pure voluntarism, appealing to only those people who have incomes sufficient to allow them to volunteer while they are also earning enough money to live on.

We have seen that time and time again. I do not think we diminish the spirit of voluntarism by helping young people with their educational requirements in return for service to the country. We do that in the military today. We do it successfully, in the military today. Without that form of compensation, without those bonuses, without those educational vouchers, the volunteer force simply would not have worked.

I hope people who debate this will keep that point in mind.

The fact is those young Americans who serve their country should be helped with their education or housing more than those who do not serve. With college and housing costs rising beyond the reach of many families and with career opportunities almost non-existent for those without rudimentary job skills, both S. 3 and S. 1430 would provide needed resources for those who have contributed to the common good.

S. 3, of course, differs from S. 1430 in several, critical areas. The bill before us is more limited in scope to the program anticipated by S. 3. It also differs in that eligibility for existing Federal student aid programs will in no way be linked to a young person's willingness to perform community service—though I would stress that there is no linkage of aid to service during the 5-year phase-in provided by S. 3, either.

I remain committed to the concept of earned benefits. After S. 3's introduction, the concern was expressed that requiring service of those seeking Federal student aid would have somehow been punitive or burdensome, particularly for low-income students.

Those of us who sponsored S. 3 reject the notion that it would have a regressive effect. To the contrary, a program offering higher levels of college assistance than ever before to anyone willing to serve would enormously expand educational opportunities for low- and middle-income families, while solidifying public support for student aid. Let us not forget, also, that the poor, themselves, would have been the primary beneficiaries of the services provided by the many volunteers working in the Citizens Corps.

The program authorized by S. 1430, again like the phase-in stage of the permanent program in S. 3, does not make service a condition of receiving other kinds of Federal student aid. But I do think this program will demonstrate that giving young people a chance to earn educational benefits is the best available—and most affordable—way to expand educational opportunity while reestablishing this country's tradition of civic obligation.

Let me again express my support for the pending legislation and my thanks to Senator KENNEDY and to his very capable staff and also to Senator HATCH and his capable staff for working out this legislation.

I also want to express my deep appreciation to Senator BARBARA MIKULSKI who has been a vital leader in this overall endeavor from day one. At a time when the spirit of democracy and the dream of freedom and opportunity are becoming common aspirations of all people on this planet, Americans have a special obligation to keep the spirit and the dream alive for each other and for our children. It is highly appropriate that this first small step toward rekindling the ethic of civic obligation is offered to the U.S. Senate by the man whose brother best expressed that ethic when he challenged Americans to "ask not what your country can do for you * * * ask what you can do for your country." So I am grateful for the leadership of Senator KENNEDY and Senator HATCH and others in the legislation and hope the Senate will pass it. I also hope we can make progress in the House and progress with the White House.

Mr. President, I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Utah.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I am happy to be here debating this bill today. It has been a difficult voyage and difficult legislation to put together, but I think we now have something that ought to please almost everybody. I am hopeful it will please our friends down at the White House as well.

Mr. President, it is appropriate that we are considering this legislation just following George Washington's birthday. He was one of our country's most notable first volunteers. Though he was a comfortably situated plantation owner, George Washington selflessly served as the leader of the fledgling American Army at a time when his spirit and enthusiasm for the cause may have counted as much as or more than his military ability.

It is this spirit of service and enthusiasm for making a difference that we are trying to promote today with this legislation.

I salute President Bush for recognizing the importance of volunteers to our communities and the contributions they make every day to the quality of life we have here in America. It is time for even the most jaded politician and the most cynical columnist to admit that the "thousand points of light" is not a cliche. It is time that they acknowledge what American citizens have known since our Nation was founded. Volunteers make a difference. They read to the lonely shut-in, coach the little league teams, pick up trash in our parks, comfort the sick and bereaved, and participate in the democratic process. They pitch in to help in times of disaster. Volunteers do a million other things that are indispensable in our society. If we had to pay them for what they do, our national debt would be incalculable. This bill recognizes that.

Senators KENNEDY, DODD, MIKULSKI, NUNN, and others have worked hard to bring a consensus bill to the floor. Hours of discussion and consultation with the highest levels of the administration have helped to shape this legislation. While it is not precisely what President Bush has recommended, and I am aware that he still has concerns about the total authorization and other components of the bill, it is fair to say that this legislation reflects many changes that are compatible with the administration's vision for a National Service Program.

President Bush has called on all Americans to reawaken our Nation's spirit of voluntarism. He has offered his pulpit to acknowledge and thank those who devote themselves to volunteer service. The compromise today allows our State leaders to accept President Bush's challenge to invigorate our State and local communities to the call of national service.

I am happy to present this substitute agreement which I believe to be a fair and needed prosposal. We worked hard to find the best structure for these programs and have finally agreed on a funding level of $50 million in fiscal year 1990 and $75 million in fiscal year 1991. Authorized funds not appropriated may be carried over in subsequent years. This compromise also includes the President's Points of Light Foundation that thas been recommended by the President's Advisory Committee on the Points of Light Initiative Foundation. This Foundation is formed to "accomplish President Bush's mission of promoting existing volunteer progrms, encouraging the formation of new ones and motivating all Americans to engage in community services."

This bill will permit every State in the Union to participate in the National Service Program and to promote voluntarism in its own way. Flexibility is given to States to choose a volunteer program that addresses their specific needs. The selection includes community-based and school-based volunteeer programs; a youth service corp or conservation corp efort; a full- or part-time volunteer corp; or the development of their own innovative programs that address their specific needs. This compromise also allows the States to set living allowances and benefit programs, but caps these levels at specified amounts. Some States may wish to recruit additional volunteers; others may need resources to support the number of people who are already willing to volunteer.

In Utah, for example, there are scores of people in our communities who would gladly donate their time if we had the materials to make their donation productive. This is also true for our young people who want to serve their community, but who do not have the financial resources to commit for transportation or other expenses. I remember in my home State of Utah, the countless volunteers who lined our streets with sandbags to protect our homes and our communities from ravaging floods. And, I remember the high school students from Salt Lake County who collected funds and food for the famine relief efforts in Africa. And, I thank the hundreds of volunteers who comprise our ski patrol to help those who may be injured on our fine ski slopes, the finest ski slopes in the world, that we have in Utah. These are only a few of the many countless stories about volunteers who have helped make our communities better.

I am pleased that the Utah State Legislature has recently passed a bill which reflects my own State's desire to be a part of these new programs. Their bill sets up a Youth Conservation Corps. This corps of high-risk youth will help perform the immense task of maintaining and improving the vast amount of urban and rural land in our State while educating our youth about the value and satisfaction of hard work at the same time. I want to commend the bill's sponsor, Senator Lorin Pace, for his diligent work to pass a bill unanimously in the State Senate and achieve strong support in the State House of Representatives.

But, Mr. President, while I certainly agree that the specific provisions of this bill are important—or I woud not have spent so much time negotiating them with my colleagues on the other side of the aisle—I believe they may be less so than the idea this legislation represents. Both President Bush and this legislation seek to rejuvenate and refresh the spirit of community activism and neighborliness in America.

We are taking this action not because volunteers in America are letting us down, but rather because they are so vital to us. We should take this action because it is time to support volunteers, not just take them for granted.

But, finally, Mr. President, we are taking this action because we realize that Government cannot solve every problem. We cannot decree an end to hunger or suffering or disaster and have it be so. Likewise, we cannot pass this legislation and expect that every American will automatically be inspired to be a volunteer. I hope many more Americans will join the ranks of our dedicated volunteers.

We must also recognize that Americans volunteer because of the intrinsic benefits of their philanthropy. We derive personal satisfaction from helping others and from making our communities thrive. We voluneer because it is the right thing to do, not because we anticipate a tangible gain. There are a thousand points of lights across America already shining and making our society better. Their talents and gifts reward our communities everyday. And, through this legislation, we are making a modest attempt at helping them in their efforts. It is this spirit that inspired George Washington to accept the lonely and difficult leadership of what was perceived as a losing cause.

As I stand here on the floor of the U.S. Senate, I am reminded of these words of Edward Everett Hale, Chaplain of this great body:

I am only one, but I am one.
I cannot do everything,
But I can do something.
Because I cannot do everything,
I will not refuse to do the something that I can do.
And, that which I ought to do,
By the grace of God, I shall do.

This legislation, Mr. President, will not by itself make America a better place to live. The Points of Light Foundation will not by itself beam light around the country. But, Mr. President, we can, by enacting this bill, take a position in support of volunteers. And, that, Mr. President, we ought to do.

I am proud of those who worked on this bill. I am proud to have been able to work side by side with Senator KENNEDY, Senator MIKULSKI, Senator NUNN, Senator ROBB, and a whole raft of others, and Senator DURENBERGER.

I have to say this is an important bill. It is a modest bill, but it is a bill that sends an important message all over America. I hope the Points of Light Foundation stays in it and I hope the President will be very pleased in the end. I want to thank all of those who have worked on it, especially the staff members who have worked so well and diligently to try to bring it altogether. Mr. President, I yield the floor.

Mr. ROBB addressed the Chair.

THE PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Virginia.

Mr. ROBB. Mr. President, just over a year ago, I cosponsored the bill introduced by my good friend, the senior Senator from Georgia from whom we heard a few minutes ago. That bill, S. 3, the Citizenship and National Service Act of 1989, created a lot of controversy—controversy which finally drew sustained legislative, and public attention to an issue that has been of interest, to me for many years.

The bill we consider today and the bill which I hope my colleagues will support contains many of the provisions from S. 3 and a number of related initiatives crafted by other Senators. Although each of us had a different approach to the idea of community service, we share some fundamental goals and I believe the final product benefited from the range of interests which shaped it.

The cosponsors of this bill share a concern about the social deficit in this country, the unmet needs in our communities—problems like illiteracy homelessness, and infant mortality—the kinds of needs that the energy of our young people can help to address.

The programs you see reflected in this bill; school-based service, conservation corps work, and extended national civilian service commitments, are designed to make a habit out of "giving back" to the community. A principal feature is the idea that we need to "get" young people early to make the "ethic" of "civic responsibility" a part of life from the earliest time possible.

We need to cultivate that "habit." A recent survey done by "People for the American Way" found that when asked to rank a series of life goals for their relative importance, young Americans labeled "enjoying yourself and having a good time" as more important, than "being a good American who cares about the good of the country." And nearly 2½ times as many emphasized "having a good time" as did "being involved in helping your community be a better place."

When asked why they thought more people were not involved in volunteer activities, these young Americans cited a number of possible causes: A lack of encouragement from their parents and schools, uncertainty about how to get involved, and pressures to do other things like get good grades.

But the numbers suggest that 57 percent of those young Americans who have participated in volunteer activities felt good about helping someone. And I know from talking to my own daughters that their volunteer activities have been among the most memorable and fulfilling experiences of their high school and college careers.

As my colleagues know, my interest in the proposal was rooted in my desire to increase the access of poor and middle-class students to Federal financial aid and to begin to create a new ethic, an ethic of earned benefits, to replace the presumption of entitlement that many Americans have toward student aid and other Federal programs today.

This was by far the most controversial element of S. 3, and the one which attracted the most attention. Concerned educators raised questions about the impact that requiring service before providing significant educational benefits might have on the number of underprivileged students who wound up attending college.

One element of S. 3 that is not contained in today's legislation was designed to get at this issue of mutual civic obligation. Originally, S. 3 proposed the eventual phasing out of many of the current Federal loan and grant programs for postsecondary education and the substitution of the national service program for those programs.

I think that the variety of approaches to encouraging service provided in this bill will help these young people to overcome the difficulties of finding a way to serve and will help this generation develop an ethic of mutual obligation, a sense that with rights come responsibilities.

That debate has been postponed. But I hope that after 5 years of testing whether students and communities participate in the national service program and of finding out whether these students can provide meaningful service in their communities, we will revisit the question, of establishing a link between individual and community and between opportunity and obligation.

Mr. President, I join with the other sponsors and cosponsors of this legislation. I am very pleased to do so. I join in commending them for an exceptional amount of effort that has gone into this particular bill which emerges in the spirit of compromise from all sides. I join with them in hoping that my colleagues will favorably consider and eventually pass this particular legislation. Mr. President, I yield the floor.

Mr. DURENBERGER. Mr. President, I rise to comment on the National Community Service Act of 1990. I appreciate the comments that the Senator from Utah has made, but I am the principal Republican cosponsor of this legislation. I came to support this legislation rather late, although I do not come to the subject of voluntarism late at all.

As I look at what makes this country great, I note it is not the number of automobiles in this country, nor is it the desinger suits that we wear. What we have known for the two centuries of our history is that what makes America great is the character of our people, in particular, our willingness to stand up for that character when it is put to the test, to stand up for democracy and for the good that we can find in other people when so many seek to criticize us.

Thus I am encouraged when I pick up the paper and I read about the courage and the character of the people around the world who are standing up for the rights of freedom and democracy. These are exciting and historic times. From the Chinese student who stands up to the tank in Tiananmen Square to the thousands of people who have died in Romania, all over the world we are seeing unprecedented acts of courage and devotion, all in the name of freedom; all over the world, that is, except, I am saddened to say, here in the United States.

When times are good it is easy for a people, or a nation, to lose sight of the individual responsibilities we have to others and, the civil duty we have as part of a democracy. The 1980's have been labeled by some as the "Me Decade," the decade that focused on self needs rather than on the needs of others. What is truly disturbing is that this apathetic attitude is carrying over into the Nation's young.

My colleague from Virginia referred to a study by the People for the American Way which shows young people are less involved, less interested in public life, and do not understand the notion of individual responsibility that it takes to preserve their democratic freedoms.

When asked about goals young people have for themselves, only 24 percent stated that being involved in helping the community would a very or extremely important goal.

The one encouraging part of the survey however was the fact that young people do care, and that they do want to get involved. They simply do not know how.

Mr. President, that is exactly what this legislation before us will do. It would establish the structure needed to encourage participation in community and national service and would turn, I believe, the 1990's into a decade where we put others first.

Because of Minnesota's strong leadership in the area of youth service last summer I convened a task force on youth service which included many of the best people who have personally committed their lives to volunterism in my State. At the heart of Minnesota's youth service is the belief that there must be a collaboration between schools, youth service organizations, and the community, and that youth service be encouraged at an early age so it will be sustained throughout life.

Minnesota is using both State and local financing to accomplish that goal, and I am pleased to report that more than 200 or our 400-plus school districts now have youth development plans in place, and about 150 more now offer a youth service component as part of their curriculum.

At this point I ask unanimous consent to submit for the RECORD a copy of the final report of this task force that I put together, including a listing of model youth service programs in my State. I ask unanimous consent that it be printed in the RECORD following my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. DURENBERGER. I ask my colleagues to note the qualifications and the variety of the task force membership.

(See exhibit 1.)

Mr. DURENBERGER. Mr. President, I felt from the beginning that it was very important for this legislation to have strong bipartisan support, and that we take advantage of the strong national leadership we have seen on voluntarism and community service from President Bush. It is absolutely essential that any new, successful community service program have strong national leadership that only a President can provide.

So it was with great deliberation that I chose to support the legislation before us today. The reasons for supporting it are many, but let me just point out three reasons why I think the legislation is so essential.

First, is the role community service can play in enhancing and improving education in this country. By offering students the opportunity to gain hands-on experience, the efforts of traditional classroom learning can be greatly enhanced. Whether by tutoring younger children in math, reading, gaining exposure to a possible future career for one's self in health care and natural resources or—and this is probably the most important—just gaining the people skills, the relationship skills that the young need to function in society, young students can add significantly to their classroom learning experience.

The survey we referred to earlier clearly shows the needs in this area. The survery shows that youth today appreciate the Democratic freedoms in this country, the individual rights that are guaranteed them, but they are unable to grasp the other half of the equation—their responsibilities to participate in the community and in government to ensure these freedoms and rights become a reality.

This bill will help establish that link by establishing what I would call experienced-based learning opportunities.

Mr. President, at this point I would mention the fact that about 21 years ago in my State I participated with our then Governor in a program called lighted school conference which for the first time in America, provided a community-based broadening of the educational system into the community. It has now become known all over the country as community education, but it began in our State as an effort to take the school into the community.

One of the purposes of this bill is to bring the student through the community into the educational process. I think that represents not only a change over two decades but how important the relationship between education, formally, and education through hands on community service.

The second reason why this legislation is essential is the positive effect the community service has on building further generations of citizens. This bill encourages participation by all students. Voluntarism can lead to an increased sense of self-esteem, especially for those who may be undernurtured or vulnerable. Young people today need to feel wanted and appreciated. They need outlets for the positive contributions they can make to society, and they need recognition of the contributions they are or could be making.

I must tell you of an experience I had a couple of months ago at an alternative high school program in my State. An alternative high school is one of those streetside dropout programs for kids who just cannot make it because they are vulnerable, undernurtured; maybe it is impossible for them to make it in the traditional school system. I met a high school student, who looked to me to be about 16 years old, who was involved in a literacy program in which he read to younger elementary students. The student had come from a broken family and had been abused as a child, and obviously lacked the love and the attention from his parents that he needed to feel good about himself as a person. He described himself to me as a fighter, and a person who always got in trouble. Every place he went he got in trouble, and he would end up at the end of every situation in some fisticuffs.

The gift of this program came to light for me when he began to tell me about this literacy program. In the literacy program he had to go into a kindergarten-first grade setting and teach kids who were 10 years younger than he was how to read. One little boy who had been in the beginning of this reading program, sort of shy and distant, finally came up to him, to this 16-year-old fighter kind of kid, sat on his lap, and gave him a big hug. The kid sat in front of me and he started getting tears in his eyes and he said, "You know, Mr. Senator, this is the first time in my whole life anybody ever gave me a hug."

So that began for him one of those very difficult to define in "educational terms" experiences, built principally on the growth in his own self-esteem.

Mr. President, so often we think of voluntarism as something we do for the less fortunate in life. But we often forget that the simple joys of helping others helps us as well. What we can learn about ourselves through helping others is the incredible value of voluntarism.

Jim Kielsmeier of the National Youth Leadership Council put it this way: "Youth in service must come to be perceived as active and powerful youth citizens, contributors and participants, rather than this business of fragile 'at risk' victims. High expectations have a way of inspiring young people, motivating positive behavior where we have seen punitive and negative approaches" in the past.

The third reason for this legislation, Mr. President, is that I believe community service can offer an outlet for young people to use their time in a constructive manner. Today's young people face a range of temptations and have numerous competing demands on their time. In meeting these temptations and making positive use of their time, there is a great value represented by the sense of accomplishment and self-worth that community service can bring.

Within this context, expanding support for young service needs to be considered a vital and integral part of this Nation's efforts to curb the negative influence of drugs, particularly among young people. Drug use, including the use of alcohol, can often be traced to idle time, low self-esteem and negative self and social expectations.

I found out the other day in a hearing chaired by our chairman that the most vulnerable age for young people today beings at age 10 and lasts through the age of 16. This is the age in which the television-bound, peer-controlled, and family unsupported child of America today develops his and her addiction.

Whether it is addiction to the chemicals of alcohol or drugs, nicotine, or a variety of other potentially abusive dependencies in our society, it is the period of time in which the young are most vulnerable in becoming the addicts.

Properly motivated and recognized community service can go a long way toward reducing the influences of those contributing factors and addressing what all of us regard to be a major national crisis of dependence on drugs and a variety of addictive substances in our society.

I applaud the effects of my colleagues from Massachusetts, and what he has done in this bill to make the important link between community service and putting an end to drug and alcohol abuse in America.

Mr. President, I realize that some of our colleagues have raised concerns about the cost of this proposal, about dependence on governmental agencies and programs, and about its inclusion of stipends and other compensation for some young people who perform community service.

In fact, I have heard people laugh about this. Let me address these concerns one at a time, again based on our experience in the State of Minnesota.

First, I am well aware of the competing pressures that new funding like this places on an already excessive Federal deficit. For that reason, every Federal commitment must be viewed in terms of its present effect on the budget and future rewards and savings. The benefits of this legislation cannot be measured in monetary terms, and thus will never pass the Congressional Budget Office test.

But I am confident that this legislation will, in the long run, prove its worth. I believe that the experience of Minnesota and other States provide the evidence we need to make that calculation.

Second, as a life-long community volunteer myself and active supporter in the voluntary sector, I am very skeptical of any effort to turn encouragement of voluntarism into a government program. I have been doing this at the national level since 1971, when I became a director of Volunteer.

At the same time, the success and the experience of Minnesota's efforts to improve voluntarism has shown me the need for the limited degree of structure and support envisioned in this legislation.

My State has invested seed money into its community service programs, and from that has grown a full network of service programs. The money needed to support the infrastructure is not very large, but without it, you lose the link that holds the system together.

Finally, on the subject of payment of stipends or financial incentives to community service participants, I would like to make two points.

First, the Minnesota task force I have had advising me on this took a strong stand in opposition to any forced linkage between community service and access of Federal student financial aid. I agree wholeheartedly with that position.

But, I also agree that limited experimentation with the use of vouchers or stipends, for paying tuition or other educational expenses, will give us a valuable tool for experimenting with new ways of meeting the growing burdens associated with financing postsecondary education—a new way of financing education in which we are financing not only an education, but also a lifetime ethic of service.

In addition, for many young people this may be a wise investment of public funds if this experience serves both educational needs and improves self esteem. The alternatives could prove to be much more costly to society in the long-run than the nominal stipendiary awards envisioned by this legislation.

These are new ideas, and I commend the Senator from Massachusetts for building in a strong program of evaluation that would test the effectiveness of this program.

I am especially grateful to the very open way in which the Senator from Massachusetts has accepted the ideas which we have offered from Minnesota for improving this legislation since the time it was reported from the Labor and Human Resources Committee. I am pleased that he has accepted my suggestion to ensure that the clearinghouses will act as a focal point and communications link for youth service activities, including the use of a national computer network and other telecommunications technology, and the sensitiviity to my suggestion to increase the training requirements for postsecondary student financial aid administrators who are involved in placing students in community service opportunities.

I also commend my colleague for ensuring equal opportunity for recipients of grants between the educational community and the community agencies. The assurance for equal opportunity is heightened under the committee substitute, which changes the oversight authority of the Youth Service Program from the Department of Education to the Points of Light Foundation.

Mr. President, all around us a limitless and renewable natural resource is waiting to be tapped, as this Nation seeks to meet the unmet needs and unfulfilled opportunities of its people. Youth in service is that natural resource. With passage of this legislation, we can begin to tap that resource.

I want to thank Senator KENNEDY and Senator HATCH for the time they have spent and for their commitment to this issue.

I urge my colleagues to support this very important legislation.

EXHIBIT 1

BUILDING A LIFETIME ETHIC OF SERVICE

(Report of the Minnesota Ad Hoc Working Group on Youth Service, September 1989)

U.S. SENATE,
Washington, DC.

DEAR FRIEND: All around us, a limitless and renewable natural resource is waiting to be tapped as this nation seeks to meet unmet needs and unfulfilled opportunities. Youth in service is that natural resource, and with continued strong leadership from the President, and the U.S. House and Senate, we can begin to tap that resource in the 101st Congress.

Our vehicle can be a comprehensive, bipartisan youth service bill, drawing on the spirit and best elements of legislation already introduced by a number of members of Congress and legislation President Bush has promised to submit this fall. In crafting a bi-partisan proposal, I believe we would also be wise to draw on the experience and expertise of states—like Minnesota—which are already tapping the rich natural resource represented by our nation's youth.

That's one reason I recently convened an "ad hoc working group on youth service" which includes many of the best minds on this subject in a state that is leading the rest of the nation in expanding youth service opportunities. This report is the culmination of their work and, while time limitations dictated that it not result in a comprehensive youth service proposal, it does include a number of principles and recommendations that can help guide both Congress and the Administration on this issue.

Briefly, the Minnesota working group concluded that national youth service legislation must:

1. Support a continuum of voluntary service opportunities, beginning at a young age and integrating educational and self-development objectives for young people which will reap life-long benefits.

2. Allow maximum flexibility in awarding federal grants to local communities which promote collaborative youth service projects run by both schools and youth service organizations. Grants should also be administered in ways that maximize the potential for private sector support.

3. Encourage and improve planning, training, information sharing, research and evaluation on a decentralized basis around the country. Young people themselves should be guaranteed a major role in designing these programs.

4. Recognize and encourage the value of bi-partisan national leadership and visibility, especially the kind of leadership and visibility that can only be provided by the President.

5. Clearly distinguish between the varying needs and goals of youth service for different ages of young people and for young people with differing economic circumstances. While agreeing that stipends and other finance assistance may be needed in some instances, the working group felt very strongly that there should be no forced linkage between community service and student aid.

Based on these basic principles, the Minnesota working group then made a series of recommendations, aimed specifically at Senator Kennedy's "National and Community Service Act of 1989," but also directed to the Bush Administration. Briefly, the working group recommends that both proposals:

1. Designate a single independent agency—like the proposed National Service Board—as the grant making authority for all new federal youth service programs.

2. Earmark specific funds for the establishment of three to five regional youth service resource centers to help with needs assessment, planning, training, research, evaluation, communication and recognition. Preferably, existing organizations or resource centers would receive these funds.

3. Place a higher priority on planning and needs assessment in local communities prior to the awarding of grants to initiate or expand youth service opportunities. It should draw heavily on the input of local governments, the private and voluntary sectors, and young people in each community.

4. Place a higher priority on training for teachers and youth service workers and for administrators of student loan and work study programs who place students in youth service projects.

5. More explicitly recognize the value of youth service—including the proposed youth service corps—in waging the nation's war on drugs.

I whole-heartedly endorse these principles and recommendations and hope that you will take the time to carefully review them, as they are detailed in this report. I also hope that all those who care deeply about the future of both young people and the nation they will inherit will not join forces in crafting comprehensive, bi-partisan youth service legislation that can be adopted and signed in this session of Congress. That's an objective I'm committed to, and I hope I can count on your support, as well.

Sincerely,

DAVE DURENBERGER.

BACKGROUND ON THE MINNESOTA AD HOC WORKING GROUP AND THIS REPORT

As is true in many areas of public policy and community service, Minnesota is leading the nation in encouraging the expansion of youth service opportunities. With the active support of the governor and legislature, Minnesota's schools and colleges, youth service organizations, and the private and non-profit sectors are engaged in hundreds of collaborative efforts in all parts of the state.

At the same time, Congress and the Bush Administration are both promoting national legislation to encourage youth service. This legislation may be considered on the floor of the U.S. Senate later this fall after having been reported favorably by the Labor and Human Resources Committee in early August.

Because of Minnesota's strong leadership on youth service, U.S. Senator Dave Durenberger recently convened an "ad hoc working group on youth service." This group was charged with reviewing the pending federal legislation and recommending changes or improvements.

Members of the working group met three times during August and September to establish principles they felt should be included in national youth service legislation and to agree on a set of recommendations. This report represents a summary of their work.

In order to build further awareness of the pending legislation—and to solicit additional Minnesota input—a mailing which summarized the pending legislation and work of the ad hoc group was sent to approximately 4,000 youth and voluntary service, education, and government leaders in Minnesota in early September.

A follow-up mailing summarizing this report and updating Minnesotans on the status of national youth service legislation will also be sent to the same 4,000 individuals later this fall.

And, finally, Senator Durenberger intends to conduct several meetings or forums on youth service in various parts of the state during the Senate's October recess, again to gain additional visibility for federal youth service proposals and to solicit further input on the pending legislation from Minnesotans.

MEMBERS OF THE AD HOC WORKING GROUP

Recommendations for membership of the ad hoc working group came largely from the youth service community in Minnesota, and others joining in the process by attending subsequently meetings. Still others participated by mail and by phone. Those who became involved in reviewing proposed federal youth service legislation through either meetings or mailings included:

Keith Baker, Greater Minneapolis Chamber of Commerce

Linda Bauer, teacher, Hill City public schools

Tom Berg, program officer, McKnight Foundation

Paula Beugen, Consultant, Minnesota Office on Volunteer Service

State Representative Kathleen Blatz, IR, Bloomington

Kim Boyce, executive director, Ramsey County Exten-Service

Kevin Collins, intern, Minnesota Campus Service Initiative

Larry Fonnest, director, Minnesota Conservation Corps

Lara Lee Geraghty, director, Minnesota Office of Volunteer Service

Linda Giesen, City of St. Paul Youth Corps

Rick Jackson, vice president, Metropolitan YMCA of Minneapolis

Glen Jeffrey, board chairman, National Youth Leadership Council

Jim Kielsmeier, president, National Youth Leadership Council

Mark Korf, president, Minnesota Community College Student Association

Mark Langseth, director, Minnesota Campus Service Initiative

Lynn Mikula, Animal Humane Society, Minneapolis

Keith Morton, executive director, University, YMCA

State Representative Ken Nelson, DFL, Minneapolis

Gerry Ouellette, teacher, The Marshall School, Duluth

Kent Plumley, legislative director, Minnesota Community College Student Association

Mary Jo Richardson, Minnesta Department of Education

Adam Rautio, student, Cooper High School, New Hope

Ted Sauer, teacher, Hopkins Schools

Stephen Seidel, project coordinator, Twin Cities Habitat for Humanity

Patti Stuhlman, Minneapolis public schools, community education

Kit Sturgeon, student, Carleton College, Northfield

Rich Willits, associate director, National Youth Leadership Council

Staff assistance was provided by Jon Schroeder, Senator Durenberger's director of policy development; and Carolyn Boos, Senator Durenberger's Washington legislative assistant for human services and education.

SPECIAL ACKNOWLEDGMENT

Senator Durenberger and his staff wish to acknowledge the invaluable assistance provided this project by members of the ad hoc working group. Beyond providing strong substantive support, the University YMCA and National Youth Leadership Council also hosted meetings of the working group. And, the National Youth Leadership Council made available its mailing list of youth service leaders throughout the state who were kept informed of the group's work.

I. INTRODUCTION: YOUTH SERVICE TAKES ITS PLACE ON THE NATION'S POLITICAL AGENDA

Thanks to strong Presidential and Congressional leadership, a major national youth service initiative has a strong chance of being passed into law during the 101st Congress.

The increased interest in encouraging youth service stems, in part, from proposals for a national youth service foundation made by President Bush during the 1988 campaign. That proposal has now been expanded upon by the President and is expected to be introduced in legislative form this fall.

There are also more than twenty different youth service bills now pending in the Congress—including several highly controversial proposals mandating service as a condition of receiving student loans and grants.

And, perhaps of most importance, a number of states are considering legislation encouraging youth service through schools, colleges, youth service organizations, and youth service corps. This grass roots support for expanding youth service opportunities has been especially strong in Minnesota.

A. LEGISLATIVE PURPOSES ARE DIVERSE, AIMED AT VARYING GOALS

While the general objective of encouraging young people to become engaged in community service is a constant, the legislative proposals to achieve that objective have been diverse and, in some cases, highly controversial. A brief summary of a number of these proposals—prepared by the Congressional Research Service—is included as Appendix I to this report.

President Bush's proposal, for example, would establish a Points of Light Initiative Foundation with $25 million per year in federal funding, matched by at least $25 million in private funds.

As announced in late June, the proposed foundation would encourage the identification and replication of successful volunteer programs; reward successful examples of community service programs; and aid in the development of a new generation of community leaders.

Although there had been earlier indications that the President might seek to implement his proposal through executive order, it now appears that the Bush proposal will be formally introduced in the Congress later this fall.

Other proposals introduced earlier this year by members of the U.S. House and Senate authorize varying sums of money to fund grants to schools and youth service organizations to encourage expanded service opportunities as part of the curricula of elementary, secondary, and post secondary institutions.

Still other proposals introduced in the 101st Congress provide funds to create or expand local or state youth service corps or underwrite demonstration projects which encourage young people to do community service through stipends or vouchers to be spent on post-secondary education or housing.

Perhaps the most controversial of these youth service proposals are companion bills introduced by Senator Sam Nunn (D-Georgia) and Representative David McCurdy (D-Oklahoma) which make receiving student financial aid contingent upon completing a civilian or military service commitment. These proposals have generated considerable opposition among many educators and students who feel they would force lower income students into national service options, segregating the military and other service agencies by income and, perhaps, race.

B. KENNEDY BILL CONSOLIDATES PROPOSALS, ELEVATES THE STAKES IN THE NATIONAL DEBATE ON YOUTH SERVICE

Expanded community service by both young and older Americans got a major boost on August 2 when the Senate Labor and Human Resources Committee took favorable action on the "National and Community Service Act of 1989."

This legislation, which is actually a compromise bill forged from ten separate proposals, earmarks a total of $330 million for programs ranging from kindergartners to foster grandparents. It was introduced in late July by Senator Ted Kennedy (D-Massachusetts) and a number of other Democratic Senators who had previously introduced youth service bills of their own.

Senator Kennedy's proposal would encourage community service by young people through schools, non-profit youth organizations, and state or local "service corps." Administration of the grants would be split between the U.S. Department of Education and a newly created Corporation for National Service.

In some cases, college-age young people would be given incentives to do community service through cash stipends, educational assistance, and vouchers that could be used to help pay for college or buy a first home. The proposal also includes increased funding for existing federally supported service programs including VISTA, Foster Grandparents, and the Retired Senior Volunteers Program (RSVP). A more complete summary of Senator Kennedy's proposal is included as Appendix II to this report.

At the present time, there are no Republican co-sponsors of this proposal. In the Labor and Human Resources Committee, however, it was supported by two Republicans, Senator Durenberger and Senator Thad Cochran of Mississippi. A third Republican, Senator James Jeffords of Vermont abstained on the vote to favorably report the bill to the floor.

The absence of Republican co-sponsors appears to be, in part, in deferrence to President Bush and his promise to submit his own youth service legislation later this fall. Several objections have also been raised by the Administration and some Republican Senators about the amount of funding authorized by the bill and the inclusion of educational assistance or vouchers or cash stipends for community service.

Despite these objections, Senator Kennedy and other co-sponsors have indicated a willingness to work with the Administration on a bi-partisan proposal. And, both Senator Kennedy and the Administration have been made aware of the work of the Minnesota youth service task force and have been receptive to considering its recommendations in finalizing their legislative proposals.

II. MINNESOTA'S STRATEGY FOR PROMOTING A LIFETIME OF COMMUNITY SERVICE—A MODEL FOR COLLABORATIVE ACTION

The ad hoc working began its review of pending federal legislation from the perspective that Minnesota's experience with youth service offers principles and models that deserve replication elsewhere in the country.

At the heart of the state's youth service initiative is a strong belief that there must be close collaboration between schools, youth service organizations and the community; and that youth service must be encouraged at an early age, with that encouragement sustained throughout life.

A. STATE LEGISLATION AUTHORIZES LOCAL SCHOOL DISTRICT FUNDING THROUGH COMMUNITY EDUCATION, AIDS CAMPUS SERVICE INITIATIVES, SUPPORTS YOUTH CONSERVATION CORPS.

Building on its past record of leadership, the 1989 Minnesota Legislature took several additional steps to support other voluntary service.

First, the Legislature authorized school districts to levy an additional 25 cents per resident for youth service activities through their community education program. That's on top of a 50 cent per capita levy authorized in 1987 for youth service development.

This new option could raise an additional $1.0 million per year and is believed to be the first such state encouragement anywhere for community-based, community funded youth service. According to Minnesota Department of Education, more than 200 Minnesota school districts have youth development plans currently in place and approximately 150 will now offer a youth service component.

Second, $150,000 in matching funds was allocated to help colleges support youth service activities that are now underway on about 20 Minnesota campuses throughout the state. These activities range from designing and teaching college classes to tutoring elementary-age students and working to prevent drug abuse.

Third, $70,000 was added to fund the Minnesota Office on Volunteer Services. Partly, that new money will help the state agency train community groups to use increased student volunteers effectively, an important contribution to making voluntary service meaningful and valued by both those who volunteer and those who receive the services of volunteers.

And, finally, the Legislature appropriated $400,000 to expand the Minnesota Conservation Corps. This program—housed in the Minnesota Department of Natural Resources—provides summer and some year-around jobs like cutting trails and cleaning up rivers for low income youth.

B. STATE BOARD OF EDUCATION RULE INCLUDES YOUTH SERVICE IN SCHOOL CURRICULUM.

In addition to these actions by the 1989 Legislature, the Minnesota Department of Education has adopted a rule that—beginning next year—will require schools to include youth service in the classroom curriculum and provide youth service opportunities in or out of school.

Students won't be required to perform voluntary service under this rule, but the districts will be required to offer the opportunity and to reward it with academic credit. Already, more than 160 school districts have applied for and will receive state aid to prepare for this requirement with workshops and curriculum planning.

C. EXAMPLES OF YOUTH SERVICE IN MINNESOTA COMMUNITIES

At the grassroots, this strong interest in youth service in Minnesota is evident in communities throughout the state—both small and large, rural and urban. Following is a brief sampling of some of the more creative youth service initiatives in Minnesota:

Waseca High School Youth Service Leadership Class

In Waseca, the Youth Service Leadership Class is a key part of the state-legislated, locally levied community youth development plan. Students in the class—with leadership training from the National Youth Leadership Council—worked with their teacher to design the curriculum for their own class. Students participating in the class serve in the community four days a week and come together on Mondays to share frustrations as well as inspiration. Some projects for the class include providing leadership training for sixth graders, organizing a food drive, student taught art classes at a nursing home, performing surveys and other research for the Youth Development Advisory Council, and a city-wide clothing drive which filled a truck with clothing for the poor.

University YMCA, University of Minnesota

Founded in 1887, the University of Minnesota YMCA has been a pioneer in service-learning for more than 100 years. Currently, one of the most popular University Y programs is Project Motivation, which pairs U of M students with 7th and 8th graders who are in need of friendship and/or personal guidance. Under this program, volunteers participate in a three-day orientation and training retreat before starting the program and continue to meet regularly as a group to discuss issues related to children who are under-nurtured. During the 1988-89 academic year, the University YMCA also helped co-lead a "Community Service and Social Justice" course at the University of Minnesota.

Tobacco use prevention activities

Over 225 young people involved in tobacco use prevention activities in Aitkin, Koochiching and Itasca Counties were recently presented one of three Governor's Awards for Excellence in Health Promotion by the Minnesota Department of Health. These young people serve on local youth councils, design parade floats and county fair displays, write newspaper and radio ads, draw posters, provide peer counseling and other educational services to their classmates.

Blooming Prairie student EMTs

For the past three years, Blooming Prairie High School student volunteers have become certified Emergency Medical Technicians (EMTs) and an average of 4-6 students each year have become members of the city's volunteer ambulance service. This is a vital contribution to emergency medical services in a rural community where daytime volunteers are sometimes hard to attract and where ambulance services can make the difference between life and death. Several of the students have also used the skills and training they've received through the program to obtain part-time jobs with professional ambulance services while going to college.

Hibbing High School's "Homework Helper" program

In Hibbing, a peer tutoring program called Homework Helper has involved two dozen students who use their time and talents to assist another 110 students in grades 4-12. The program ran 22 weeks and was well-received by students, parents, and school officials. Hibbing youth service students developed a comprehensive range of services that deal with issues such as wellness and parent-student-teacher communications.

4-H Club activities in Itasca County

The Cloverleaf 4-H Club, as part of a five year focus on the problems of hunger and poverty, held an annual fundraising drive for the local food shelf. Also in Itasca County, the Drumbeater 4-H Club studied hazardous waste in northern Minnesota. The group developed a public questionnaire on the subject, gathered resource materials and produced a skit and video that were presented at statewide meetings.

Teen Outreach Program

With strong support from the Junior League and other community organizations, Minneapolis public school students age 13 to 16 are combining small group discussions and voluntary service in the community as part of the Teen Outreach program. Goals of the program include increased graduation rates, reducing the incidence of teen age pregnancy, and improving self-awareness and other personal skills. In addition to meeting daily in small discussion groups, the students serve as community volunteers in areas such as neighborhood centers, nursing homes, hospitals, and day care centers. The program is offered at a number of junior and senior high schools in the city including several alternative high schools including those run by Plymouth Youth Center and the Work Opportunity Center.

Armstrong High School "Involvement"

This twenty year old program is run as part of the social studies curriculum at Armstrong High School in Plymouth. Seniors desiring a grade of A or B must complete 20 hours of volunteer work in a non-profit service organization in the community. Students are given opportunities to sign up at the beginning of the school year at an Involvement Fair at which over 50 organizations fill the school's main foyer to recruit students for the program.

4-H Alcohol Decisions Program

Nearly 1000 4-H teens were trained in 40 Minnesota counties last year to plan and conduct alcohol programs for 10-12 year olds in classrooms, 4-H clubs, park and recreation programs and other youth organizations. Older students who are trained receive information on alcohol use and are instructed in how to teach younger children about alcohol and to help them make wise choices. More than 12,000 elementary students were reached during the year through these programs conducted by 4-H volunteers.

Recycling promotion in Alexandria

The Victoria Vikings 4-H Club decided that recycling education and awareness was a community need on which they could have a positive impact. They did surveys to generate interest, phone calls to remind residents of pick-up days, radio talk show interviews, newspaper articles, public displays, and developed an original "Recycling Game" for senior citizens, schools, and scouts. The program was credited by local officials and the MPCA as being instrumental in a dramatic increase in the county recycling collection rate.

Child care awareness in Fairfax

The Camp Go-Getters 4-H Club found that the number of two-earner households and single parents was growing in rural Renville County. In response, it organized and conducted a community wide babysitting clinic for 4th, 5th and 6th graders, both to help them become better babysitters and to provide them with "survivable information" when they stay home alone after and before school. Over 50 young people were trained and informed on safety and emergency information. And the young people taught their peers how to make a "babysitting kit" of supplies and games; and they gave demonstrations on first aid and the responsibilities kids may have to assume when they are at home alone.

Metropolitan State University older students program

A growing number of students in post-secondary schools are outside of the traditional 18-22 age range, presenting additional challenges and opportunities for matching community service with a college curriculum. Metropolitan State University in the Twin Cities is doing just that with a federal community service grant. This program encourages adult students (average age, 35) to undertake significant community service projects for college credit. In the second year of the program, enrollment doubled to more than 300 students. Under separate grants from three area foundations, approximately eight students per quarter are awarded $500 stipends for tuition and for some of the costs of the community service projects such as materials and transportation.

Community College service learning proposal

Service learning at its best is student-initiated, and one good example is a proposal for a community service requirement at the state's Community Colleges now being developed by the Minnesota Community College Student Association. The proposal would require community service as a graduation requirement, with strong local planning and initiation of the community service opportunities. The association is also discussing an active program to encourage students to become involved in government and citizenship activities in issue areas like environmental protection. Special attention is being paid to the varying needs of older and other non-traditional students in designing the program.

III. PRINCIPLES FOR NATIONAL POLICY ON YOUTH SERVICE

In reviewing and making recommendations on national youth service legislation, the working group felt it appropriate to first establish a set of principles on which such legislation should be based. Those principles, in large part, reflect the experiences of Minnesotans in setting state policy on youth service and in designing and implementing youth service programs in the state. In some cases, they also reflect experiences members of the working group have had with youth service programs in other parts of the country.

Briefly, the working group believes that:

A. NATIONAL YOUTH SERVICE LEGISLATION SHOULD ESTABLISH AND SUPPORT A CONTINUUM OF VOLUNTARY SERVICE OPPORTUNITIES, BEGINNING AT A YOUNG AGE AND INTEGRATING EDUCATIONAL AND SELF-DEVELOPMENT OBJECTIVES FOR YOUNG PEOPLE WHICH WILL REAP LIFE-LONG BENEFITS

The working group feels strongly that voluntary service emerges from a "state of mind" that is most effectively nurtured from a very young age. The seeds that produce a United Way board member, in other words, are most effectively planted in early and continuous experiences in scouting, 4-H, tutoring, or other volunteer experiences available through schools or youth organizations.

These links between voluntary service and education are at the heart of Minnesota's leadership on this issue. And, beyond encouraging a life-time of volunteerism from the earliest possible age, these links with education also help achieve two important goals that benefit the individual who volunteers.

The first of these goals is improving educational outcomes through "experienced-based learning." And, its objective is to use the practical, "hands-on" experiences of voluntary service to supplement classroom learning. That makes what states like Minnesota are doing to encourage youth service an important part of educational reform—part of a much broader effort to broaden and improve the educational experiences needed by future generations.

A second goal behind the link to education is the increased self-esteem and positive use of time that voluntary service can represent for all young people, but especially those who may be undernurtured or vulnerable.

Today's young people face a range of temptations and have numerous competing demands and opportunities for use of their time. In meeting these temptations and making positive use of time, there is great value represented by the sense of accomplishment and self-worth that community service can bring.

These kinds of positive experiences can also build a greater sense of "citizenship" in young people that can translate into greater interest in voting and community activities and increased civic involvement now and later in life.

As Jim Kielsmeier of the National Youth Leadership Council has put it:

"Youth in service must come to be perceived as active and powerful young citizens, contributors and participants, rather than fragile 'at risk' victims. High expectations have a way of inspiring young people motivating positive behavior where we have seen punitive and negative approaches largely fail."

Within this context, expanded support for youth service needs to be considered a vital and integral part of the nation's efforts to curb the negative influences of drugs—particularly among young people. Drug use—including the use of alcohol—can often be traced to idle time, low self-esteem and negative self- and societal-expectations. Properly motivated and recognized community service can go a long way toward reducing the influence of those contributing factors.

Finally, expanded youth service must be viewed as unleashing a national resource that can't be ignored in today's environment of tight budgets and unmet needs. In areas like environment protection, child care, long-term care, tutoring of disadvantaged students, and many others, youth in service can help meet needs that will otherwise simply not be addressed. In this respect, we all have an important stake in making youth service opportunities more available, for the benefit they represent to young people, for those they directly serve, and for the nation as a whole.

B. NATIONAL YOUTH SERVICE LEGISLATION SHOULD ALLOW MAXIMUM FLEXIBILITY IN AWARDING GRANTS TO LOCAL COMMUNITIES WHICH PROMOTE COLLABORATIVE YOUTH SERVICE PROJECTS RUN BY SCHOOLS AND YOUTH SERVICE ORGANIZATIONS. AND, GRANTS SHOULD BE ADMINISTERED IN WAYS WHICH MAXIMIZE THE POTENTIAL FOR OBTAINING PRIVATE SECTOR SUPPORT.

Minnesotans have found that the best youth service programs—those most likely to meet both community needs and the educational and self-improvement needs of young people—are those which involve close collaboration between schools, youth service organizations, and groups identifying and addressing needs in the local community.

Much of the leadership for these programs has come from teachers who build youth service opportunities into their curriculum. But, experience has also demonstrated the value of drawing on the experiences of youth service organizations like YMCAs, and Scouts, as well as less formal, but community-based, organizations. In addition, non-public schools, churches, voluntary organizations and administrators—and many other programs which use volunteers—have much experience to offer any community looking to expand its youth service opportunities.

One vehicle for linking these diverse interests at a local level is the community education structure which has evolved in Minnesota over the past twenty years. Community education has responsibility for administering the funding the state legislature has authorized local school boards to levy, for example, and making that funding available to local youth service projects.

In deciding how best to administer federal funding for youth service, the working group believes maximum flexibility should be given states and local communities. In many states, formal education agencies might be selected to carry out that mission. But, the legislation should give states and local communities the discretion to make that determination themselves.

And, at both the national and state/local level, youth service programs should be administered by organizations that are likely to attract large amounts of donated funding from the private sector, including business and private foundations.

C. NATIONAL YOUTH SERVICE LEGISLATION SHOULD ENCOURAGE AND IMPROVE PLANNING, TRAINING, INFORMATION SHARING, RESEARCH, AND EVALUATION NATIONALLY AND ON A DECENTRALIZED BASIS AROUND THE COUNTRY. YOUNG PEOPLE THEMSELVES SHOULD BE GUARANTEED A MAJOR ROLE IN DEVELOPING AND CARRYING OUT THESE PROGRAMS.

There is no question that there is a crying need for volunteers in many service areas in virtually all communities. But, there must be careful coordination between local officials and others responsible for identifying and meeting community needs, agencies and organizations that serve those needs, and what will hopefully be a growing number of available volunteers.

This suggests that planning and needs assessment should be done prior to the awarding of grants for actual service projects. It also suggests that training of teachers, youth service workers, financial aid administrators and others who will link young people with service opportunities must also be an important part of programs which expand those opportunities. Both of these principles are considered very important components of Minnesota's highly successful experience with expanding youth service opportunities.

The working group feels strongly that expansion of youth service opportunities would benefit from leadership, training, communications, and recognition which is nationally supported, but decentralized. Maximum effort should be made to offer these services through existing youth service resource centers, rather than spending unnecessary time and money creating new ones.

And, finally, the working group feels very strongly that young people themselves must be directly involved at every step in the process of assessing community needs, establishing priorities to address them, designing youth service opportunities, training, and evaluation. Many of Minnesota's most successful youth service projects have been those designed and carried out by young people themselves.

D. NATIONAL YOUTH SERVICE LEGISLATION SHOULD RECOGNIZE AND ENCOURAGE THE VALUE OF BI-PARTISAN NATIONAL LEADERSHIP AND VISIBILITY, ESPECIALLY THE KIND OF LEADERSHIP AND VISIBILITY THAT CAN ONLY BE PROVIDED BY THE PRESIDENT.

Any activity that depends so much on motivating, communicating, and recognizing the contributions of individuals must not ignore the value of visible national leadership that only a President can provide.

The working group applauds the leadership taken so far on this issue by President Bush and is hopeful that a truly bi-partisan proposal can ultimately be adopted that incorporates components of his initiatives and ideas and proposals advanced by Congressional Republicans and Democrats. In particular, the working group is hopeful that the final legislative lpackage will include components of the President's proposal designed to encourage broad support for youth service from the private sector.

E. NATIONAL YOUTH SERVICE LEGISLATION SHOULD CLEARLY DISTINGUISH BETWEEN THE GOALS OF EXPANDING VOLUNTARY AND COMMUNITY SERVICE AND THE GOALS OF PROVIDING NEW WAYS OF UNDERWRITING THE COST OF POST-SECONDARY EDUCATION AND FIRST-TIME HOME OWNERSHIP. AND, NATIONAL YOUTH SERVICE LEGISLATION SHOULD ENSURE THAT THERE IS NO FORCED OR REQUIRED LINKAGE BETWEEN COMMUNITY SERVICE AND ACCESS TO FEDERAL ASSISTANCE IN FINANCING POST-SECONDARY EDUCATION.

The working group is aware that the legislation introduced by Senator Kennedy takes a number of different approaches toward advancing the general goal of promoting youth service. This consolidation of proposals with differing approaches has been an important part of the political dynamics that have helped raise the visibility of the issue and helped build support.

As this issue moves forward, however, it will be important to maintain perspective on the differing objectives of various parts of this legislation.

The objective of encouraging life-long involvement in community service through high school and college curricula, for example, is different from an objective of offering domestic national service as an alternative to military service, or an objective of assisting young people with the high cost of obtaining a college education or purchasing a first home.

Supporters of national youth service legislation must also be prepared to articulate the differing needs for monetary compensation for young people at different ages and points in their lives. In particular, the working group sees the value of providing financial incentives for youth who are not in college to take advantage of the opportunity to participate in a youth service corps.

For many young people in their late teens or early twenties, this may be a very wise investment of public funds if this experience serves both educational needs and improves self-esteem. The alternatives of not continuing a high school or college education, or of a life of drugs or criminal activity, will be much more costly to society in the long-run than the nominal stipendiary awards envisioned by this legislation.

But, while the working group supports using demonstration grants to test various ways of providing incentives for college-age young people to engage in community service, it also has grave concerns about mandatory links between national service and eligibility for student grants and loans. It would not wish to see its support for these demonstrations interpreted as potential support down the road for making the link between national service and student aid mandatory.

This opposition to mandatory links between national service and student aid reflects concerns that low income students would be forced into community service (a contradiction in itself), while the same service by higher income students would remain discretionary.

The growing number of older, non-traditional, and returning students also face practical obstacles in meeting mandatory service requirements for financial aid.

Many of these students have work and family obligations that make full or even part-time community service impractical. They, in particular, should not be forced to perform community service in order to have access to needed financial assistance.

At the same time, however, national youth service legislation should recognize the value that service learning can have for students of all ages and help facilitate those experiences for non-traditional students.

IV. RECOMMENDATIONS FOR IMPROVING NATIONAL YOUTH SERVICE LEGISLATION

Based on these principles—and on youth service experiences in Minnesota—the working group offers the following recommendations for national youth service legislation. Because it is currently the principal legislative vehicle under consideration, a number of these recommendations make specific references to Senator Kennedy's "National and Community Service Act of 1989" which is now pending in the U.S. Senate. The recommendations are also being directed to the President's Office of National Service, however, for consideration in finalizing the President's legislative proposal.

A. Designate the proposed National Service Board as the grant making agency for youth service programs aimed at school-aged young people.

This designation would be consistent with parts of the legislation designating the national Service Board as the grantmaking authority for youth service corps (Title II) and the national service demonstration program (Title III). It would give clear focus and accountability for a variety of youth service initiatives in a single independent agency. And—like the Corporation for Public Broadcasting and other quasi-public agencies—it would also provide a more attractive target for private sector funding.

As is clear from the experience in Minnesota, the working group also believes that it is important that a broad range of public, non-profit, and private sponsors be equally eligible to receive grants for youth service projects—depending on who is most appropriate to provide local leadership in each community. In particular, local youth service organizations, non-public schools, and other non-school agencies need to be in a position to compete on an equal basis with public schools or districts for grants.

To make this flexibility clear to the intent of the legislation, the working group feels it would be appropriate to change all references to "school-based programs" in the legislation to "school-aged programs." The working group also urges that the legislation specifically require that young people, local education agencies, youth service agencies, voluntary sector leaders, and non-public schools all be included in the planning and needs assessment required by this legislation.

These recommendations are not meant in any way to deminish the role of public schools in carrying out the intent of this legislation. In fact, it is anticipated that a very large share of the grants and leadership role in expanding youth service opportunities will go to public school teachers and public schools. And, as has been pointed out in the working group's set of principles, expanded youth service opportunities provide a vital component of educational reform—a reality that presumes strong leadership and involvement in youth service programs from public schools. This will help ensure both the credibility of experienced-based learning opportunities and their integration with more traditional forms of educating students.

B. Earmark specific funds authorized by the legislation for the establishment of three to five regional resource centers for youth service needs assessment, planning, training, research evaluation, communication, and recognition.

Specifically, the working group recommends that Section 109 of Title I of the legislation be amended to earmark at least several of the $100 million in this title for establishment of three to five regional youth service resource centers located in various parts of the country.

The working group believes that establishment of such resource centers could be one of the most important contributions of this legislation, and so, believes that funds for their establishment should be specifically earmarked, perhaps on a matching basis with locally or regionally raised private funds.

It is assumed that at least some of these regional resource centers would be established under multi-year contracts with existing youth service support agencies or organizations, rather than being newly created. Presumably, this would save start-up time and expense and administrative overhead, as well as benefit from existing experience and expertise.

Among the top priority functions of these regional resource centers would be the following:

Assisting states and local communities with needs assessment and planning.

Providing support for networking and information dissemination, including publication of national and regional newsletters and magazines highlighting outstanding examples of youth service projects around the country.

Conducting research and evaluation on youth service, including evaluation of the impact of service experiences on the youth who participate and on the organizations and communities they serve.

Providing leadership development and training at the center for several days to six months and on-site in local communities at workshops and conferences.

Administer award and recognition programs for outstanding youth service projects.

Act as a focal point and communications link for youth service activities, including through the use of national computer network.

Facilitate national and international communications and networking on youth service experiences through exchanges and telecommunications technology.

C. Place a higher priority in the legislation on planning and needs assessment in local communities prior to the awarding of grants to initiate or expand youth service opportunities.

Specifically, the working group recommends that planning grants be awarded under the elementary and secondary, post-secondary, youth service demonstration, and youth service corps titles of the legislation; and that carrying out community needs assessment and advance planning for the use of volunteers to meet those needs be done prior to the awarding of larger grants for youth service projects or demonstration projects.

An important part of this planning process should be involvement of broad segments of the community—including young people—and local evaluation of which educational institutions and youth service agencies are most appropriate to actually carry out the projects designed to expand youth service opportunities.

Finally, the working group envisions a large role for the regional resource centers recommended above in assisting communities with this advance planning and needs assessment.

D. Place a higher priority in the legislation on training for teachers and youth service workers and training for post-secondary student loan and work study workers and administrators.

In particular, the working group believes that the post-secondary provisions in Title I and the demonstration projects authorized by Title III need to be strengthened through the addition of specific teacher and youth service worker training requirements.

This would include courses or other training in youth service curriculum development in colleges or schools of education, both for future teachers and for youth service workers. And, it would include special training in youth service placement for individuals who administer student loan and work study programs—especially those involved in demonstrations authorized under Title II of the proposed legislation.

Specificially, the working group recommends that Section 121, section 1063(a) be amended to add a requirement that: "In determining awards, the director shall ensure applications provide for proper standards or training of personnel." And, to Section 132(a), the working group recommends that the following language be added: "School financial aid administrators responsible for the placement of students shall be trained in the area of community service."

The working group also believes that Section 108(a)(1) needs clarification as to what is included in the maximum 20 percent of grants that can be spent on administration. If administration is to include everything needed to plan, train, do research, and evaluate youth service projects, then 20 percent is too low. If it just represents the state's role in more narrowly administering a grant program, then 20 percent is considerably higher than what is traditionally allocated to states for administering federal programs.

Again, the working group envisions an important role for its proposed regional resource centers in doing this type of training for teachers, youth service workers, and post-secondary financial aid administrators.

E. National youth service legislation should more explicitly be recognized for the role that it can play in waging the nation's war on drugs.

As the working group noted in defining its set of principles, one major benefit of youth service is the positive effect it has on self-esteem and the positive use it makes of what can be idle time. These are two important objectives in addressing the core causes of drug abuse among young people. As such, expanded youth service opportunities—include the more structured, intensive, and remunerative experiences possible in youth service corps—can be a major weapon in the nation's efforts to reduce demand for drugs.

To highlight this potential, the working group recommends that the positive relationship between youth service and the nation's war on drugs be more explicitly recognized in the labor and Human Resources Committee's report on this bill and in the findings and purposes which justify the legislation (Sections 2 and 3).

The working group also recommends one specific change that recognizes the roles that many types of youth service opportunities—not just drug prevention or education programs, per se—play in the nation's war on drugs. To make this clear, in Section 106(c)(2)(C), the working group recommends that programs which include a focus on drug and alcohol abuse prevention be given priority.

F. Every effort should be made to adopt national youth service legislation which enjoys broad bi-partisan support, including the active participation and support of the President.

The working group applauds both President Bush and Congressional sponsors of youth service legislation for the past leadership they have shown on this issue. The working group especially appreciates the leadership role that Senator Kennedy has shown in drawing together a number of youth service proposals introduced separately by his Democratic colleagues.

But, we also believe that now is the time for partisan considerations to be permanently put aside and for maximum efforts to be made by both the Bush Administration and Democratic Congressional leaders to identify common elements in their proposals and to move toward a bi-partisan compromise that can be adopted during the 101st Congress. An important first step down this road toward compromise would be the earliest possible formal introduction of legislation incorporating youth service initiatives previously proposed by President Bush.

At this process of compromise goes forward, the working group also urges Senator Durenberger to continue to play a constructive role in bridging differences and building bi-partisan support for the eventual legislative package.

APPENDIX I—NATIONAL SERVICE LEGISLATION IN THE 101ST CONGRESS

Following are brief summaries of a number of the major volunteer service bills that are currently pending before the Congress, based on information provided by the Congressional Research Service. Sponsors are noted in parentheses.

HR 660 (Dave McCurdy, D-Okla.) and S 3 (Sam Nunn, D-Ga.)

Makes receiving student aid contingent upon completing a civilian or military service commitment.

HR 717 (Leon E. Panetta, D-Calif.) and S 322 (Christopher J. Dodd, D-Conn.)

Creates a Conservation Corps to maintain and improve Federal lands and a Youth Service Corps for other public-good projects.

HR 781 (Joseph M. Gaydos, D-Pa.)

Creates a Conservation Corps.

HR 948 (Barbara B. Kennelly, D-Conn.)

Offers student aid or help buying a home in return for civilian or military service commitment. Identical to Nunn-McCurdy, but without the mandatory tie between student aid and service.

HR 985 (Constance A. Morella, R-Md.)

Pays for students' last two years of school in return for three-year commitment to the Peace Corps.

HR 1000 (David E. Bonior, D-Mich.) and S 408 (Barbara A. Mikulski, D-Md.)

Offers student aid or help buying a home in return for part-time community service work.

HR 1312 (Major R. Owens, D-NY)

Reauthorizes and expands Volunteers in Service to America (VISTA) program and two others under ACTION agency. Approved by House Education Committee June 8.

HR 1408 (Pat Williams, D-Mont.) and S 232 (Daniel Patrick Moynihan, D-NY)

Creates Conservation Corps.

HR 1615 (Robert Garcia, D-NY) and S 576 (Claiborne Pell, D-RI)

Offers student aid for two years of full-time community service.

HR 1947 (Owens)

Authorizes grants for school-based volunteer programs and expands VISTA programs.

HR 1951 (John Porter, R-Ill.) and S 781 (John McCain, R-Ariz.)

Creates voluntary part-time national service program, provides enhanced student aid for military volunteers and requires the president to submit a plan for a comprehensive national service program.

HR 2084 (Kennelly)

Creates program similar to that in HR 948, but allows service to be performed after receiving financial benefits.

HR 2159 (Dante B. Fascell, D-Fla., by request)

Reauthorizes Peace Corps program

HR 2421 (Dale E. Kildee, D-Mich.)

Reauthorizes ACTION volunteer programs for the elderly. Approved by House Education Committee June 8.

HR 2591 (William D. Ford, D-Mich.) and S 650 (Edward M. Kennedy, D-Mass.)

Authorizes grants for school-based volunteer programs.

S 382 (Bob Graham, D-Fla.)

Authorizes grants for school-based volunteer programs.

S 539 (Dale Bumpers, D-Ark.)

Requires Department of Education to publicize current student-loan deferment options for students who serve in the Peace Corps, VISTA, or other tax-exempt organizations.

S 540 (Bumpers)

Gives partial forgiveness on Perkins student loans for full-time volunteers working for tax-exempt organizations.

S 541 (Bumpers)

Gives partial forgiveness on Stafford loans for full-time volunteers working for Peace Corps, VISTA or tax-exempt organizations.

S 683 (Alan Cranston, D-Calif.)

Reauthorizes Peace Corps.

S 689 (Pete V. Domenici, R-NM)

Authorizes grants for school-based programs to get children involved in community service programs.

APPENDIX II—SUMMARY OF THE "NATIONAL AND COMMUNITY SERVICE ACT OF 1989"

On August 2, the Senate Labor and Human Resources Committee voted to recommend to the full Senate a comprehensive national service bill that had been assembled by Senator Kennedy and a number of other Senators who had previously introduced legislation dealing with youth service and national service. The legislation also expands funding for existing federal community service programs including VISTA and the RSVP and Foster Grandparents programs. Following is a section-by-section description of the proposal as it was approved by the committee.

TITLE I—SCHOOL-BASED PROGRAMS

The first title of the bill authorizes $100 million for a variety of programs designed to encourage community service by elementary, secondary, and post-secondary students.

A. K–12 programs—65 percent of the funding

Federal Administration: The U.S. Department of Education makes three-year competitive grants to states for student community service and volunteers in schools programs (85 percent of funding). Criteria include the number of students in K–12, quality of the proposals, evidence of state interest. The balance of funds (15 percent) are awarded in grants to states, higher education institutions, non-profit organizations and consortia for training, technical assistance, curriculum development and innovative programs.

State Administration: State Departments of Education make grants to school/community agency partnerships for student community service programs (at least 70 percent of the funding); grants to school/community agency partnership programs, through which community members volunteer in schools, with priority for those involving senior citizens or members of the business community (up to 10 percent). The remainder of the funds (up to 20 percent) may be used for administration, training, technical assistance and curriculum development (states may contract for these tasks). A state match of 25 percent is required.

Local Administration: Schools/community agency partnerships receiving funds must establish advisory committees including representatives of community agencies, service recipients, youth serving agencies, students, parents, teachers, administrators, labor and business. Student community service programs must include age appropriate learning components, training for students and supervisors, and a sustained commitment by students. Priorities for funding include need, students involved in the program design, diversity of volunteers in programs, and programs typing service to the academic program. Funds may be used for start-up costs, program coordination, training, supervision, transportation, and insurance. Three-year grants may be renewed for a second three-year period. A local match (in cash or in kind) is required with the federal portion declining as follows: 90 percent in the first year, 80 percent in the second year, 70 percent in the third and 50 percent for years 4–6. As an incentive, the federal share is increased by five percent in years 1–3, if the local sponsor is a private, for-profit business.

B. Post-Secondary programs (35 percent of the funding)

This section would modify the Innovative Projects for Community Services and Student Financial Independence programs administered by the Fund for the Improvement of Post-Secondary Education (FIPSE). Language is added to encourage grants to test innovative ways of incorporating community service into the academic program (including awarding credit for service hours), and for implementing student-designed projects.

Work study modifications: Under current law, in 1990, the federal share for work study will be 70 percent for the regular program and 90 percent for community service learning programs. This bill would change those percentages in 1992 to 60 percent for the regular program and 100 percent for community service learning.

State Student Incentive Grant modifications: Under current law, community service is a permissive use of funds under the SSIG program. States may spend up to 20% of their SSIG allotment for campus-based community service work learning study jobs for eligible students. The current appropriation is $72 million. Under this bill, for amounts appropriated for SSIG above $75 million, 50 percent must be used for campus-based community work learning study.

Perkins and Stafford Loan modifications: The legislation requires the Secretary of Education to implement and advertise current deferment on loan repayment for students who serve as Peace Corps or VISTA volunteers and for those who perform comparable, full-time service with tax-exempt community service organizations.

Perkins Loan modifications: Current partial cancellation of loans for Peace Corps and VISTA volunteers is extended to those who perform comparable full-time service with tax exempt community service organizations.

Stafford loan modifications: Partial cancellation of loans is provided to Peace Corps and VISTA volunteers and to those who perform comparable service with tax-exempt community service organizations.

TITLE II—FULL-TIME YOUTH SERVICE CORPS

The second title of the bill authorizes a second $100 million to fund a limited number of full-time youth service corps programs administered by states or local agencies.

Federal administration: In consultation with appropriate agencies, the National Service Board (created under Title IV below) makes competitive grants to states to establish or expand full-time or summer youth service/conservation corps programs. Work done by these Corps may include service in government agencies, nursing homes, hospitals, libraries, parks, day care centers, schools, law enforcement agencies, other private non-profit social service organizations, for urban revitalization, or work done on public lands including improvement of parks, wetlands, and forests.

State administration: States may administer programs directly or make grants to entities within the state. Localities may apply directly to the Federal Government if their state does not apply. A state match of 25 percent is required. Federal money must supplement, not supplant state funds. Programs may spend up to 10 percent on capital equipment, 15 percent on administration. They must spend 10 percent on in-service education and training. A preference in awarding grants will go to programs that provide long-term public benefits, instill work ethic and sense of public service in participants, involve youth operating in teams, enhance educational levels and opportunities, and meet unmet needs.

Eligibility: Young people ages 16–25 for full-time programs; 15–21 for summer programs.

Stipends: Participants will receive stipends that are not less than 100 percent of the poverty line nor more than 100 percent of the minimum wage ($6,200 to $7,000 per year); educational benefits are provided at a rate of not less than $50 per week in the program nor more than $100 per week ($2,600 to $5,200).

TITLE III—NATIONAL SERVICE DEMONSTRATION PROGRAM

The third title of the bill authorizes a third $100 million to be spent on a number of demonstrations designed to test the effectiveness of various types of vouchers and stipends in "incenting" young people and seniors to participate in community service programs.

Federal administration: A National Service Board (created under Title IV below) makes competitive grants to states to run civilian service programs. The Board awards education and housing vouchers, pays stipends, federal training costs and evaluation costs.

State Administration: States design and administer programs. States pay administrative costs, state training costs, data collection, in-service education benefits.

Eligibility: 17 years of age or older; 60 years of age or older for senior service.

Stipends: For full-time participants only; not less than 100 percent of the poverty line nor more than 100 percent of the minimum wage ($6,200 to $7,000 per year); benefits.

Vouchers: Education and/or housing voucher equal to $8,500 per year for up to two years for full-time service; $3,000 per year for at least three, but not more than six years of part-time service. Education vouchers may be used to pay education expenses or to pay back student loans. Housing vouchers may be used for a downpayment or closing costs on the purchase of a first home.

TITLE IV—ADMINISTRATIVE PROVISIONS

This title sets up the federal administrative machinery for the legislation, and deals with issues like reporting requirements, labor protection, and evaluation.

A. National Service Corporation

A National Service Corporation, headed by an eleven member board is established. The board members are appointed by the President, with the advice and consent of the Senate. Of the eleven, no more than six may be from the same political party; three are appointed from among individuals nominated by the Speaker of the House and three are appointed from among individuals nominated by the Senate majority leader. The members serve seven year terms.

The Board provides national leadership on national service and administers the Full-time Youth Service Corps and National Service Demonstration Program. States may apply to the board for funding for one or both of these programs.

B. Reporting, labor protection and other requirements

This title includes provisions applicable to programs funded under Title I(A), Title II, and Title III including reporting requirements, limitations on use of funds, state advisory committee requirements, anti-displacement language for employees of programs using participants in various youth service programs, and grievance procedures. Provisions applicable to programs funded under Title II and Title III include language reducing eligibility for federal student loans, but not federal grants, for individuals receiving educational vouchers.

C. Evaluation

Evaluation of all programs funded under Title III is required to test the impact of different models of programs based on criteria that include:

1. Success in recruiting diverse participants, based on: income, geographic background (rural, urban, suburban), gender, race and ethnic background, age, marital and family status, educational level, and handicap.

2. Effects on participants, based on: high school graduation (or GED), future college enrollment, financing of post-secondary education, academic achievement, career choices, attitudes, and future commitment to community volunteer work.

3. Effects on the community, based on: value of service to beneficiaries, ability of community agencies to absorb volunteers, consistency of commitment by volunteers, effect on military recruitment, displacement of paid workers.

TITLE V—EXPANSION OF VISTA

This title incorporates other proposals to restore the number of VISTA volunteers to the previous peak level over four years. FY 1989 appropriations of $21.6 million supports 2,600 VISTA volunteers—a substantial decrease from the FY 1975 peak of 4,580 volunteers.

TITLE VI—EXPANSION OF OLDER AMERICAN VOLUNTEER PROGRAMS

This title increases involvement of Retire Senior Volunteer Program volunteers, Foster Grandparents, and Senior Companions in targeted areas: AIDS, teenage parents, mentoring, literacy, respite care, after school programs, boarder babies, special needs children in child care, adult developmentally disabled, and drug-abuse prevention.

Mr. GORTON. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FORD). The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Ms. MIKULSKI. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Ms. MIKULSKI. Mr. President, while we are debating this bill and other Senators are coming to the floor to make their views known, I thought I would bring out some of the interesting things that we found in the course of our hearings, one of which is there is an assumption that, when we talk about voluntarism or national community services, one has to be either gifted or talented, rich or smart, to volunteer. Yet what we found out is that so many wonderful, ordinary people volunteer and, in fact, that is where our biggest pool comes from—old people out there right now doing extraordinary things in our veterans hospitals, many of them men who were vets themselves or spouses. The ladies auxiliaries have created a spirit of working in our veterans hospitals that I think is of a heroic quality. It starts, actually, a family process where Dad began to volunteer in one of the hospitals in Baltimore, like Fort Howard, and his sons and daughters keep it on, some of them vets themselves who served in Korea or served in Vietnam. That is one source of volunteers.

The other, though, is that we often think of poor people as beneficiaries of programs but not necessarily contributors. Yet we found that that is not the case in our hearings.

Actually, ABC recently did a special on voluntarism, and I would like to tell you a story about a Hispanic teenager, barely literate; he could hardly read himself. They decided to do a bold experiment to pair him with a younger child to help him along, and asked this teenager to be responsible for tutoring or mentoring this elementary school child. Do you know what happened? The teenager developed a sense of responsibility. He literally became a big brother. As he took on the responsibility of helping this little kid learn to read, guess what? He began to learn to read himself. He was responsible for the first time in his whole life for someone else. He took it on; he began to read. He himself began to apply himself in school. He is now an A student and, guess what? Someone who was on the way to being a troublemaker is now a troubleshooter. He is planning to become a teacher, a teacher, because he was asked to take this on. He helped himself, he helped another needy kid and, under our program, the ability to become a teacher would become closer because we would help him with his student loan.

Then we had some of the kids come in from the Conservation Corps. Sure, they wore their khakis and helped in cleaning up the environment and many of those good, wholesome things. But some of the Conservation Corps kids we met were on their way to being what my mother would refer to as dead end kids. They were just heading to a dead end, potentially, of trouble and just on the border. And, yet, we met with the Conservation Corps because they were recruited into the Corps and began to develop a whole alternative sense of responsibility and pride. They took pride in joining the Corps. They took pride in the uniform they wore because they knew they were doing something important for others. They took pride because they began to learn some manly and womanly virtue, like love of nature, caring for the environment.

We had a program in Maryland where Phil Bradon came into the Montgomery County Conservation Corps. He was the crew director. Mr. President, he told us he was heading for some difficulties, but because he was recruited, he now has done lots of outdoor work and has actually done trolley track work for the Trolley Museum. It has given him an opportunity to learn skills, first of all, of reliability, of responsibility, and what any other employer would want, because, in order to do his chore, he had to improve his literacy. He is now moving to get his GED, and, I tell you, when he finishes his stint in the Conservation Corps, he is going to be fit for duty in America's private sector.

Why do I single this one out? Mr. President, right now my Governor in Maryland has debated the prison budget. It is skyrocketing, going off the charts. There is not enough money to provide the prison beds for the druggies. And at the same time, what we find is alternatives are being developed called boot camps. I like that boot camp idea. I like it a lot. While we are developing boot camp for the kids who have gone astray, why not develop a Conservation Corps for the good kids?

Mr. President, one of the problems with our legislation is we often focus on kids when they have gone astray. I would like to reward the good kids. I would like to say yes to the kids who say no to drugs, no to getting pregnant, no to getting someone else pregnant. These Conservation Corps are alternative boot camps, but it is before the kids get in trouble. If they are dead end, we turn their direction so they are heading for somewhere.

Mr. President, our Conservation Corps is an opportunity structure. It is an opportunity structure for the kids to be good kids and to award good behavior.

Mr. President, when we look at Phil Bradon and other boys and girls like him around this country, this is what we are talking about what our legislation does. It says yes to the kids who are saying no to drugs and other problems, but are saying yes to helping their country, and, along the way, they learn responsibility, they learn civic obligation, they learn habits of the hearts, and, as I said, they are then fit for duty in America's private sector.

Mr. President, I think that is what some of these programs are about. As we are going through this conservation from time to time I am going to be bringing some of these stories because when you listen out there, I tell you these volunteers are really the heartbeat of democracy.

Mr. President, I know we are waiting for one of the Senators to come. In the meantime, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Ms. MIKULSKI. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GRAHAM). Without objection, it is so ordered.

Ms. MIKULSKI. Mr. President, I would like to be recognized for the purposes of speaking on this bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Maryland.

Ms. MIKULSKI. Mr. President, you and I have worked on this legislation, and particularly on title I, the school- or community-based programs for students and even out-of-school youths.

One of the problems in advocating legislation is the language is so boring, so dry, so technical the American people cannot get excited about it. They just think we are spending money. When you read a description of this bill, there is not a linkage on what we do. For example, we are going to provide assistance for competitive grants to State departments of education to be awarded to school community partnerships for youth community service or education partnership programs with priority for involving senior citizens or members of the business community—the idea of the Senator from Florida [Mr. GRAHAM] idea—working with schools.

Does that not sound flat? Does that not sound boring? Then it goes on to require programs to include appropriate learning components, training for youth, sustained commitment by youth participants, diversity of program, and tying service to academic programs.

All of that is legislative language, Mr. President, that says we are going to get our kids ready for the future, we are going to get our kids ready for the 21st century. We are essentially building and linking school-based programs with the needs of the future. How are we going to do that? Some concrete examples:

Mr. President, often there is conversation here on the Hill about the global economy, our need to be more competitive, our need to get our kids ready for the future. As part of that conversation, there are comparisons between the Japanese school day and the Japanese school year with the American school day and the American school year. We seem to fall behind either because our schoolday is too short or our school year might not be long enough. But, Mr. President, I support the idea of extending school days and school years.

But, Mr. President, I beieve that not all learning occurs in the classroom. Some of the most important things I learned as a young girl growing up were the things that I learned after school. I was a Girl Scout. Actually, Mr. President, I was a Brownie who grew up to be a Senator. My finest memories are being a Brownie and a Girl Scout. I started out with one of those little oatmeal boxes and graduated on to more complex things and earning badges. I learned a lot. I learned a lot about the environment and about nature. I learned a lot about working with others, team work, and so on.

When we talk about expanding the school day or school year, I think the voluntary service part, school- or community-based programs actually fit right into this idea and can enrich student activity. The idea of the Senator from Florida for example, of engaging the business community, not only in coming to the classroom, but setting up those kinds of things after school where kids could help run the bookstore being taught by the business community about business skills, inventory, bookkeeping, cost accounting.

What did we learn in Girl Scouts? Everybody loves to joke about the Girl Scout cookie sales. Listen, when I meet those young ladies out there selling those Girl Scout cookies, they know about entrepreneurship, they know about marketing. As they deal with those chocolate chips, they are getting ready to deal with microchips in our competitive society.

I know when the Senator speaks, he is going to give examples on the business community relationship, but I would like to talk a minute or two about the senior citizens.

In our hearings, we listened to senior citizens come in and talk about their involvement.

We had a wonderful story where this senior citizen, a retired Federal employee, came in and talked about how he was working in a school tutoring. Now, Mr. President, this is a man who works in the library, and he has assisted young boys and girls in terms of books, in terms of actually reading with them, and in actual tutoring. What was so wonderful about this is that at age 82 he is an integral part of this school system. He is quick, he is alert and he is teaching those kids. And guess what, they are teaching him. He loves the energy. He loves the vitality. We cannot wait to get up every day and come into that shcool system to work with the boys and girls. Some have not had an easy time in life. For some of them, Mr. Bob, as they affectionately call him, is the most stable male figure they have had in their life, the only person who has ever spoken to them in a quiet voice encouraging them to do things. The kids love Mr. Bob and Mr. Bob loves the kids.

Can you imagine what this means in terms of men and women coming into schools? I was in a working class neighborhood where retired men from Bethlehem Steel were actually working in a local public school—retired guys out there helping our youth. This is what our schools need—our young kids seeing people who have worked a day, given a day, often veterans themselves, raised families, and yet they see them doing what you and I would call man's ultimate virtue; you can be a big strong guy and care about a little kid, and in that process teaching them to achieve.

How does this fit in with global competition? Our kids need to read, they need to be exposed to adults and more learning opportunities, and I think that is an excellent example.

Admiral Watkins, the Secretary of Energy, has actually encouraged that to go further. He is encouraging men and women who work at the Federal laboratories around our country to get involved in the school systems. What wonderful leadership he is providing where men and women are getting invovled.

We are finding retired Federal employees, often with backgrounds in science and math, coming into school programs and actually enriching them. Now some of these will occur in the classroom but some will occur after school in a physics club, in a math club, maybe it will be field trips, maybe a variety of other things, but it will be doing, concrete kinds of projects that our boys and girls need.

We need to recruit kids into math, science, engineering, and other fields. I am not so sure we can always get mathematics and physics into our public schools, but I bet we could get many people who are retired to do some work both within the classroom and outside the classroom in different kinds of clubs and organizations.

So, Mr. President, as we look at title I and grants to community-based projects and public-private partnerships, I wanted to put a human face on some of it. I know you will have some stories to tell about Florida. I do not want to talk only about Maryland. I guess I know it the best. But this is an idea that will make us more competitive and get our kids ready for the 21st century.

Mr. President, I note the Senator from Arkansas is here. He has been one of the real architects of this legislation. I will yield the floor so that he may provide his own eloquence.

Mr. BUMPERS. Mr. President, I thank the distinguished Senator from Maryland for her very gracious and complimentary remarks. Voluntary service is an issue which has been high on my agenda ever since I came to the Senate, and today I am delighted to be here to lend my support to this bill that Senator KENNEDY has brought to the floor as S. 1430. I appreciate very much the inclusion of S. 539, S. 540, and S. 541, the three bills that I introduced on March 8, 1989, which are sections 141 through 162. The purpose of sections 141 through 162 is to remove obstacles that prevent young people from working for private section, tax-exempt community service organizations.

I addressed the Senate about my original bills when I introduced them on March 8, 1989 (135 CONGRESSIONAL RECORD at S2354–S2357). I also had the opportunity to speak about these issues when Senator KENNEDY introduced his bills on July 27, 1989 (135 CONGRESSIONAL RECORD at S9017–S9021). I will not repeat myself today, Mr. President, but I would like to make some brief comments.

Most of us would agree that the greatest obstacle facing a young person who wants to devote part of his or her life to serving others through the Peace Corps, VISTA, or other comparable community service is student loan indebtedness. Most students obtain loans to finance their educations. These loans become payable shortly after graduation, which means that many students who would like to participate in service programs simply cannot because they feel a strong obligation to go out, get a job, and start repaying that heavy financial burden.

Congress has long recognized this problem and has provided deferments for repayment of direct and guaranteed student loans for Peace Corps and VISTA volunteers for almost 30 years. In 1980, the ability to defer payments on direct and guaranteed student loans was also extended to students who perform comparable services in the private sector for nonprofit, tax-exempt community service organizations.

Deferring repayment obligations for student loans clears the way for many more students to participate in Peace Corps, VISTA, and community service. Even more students might perform community service if they only knew that these deferments were available. Therefore, sections 141 through 144 of the act direct the Department of Education to publicize to students the availability of these deferments.

The purpose of this section is to ensure that the Department of Education provides information about student loan deferments to all students who would qualify for such deferments if they worked in Peace Corps, VISTA, or with comparable tax-exempt community service organizations.

Students who financed their educations with direct, Perkins loans already may have part of their loans canceled in return for service in the Peace Corps or VISTA. The national community service bill will extend this partial cancellation of direct Perkins loans to students who serve full-time, for at least a year, at a low rate of pay with a tax-exempt community service organization.

The purpose of these sections of the legislation, 151 through 153, is to provide equal treatment to students who participate in community service, whether it be Peace Corps, VISTA, or comparable community service organizations.

The national community service bill also contains a new proposal that extends the incentive for students to work in community services. Sections 161 and 162 provide for partial cancellation of guaranteed student loans, Stafford loans for Peace Corps and VISTA workers, and for workers who provide comparable service with tax-exempt community service organizations.

The purpose of sections 161 and 162 is to increase the number of students who participate in Peace Corps, VISTA, and tax-exempt community service by removing financing obstacles to participation. Mr. President, there are more than 3 million students with guaranteed student loans, nearly 4 times as many as have direct loans. Partial cancellation of loans for students with guaranteed loans may allow many of them to participate in community service.

These proposals are effective ways to promote community service by students. The proposals are especially effective because the private sector will create the service programs and no additional Government bureaucracy will be necessary to manage the programs. The entire program can be enacted at very little cost to the Government.

Mr. President, this is an American model of voluntary service. It is a bottom-up, not a top-down approach. It taps the diversity and energy of America's unique and independent nonprofit sector. More importantly, it gives American young people an opportunity to share their energies and talents to better the world for all of us. I urge my colleagues to join me in support of this bill.

Mr. President, I am prepared to yield the floor unless the distinguished Senator from Maryland wishes to comment further.

Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The absence of a quorum having been suggested, the clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. GRAHAM. Madam President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Ms. MIKULSKI). Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. GRAHAM. Madam President, I request recognition for purposes of delivering a statement on S. 1430.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Florida is recognized for the purposes he stated.

Mr. GRAHAM. Madam President, I wish to congratulate you as well as the other Members of this body who have worked so hard to bring this important legislation before us. I particularly commend Senator KENNEDY for his leadership in bringing the many ideas that form the National Community Service Act, S. 1430.

This bill incorporates key elements of ideas and legislation from many Senators, such as we have just heard from the distinguished Senator from Arkansas.

I believe that the proposal before us will make a significant contribution towards the revival of the spirit of community service in America. To see that this spirit is alive and flourishing in our country, we need look no further than our neighborhood schools where we find many examples of the value of community service.

Our schools have been the focus of a great deal of attention recently. Unfortunately, dropout rates are too high. Unfortunately, in some schools, drug abuse is a constant threat. Unfortunately, many of the students in our schools come from broken homes. And, unfortunately, many of our students badly trail students in the other countries in basic subjects that contribute to a competitive economy: math, science, and reading skills.

The support mechanisms and individual attention needed by students are often unavailable. Teachers in schools have more responsibilities than they have ever attempted to assume in the history of education in this land. Educators continue to wear multiple hats. They are a full-time teacher, they are a friend, they are a coach, counselor, surrogate parent. But they do all of those roles with, in many instances, less and less help.

Madam President, schools in my State have found a solution, an invaluable resource for teachers and students at a time when resources are few. That resource is the school volunteer.

Last year in Florida, more than 140,000 volunteers contributed in excess of 6 million hours of service to over 2,000 public schools. If that service had been billed, it would have cost the State and the school districts in excess of $61 million.

Nationwide, it is estimated that $1 billion in service was provided by business and citizen school volunteers last year. These volunteers, working under the supervision of professional school staff, greatly enrich and enhance the educational experience of students. They provide needed services to students and teachers, including tutoring in reading, math, science, and English. They organize and operate the computer laboratories; they serve in guidance offices, libraries, and health centers.

Madam President, a few minutes ago, you gave some interesting personal examples, I share your feeling that too often we are immersed in specific technical words or the dollar signs in an appropriations bill, that the humanity of these programs is lost. I would like to accept your invitation to talk about some of that humanity.

Last year, under the auspices of the Senate Select Committee on Aging, I chaired a hearing in Palm Beach, County, FL, on the subject of the use of seniors as school volunteers. It was a moving hearing in terms of the testimony of the bond that has developed between the volunteer and the students served.

I remember one volunteer who had spent a lifetime working with the blind in her previous home in the Northeast. She had come to Florida. After a few months of retirement, she realized that life needed that vitality of direct involvement.

So with her special skills in braille and working with the blind, she has been an invaluable volunteer, helping blind students and vision-impaired students in the public schools of her community.

Another man who had spent his life as an engineer and scientist, with tremendous enthusiasm for what it meant to be a scientist, now is sharing not only his skills, his cognitive knowledge, but himself, that special sense of discovery that is so much a part of the excitement of being a scientist.

But let me talk about one particular experience that I had as a volunteer. Last spring, I spent a day as a school volunteer at a middle school in Tallahassee, FL, Belleview Middle School.

At this school I came across a relationship between Darrell and David. Darrell is a young man, 11 or 12 years old, who has had an extremely diverse, and often unhappy, life. Darrell comes from a broken home. His mother struggles to support her family on a very limited income. Darrell had not found school an easy place. He was 1 year behind his grade level at the time I met him. He had never had a report card, Madam President, in his 5 or 6 years of formal schooling, which had not had at least one F. Many times, the F's were the most frequently occurring letter on the card he brought home.

Darrell also had a serious health problem. He had a sinus condition which caused him to miss many days of school and restricted his ability to be a full participant. Darrell also suffered from a lack of self esteem. He did not have high expectations of what was possible for him.

Into Darrell's life came a school volunteer whose name was David. David is an employee of a State agency. Tallahassee being the capital of the State, that is the principal source of employment in that community. David's agency had adopted Belleview Middle School. So, on a regular basis, employees of that agency worked in the school.

David established a one-to-one relationship with Darrell for 2 or 3 days each week, and increasingly David sought out Darrell on weekends. He would come and sit with him and go over homework assignments. He would see that Darrell was eating properly, and that his standard and style of life was that which was a necessary part of his being able to perform effectively in the school. He found that there was some help for Darrell's sinus problem. Through another State agency, there was funding available to have the necessary medical care, eventually leading to some surgery to help relieve Darrell's physical problem.

He also found that Darrell's ability to do well in school had been severely restricted because his mother's financial situation had become so desperate that in the apartment that she rented, they had lost their electricity. The lights had been turned off, and they were facing the prospect of eviction. David, being knowledgeable of what programs were available, was able to arrange for Darrell and his family to find a new home which they could afford. And the lights were turned on. Not only literally were the lights turned on, but in terms of Darrell the lights turned on.

After a few months of this relationship, Darrell, for the first time, brought home a report card that did not have an F on it. And in the last reporting period of the 1988-89 school year, Darrell made the honor roll. That is a tremendous testimony to what one adult, who cared enough and was provided with a structure that made it possible for him to have that relationship, can mean in the life of another human being.

Madam President, I am going to talk some more about the specifics of this legislation, but I think when we finish at the end of this debate, we are talking about that elderly woman, skilled in braille and services for the blind, sitting across the table from a blind youth; we are talking about that spark of enthusiasm that the engineer was able to bring to a whole classroom of potential young scientists, and we are talking about David and Darrell sitting at a cafeteria table talking about his homework and about his homelife and about what kind of future is possible for him.

Madam President, this bill that we have so carefully, and with so much effort and dedication, crafted will provide incentives for States and local educational agencies to help create school and volunteer partnership programs. A particular emphasis of this bill will be to encourage more of our senior Americans to contribute their wealth of knowledge and experience to schools in their communities.

I am pleased that this legislation includes so many components of S. 382, which I had introduced in February of 1989. My bill contains a provision calling for the creation of a clearinghouse to support school volunteer and partnership programs on a nationwide basis. It also provides incentives for the creation and expansion of volunteer partnerships, with emphasis placed on increasing school volunteer opportunities for senior citizens.

Madam President, today, we are asking citizens of all ages to make a commitment to national and community service. Service knows no age restrictions. It is my belief that as we make that challenge to serve, it is important that the Federal Government should lead by example in encouraging private sector and community involvement in the schools. If we, the Federal Government, are indicating the importance that we place upon service for others, the most dramatic and the most meaningful means by which we can express that sincerity is by the way we act ourselves.

So I am suggesting that we, through this legislation, make that strong commitment for the Federal Government's role in voluntary action.

The Department of Defense has established itself as a leader of the Federal level in forming partnerships with local schools. In Florida, I have seen firsthand the significant benefits these military partnerships provide to students, schools, the communities in which they are located, as well as the military.

Seventy-five Navy and Air Force partnerships in Florida duplicate the highly successful adopt-a-school, Saturday scholars, and math-science initiative programs that were developed by the U.S. Navy. Adopt-a-school at Pensacola Naval Air Station encourages squadrons to adopt local schools through tutoring students, organizing sporting activities, field trips, and other outreach activities.

As an example of how influential the Pensacola program has been, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD an editorial which appeared in the February 14, 1990, issue of the Tampa Tribune.

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

CITIZEN OF THE YEAR

Each year Tampa's Civitan Club singles out someone remarkable, a person whose efforts touch the heart of the community. We're downright delighted to acknowledge this year's Citizen of the Year: James F. Urbanski, vice president and general manager of The Tampa Tribune.

Why Jim Urbanski for Tampa's most signal honor, announced yesterday at the Governor's Day Luncheon at the Florida State Fair? Along with furthering drug prevention through the Greater Tampa Chamber of Commerce, of which he is past president, and promoting Tampa in his role as a leader of the Super Bowl Task Force, he has been a conscientious supporter of the Boy Scouts, the United Way, the American Cancer Society, the Salvation Army, the March of Dimes, the Red Cross, and just about every other charitable and cultural organization in town. The current president of the Southern Newspaper Publishers Association, Urbanski combines high energy with an unfailingly gracious manner.

Two years ago, while on a business trip to Pensacola, Urbanski observed a program at the Pensacola Naval Base where servicemen voluntarily teamed up with youths in need of tutoring. Back in Tampa, he persuaded the top brass at MacDill Air Force Base to replicate the program. Thus, some 50 youths, most from underprivileged College Hill, became "Saturday scholars," and as they grew more proficient in math and science, they learned an important lesson about civics, compassion, and the power of committed leadership.

As president of the SNPA, he has established goals regarding literacy, newspaper quality, and minority hiring—a pledge backed up by five journalism scholarships of $3,000 each.

A native of Bloomington, Ill., Urbanski joined The Tribune in 1960, becoming vice president and general manager in 1977. He and wife Ann have four children.

Citizen of the Year. We who know Jim well know how the title fits.

Mr. GRAHAM. The editorial commends the citizen of the year designated by the Tampa Civitan Club, James F. Urbanski. In the editorial, it states:

Two years ago while on a business trip to Pensacola, Urbanski observed a program at the Pensacola Naval Base where servicemen voluntarily teamed up with youth in need of tutoring. Back in Tampa, he persuaded the top brass at MacDill Air Force Base to replicate that program. Thus, some 50 youths, most are from the underprivileged College Hill neighborhood, became "Saturday Scholars," and as they grew more proficient in math and science, they learned an important lesson about civics, compassion, and the power of committed leadership.

Madam President, I believe that this example of how a program in one community has now influenced many others is an example of how the Federal Government can effectively lead by example.

Under the Saturday Scholars Program, which is now an important part of the relationship between MacDill Air Force Base and the Hillsborough County schools, students and volunteers give up six consecutive Saturday mornings for intensive tutoring sessions. The program culminates in a ceremony where graduates receive and cherish the white "Dixie cups," or hats, of their tutors.

Schools have had to turn away students eager to participate in this popular Saturday morning program.

The math-science initiative at Orlando Naval Training Center provides students with tutors who have technical expertise for instruction in math, science and computer skills.

At a time when math and science teachers are in such short supply, this program has been an important resource to participating schools and students.

Madam President, the leadership provided by the Air Force and Navy should be duplicated in other branches of the armed services and throughout the Federal Government.

During consideration of fiscal year 1990 Department of Defense appropriation bill, the Senate accepted my amendment to require each branch of the armed services to follow the Navy's lead.

I am pleased that the National and Community Service Act, which we are debating today, also includes my proposal to require all Federal agencies and departments—both civilian and military—to establish partnerships with local schools and to encourage Federal employees to participate as school volunteers.

A strong and visible leadership role on the part of the Federal Government will serve as a much needed beacon to the private sector and stimulate substantial community involvement in their local schools.

Madam President, I urge my colleagues to follow your leadership in support of S. 1430.

I again thank you and Senator KENNEDY for incorporating my ideas to promote school volunteer and partnership programs into this important national initiative. A revival of voluntary action, a stimulus to apply the best practices across the Nation, and commitment of the Federal Government to this important initiative will substantially contribute to our objective.

Madam President, I commend you for your leadership. I urge my colleagues to follow your wisdom.

Madam President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GRAHAM). Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER. Mr. President, I rise in support of the bill before us, the National and Community Service Act, and to express my hope that we will seize this opportunity to reinvigorate a spirit of service among our Nation's citizens—especially our young people.

This bill is the result of an enormous effort on the part of Member of this body and many, many others who have been deeply committed to voluntarism and community service for a long time. The bill represents a growing consensus that something more must be done to motivate and assist Americans of all ages to get involved in projects and endeavors that help others. Because, however, there are different views on exactly what role the Federal Government should play in generating a greater level of community service, this legislation was designed to try and test a variety of approaches. Thus, our proposal is to support local programs that fall into different models—including school-based programs, summer youth service programs, and programs that might help us consider developing a more ambitious national service effort. The bill also earmarks funds to stimulate more involvement among college students in community service, off campus, during this summers, and after graduation through opportunities like the Peace Corps and VISTA.

Mr. President, America prides itself in having a long tradition of voluntarism and citizen involvement. But I believe we must recognize that we need far more of our people to make a commitment to serving others, whether that commitment is an hour a week, a day a month, a year or 2 of their lives, or in the form of the job or career they choose. Poverty, illiteracy, hunger, racial tensions, and drug abuse are crying out for attention. Our country tolerates a shocking level of infant mortality and a growing portion of citizens who are shut out from basic health care—of dimensions that other industrialized countries find appalling.

It is not just the Government's job or the job of charity to respond to these enormous and, in some cases growing, problems. Individuals—of every age and in every community—are needed, to devote the time, suffer the inconvenience, and make sacrifices on behalf of others, on behalf of their communities, on behalf of our country's future.

I was personally captivated by the call to serve that rang out from President Kennedy in the early 1960's. It was an extraordinary time then. Our President asked young people in particular to join in an effort to build a better society, and I was among thousands and thousands who responded. We heard his voice, the voice of his brother, Robert Kennedy, and Martin Luther King, Jr., prodding our Nation to live up to our ideals: freedom, equality, tolerance, and service.

In response to this call, I decided to join VISTA, the program patterned after the Peace Corps and created to spur full-time service in some of the poorest areas of our country. Through VISTA, I went to West Virginia, and my life changed instantly. That was 25 years ago, and I never left. I made public service my career and West Virginia my permanent home.

Through the VISTA Program, I spent 2 years working in Emmons, WV, a coal town whose people struggled to feed their children and make it through the day. My memories of that time will never fade—memories of building a community center, starting a preschool program, taking kids to see a dentist for the first time, and pounding at State government for a schoolbus so the teenagers of Emmons could go to high school.

When I recall that time, I feel more strongly than ever that our leaders, at every level, must call on Americans to give more of themselves to others. The needs are endless, and they are everywhere. But unfortunately, voluntarism and service have to be promoted and nurtured and sought out. Our citizens—young and old—need to be nudged and urged to serve.

Mr. President, the National and Community Service Act is conceived to put into action a series of programs that will call on more of our people to get involved in service, and in ways that will steer them to make meaningful, needed contributions in their communities and on behalf of others. We want to build on the growing number of youth service and community service projects that have been cropping up in many States. We want to offer financial support to existing and new projects that show the most promise. And we want to see what approaches work the best, are most cost-effective, and provide the greatest rewards to everyone involved.

This bill is an effort to call on and call out to Americans to give more of themselves. Our society needs the talent, the hours, and the compassion of more citizens who are willing to volunteer or enter full-time careers in fields like teaching or practicing medicine in the rural parts of America. In these times, when success is so often defined in economic or financial terms, we should reflect on the words of Robert Kennedy:

He reminded us that "the gross national product does not include the beauty of our poetry or the strength of our marriages, the intelligence of our public debate or the integrity of our public officials. It allows neither for the justice in our courts, nor for the justness of our dealings with others. The gross national product measures neither our wit nor our courage, neither our compassion nor our devotion to our country. It measures everything, in short, except that which makes life fully worthwhile."

I sincerely believe this bill deserves strong support. We must act vigorously and boldly to convince our citizens to experience that which makes life truly worthwhile.

Mr. CRANSTON. Mr. President, I rise today in support of S. 1430, the National and Community Service Act of 1990.

In the past year, a number of proposals intended to foster and lend support to the volunteer spirit have been introduced in the Senate. S. 1430 brings these proposals together in a comprehensive measure. This bill would offer numerous and varied service opportunities to many Americans who wish to contribute to the well-being of their communities—regardless of their age or economic background. As a long-time supporter of the concept of national service, I am delighted to be a cosponsor of this important legislation.

S. 1430 would expand upon existing programs that we know work, and it would provide the means for implementing and testing new programs for their quality and effectiveness. In particular, S. 1430 would allow participating States to choose one or any combination of three new programs: A School and Community Based Service Program, and American Conservation and Youth Corps, and a National Service Full- and Part-Time Program.

The first of these initiatives, the School and Community Based Service Program, would offer volunteer opportunities to students in our elementary and secondary schools. Such an early introduction to voluntary service would provide these young people with an apprenticeship in citizenship, and good training for a life of productive work. This program would also provide service opportunities for olders Americans, who have so much experience and wisdom to offer our communities. They, too, need a vehicle for their extraordinary talents, and this program, and other programs within the bill provide such vehicles.

Mr. President, I take particular pleasure in noting the second new program offered in S. 1430, the American Conservation and Youth Corps. This program would, among other things, create an American Conservation Corps patterned after the highly successful Civilian Conservation Corps of the New Deal years. S. 1430 would provide matching Federal funds to supplement existing State Conservation Corps and to develop new conservation corps in States that don't have this program.

Mr. President, the successes of the conservation corps in California made me very enthusiastic in my support of a National Conservation Corps. In California, the valuable contributions of the young men and women in the conservation corps are not confined to the important task of maintaining our public lands for the enjoyment of present and future generations. They do much more. When the Loma Prieta earthquake struck the San Francisco Bay area in October of last year, the San Francisco Conservation Corps was quick to respond. Members of the corps were actively involved in emergency evacuation efforts, patrolling devastated areas, and assisting many citizens in retrieving their belongings and finding shelter. Crews from other conservation corps in California, and as far away as New York, joined the San Francisco crew in its efforts. This remarkable display of cooperation and eagerness to help represents voluntarism at its best. I believe that S. 1430 promotes this extraordinary spirit.

The authors of S. 1430 are also to be congratulated for the inclusion of a full- and part-time National Service Program, patterned to some extent after the National Guard. This provision of the bill would establish demonstration projects to test the viability of programs that reward full- and part-time civilian service participants with vouchers to defray education costs or assist first time home buyers. The evaluation component which accompanies these demonstration projects would give us a change to evaluate the effectiveness of these demonstration projects, and also their impact on the recruitment capabilities of other types of community service programs, such as the Peace Corps, and VISTA. I am particularly pleased that the amended version of S. 1430 provides for frequent evaluation reports so we can closely monitor the effect of this bill on military recruitment efforts.

Mr. President, I congratulate the authors of S. 1430 for their tremendous collaboration on this fine package of community service programs. This bill represents the molding together of a number of innovative proposals which would provide the American public with a wide choice of volunteer options. The legislation we consider today would bring people of all ages and backgrounds together in effective work. This Nation's citizens can add the human dimension and the volunteer spirit so often lacking in established bureaucracies. In return, these volunteers would take home important skills, self-esteem, and the joy of serving one's community. This bill would truly foster a spirit of voluntarism in this country. I urge passage of S. 1430.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, I rise today in support of the compromise we have reached on S. 1430, the National and Community Service Act. My home State of Washington has already accepted the importance of voluntary community service. The Washington Leadership Institute and the Washington Service Corps are two prime examples of community service in action. Both efforts will be augmented by the bill before us today.

I am pleased to be a cosponsor of this significant initiative. We need to promote voluntary community service throughout the United States. Enactment of S. 1430 is essential to achieve this goal. This bill represents a compromise which effectively addresses concerns regarding worker displacement that could result from increased volunteer activity and the potential discriminatory impact of tying financial aid eligibility to community service as suggested during initial discussions on this issue.

Recent public opinion polls demonstrate that Americans view drug abuse and education as the most challenging issues facing our Nation. During a Washington Post-ABC survey, pollsters found that among those polled, the "breakdown of the family" was blamed most often for our current drug crisis and that our peace dividend should be spent to improve education. While we would be kidding ourselves and cheating our children if we were to operate under the illusion that a nationwide program for community service is a panacea for our problems, I firmly believe that this bill is a necessary and fundamental component in our efforts to combat the drug crisis and improve education. Both are essential goals as we work to cultivate our Nation's human resources and regain our international competitiveness.

In a very real sense, although by no means a substitute for the family, national and community service can help correct the disenfranchised and hostile attitudes that are harbored by many Americans today. Many people have no reason to feel a part of a community, no feeling of responsibility to care for others and no sense of ownership for the future of the country. A strong program for voluntary national and community service can help reverse this trend of alienation.

President Bush has expressed support for the concept of national and community service. Through this bill, we will give programmatic form to this concept. Without this program, much of America would be excluded from contributing. Without some extra incentive, many people, plain and simple, cannot afford to participate in voluntary service. We want to move beyond a volunteer system of mainly the affluent serving the poor. Certainly, we need and want the participation of the wealthy. But, we also need to promote the participation of those who are not as well off so that they can experience the same sense of accomplishment and satisfaction that comes with serving one's community or nation.

The compromise we have reached combines the three major programs in S. 1430 into one State grant program, and authorizes the Points of Light Foundation to make these grants.

I am very pleased that title I of this bill will augment the innovative Washington Leadership Institute and provide the opportunity to create or strengthen other school-based programs across the Nation. Under this section of the National and Community Service Act, all school aged children are eligible for participation in projects like the Washington Leadership Institute. The Washington Leadership Institute currently sponsors various programs that help young people from many different backgrounds develop leadership skills while serving their communities through projects they design themselves. A moving example of what can be accomplished is the food bank in Toledo, WA. After participating in the week long Governor's School for Leadership which is part of the Washington Leadership Institute, Sean Fox saw a great need for a food bank in his home town of Toledo. Acting as his own lobbyist, he was able to garner the necesary support for his project from the mayor of Toledo, Shirley Grubb, and his school principal, Dennis Clark. Following extensive ground work and numerous organizational meetings, the food bank began operating. Operating out of an old roller rink that the town rented for the project at $1 per year, the food bank soon secured second hand refrigerators and freezers to store perishables. To this day, the Toledo food bank is fulfilling a very great need, and for this we owe our thanks to Sean Fox and the Washington Leadership Institute.

Additionally, title I encourages older Americans and businesses to become active in school volunteer and partnership programs. While there is no substitute for Federal funding for education, I do believe that as we struggle with scarce resources to improve the quality of education in our country, it is important to engage volunteers and businesses in school improvement programs whenever possible. Further, we can not underestimate the importance of promoting community service to postsecondary education age individuals. S. 1430 recognizes this and includes provisions which expand programs like the Student Financial Independence Program and the State Student Incentive Grant Program. In some cases, students are also eligible for forgiveness of student loans.

The American Conservation and Youth Service Corps included under title I will complement Washington State's current efforts involving the Washington Service Corps and the Washington Conservation Corps. Under this section of the bill, States are encouraged to establish or improve programs that provide full-time opportunities to youth in conservation or human service related projects. The potential productive work capacity under this program is significant and the education and skills individuals gain from participation is irreplaceable. Four hundred young Washingtonians participate and benefit each year in the Washington Service Corps working on community service projects. Enactment of this legislation will give even more young residents of my home State the opportunity to learn from youth service experiences.

Finally, title I of the National and Community Service Act also provides for demonstration programs which will encourage the development and enhancement of community service programs involving part-time, full-time, and senior citizen participants. Participants in this program will receive stipends and vouchers good for first-time home buying and educational expenses.

I have always felt that voluntary service is the price we must pay for the benefits of living in a free society. Passage of this measure is desperately needed as we work to instill upon the citizens of this country the importance of national and community service. I strongly believe that people want to contribute to society, but we need to make sure that productive opportunities exist and that each and every individual has an equal chance to participate. This compromise represents a solid approach to utilizing our Nation's vast and untapped human resources and to restoring the sense of civic responsibility that has clearly fallen by the wayside. The benefits of this proposal over the long term will far outweigh program costs. S. 1430 deserves expeditious passage by the full Senate.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I want to personally thank the Senator from West Virginia for his comments about my brother, Bob. Those words were strongly felt and meant. I appreciate the context in which they were used.

I also extend congratulations to the Senator for an excellent exposition about the importance of this legislation and for his bringing to bear his own personal experience which I think is important and relevant to this legislation. We are very appreciative of his strong statement and his continuing support.

There are a number of Members of this body who are not members of the particular committee that helped to shape this legislation, and the Senator from West Virginia is one of those. We value highly his support and his working with us in the shaping of the legislation. I want to thank him very much for those comments.

Mr. President, we have had a good number of statements over the course of the afternoon from both sides of the aisle. We have heard from most of those, although not all of those, who had different recommendations which we considered. We still look forward to hearing from the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. DODD]; the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. PELL], whom I referenced earlier during the debate, who, because of their responsibilities as members of the Foreign Relations Committee, necessitated their presence in Nicaragua and now are on their way back to this debate and have communicated again to me their strongest support and their desire to be heard tomorrow. But we have heard from a number of the members of our committee and a number of those who are not on our committee who have taken a very special interest.

I take note that for a Monday when there was the announcement that we would not be voting, we have had an impressive group of Members who have spoken about the issues which are incorporated in this particular proposal.

I know there have been some amendments which have been proposed. I, again, indicate we have permitted time for those who had been strongly supportive of the legislation to speak. But I also indicated earlier in the day that we hope to be able to start the debate on some of these amendments with the final disposition of some of those early tomorrow in order to permit the Senate's schedule to move forward.

I take note of the fact that over the period of a number of hours, just about noontime, when we started the debate, we have not had one Senator who has spoken in opposition to this legislation. I know that there are some areas of policy which have been included in this legislation which some Members, in the form of amendments, have expressed some concerns about, but we have not had any Member speak out in opposition to it. We take note of that at this time.

So we are quite prepared to move ahead, Mr. President, in considering any of the amendments. We are prepared to stay here until whatever time Members so desire so that we can debate these amendments, and then we would be prepared to work out with the proponents of those amendments and the leadership a reasonable period of time so we can dispose of them at an early time tomorrow and to move this whole process.

The legislation has been reviewed and examined and heard in our committee. We have had opportunities to debate many of these issues in our committee prior to coming to the floor. We worked with as many of those Members of this body who have been interested in this approach over a very considerable period of time. We think we have a sound package that the sponsors can defend and are prepared to do so. So we are very hopeful that we can move this process forward and come to grips with any differing views so that the Senate can work its will and that this legislation, which so many have contributed to, will move forward in the legislative process.

There is work to do over in the House. They formed a task force. Different proposals have been advanced there. I have been in communication with the leadership, and I know others have as well. I know our majority leader has. This is a priority item, so we want to move this forward. We realize we have a number of other extremely important pieces of legislation on the calendar.

Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. JEFFORDS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. KOHL). Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. JEFFORDS. Mr. President, I wish to address the bill before us.

Mr. President, I rise in support of S. 1430, the National and Community Service Act of 1989.

First of all, let me commend the authors of this bill and those who have been working diligently with the administration in getting the price tag down to what I think is a much more reasonable level and one which is likely to lead to passage.

It is refreshing to me that S. 1430 is on the floor of the Senate for consideration. Community service, clearly not a new concept, has frequently not received the attention and recognition that it deserves. Without the panoply of community service programs our country would not be as great as it is. Too frequently their efforts go unnoticed. Passage of this bill will publicly acknowledge this work and encourage others to give of their time as well.

I will not take time to outline the provisions of the bill for others before me have already done that very adequately. But I do want to address one of the recurring criticisms I have heard about this bill.

That criticism is that the bill provides money for volunteers, which many believe is antiethical to community service, and I agree to a certain extent. Community service should be free, but unfortunately it does have its costs. Costs associated with starting up programs in schools and communities, administration costs for running programs, vehicles needed to transport volunteers, building, and publication costs.

But those are often minimal costs compared to the sacrifice of individuals of their time and their own money. Part of the costs associated with the bill are those which come from the student financial aid forgiveness program. Some might argue that this is a costly and unwarranted provision.

But postsecondary institutions are expensive and more and more students are leaving school with heavy loan and debt burdens. It is naive to think that we can attract energetic, young, and bright individuals into community and social service when they have loan repayments to think about. It is not a financial inducement into service; rather it is an acknowledgment that community service is a sacrifice, a sacrifice which has numerous benefits not to the individual alone but to our society as a whole.

S. 1430 establishes a comprehensive framework and infrastructure for community service. It provides programs from elementary through to secondary schools. Incentives for involvement in higher education and on through to programs to encourage senior citizens.

The bill incorporates a number of different programs and concepts for community service. One of these programs is the American Conservation and Youth Service Corps. National recognition and Federal support for this program will clearly enhance the work that States have already embarked upon. I want to just briefly explain the effects of this program in my State of Vermont.

The Vermont Youth Conservation Corps was established in 1985 with the intent of helping to restore and preserve the State's cultural heritage. This past summer marked Vermont Youth Conservation Corps [VYCC] fourth year of serving Vermont youth and improving State lands and communities. During the year, 90 youth corpsmembers, ages 6-21, and 46, JTPA recipients, participated in a variety of conservation projects including; trail blazing, fence building, construction of drainage systems, and upgrading of community parks and grounds.

But the variety of conservation projects are not the only component of the program. Educational assessments, remediation, and employment competency training are important aspects of the program. A special curriculum, writing, reading, discussion combining preemployment competencies and environmental and conservation issues, was developed specifically for the Vermont Youth Conservation Corps. The curriculum has proven highly successful in teaching participants leadership and communication skills, involvement in community service and appropriate tool and safety training.

The Vermont Youth Conservation Corps has become a program which enriches the lives of Vermont youth through special learning opportunities while providing a service to Vermont communities and the environment. Corpsmembers complete the summer with a greater awareness of their own potential, a new appreciation of the environment, and an awareness of the rewards of team work and community service.

S. 1430 brings together programs already in existence and new ones to encourage community service in our country. I have seen the success of programs within my State, and now it is time to expand them to the remainder of the country.

Mr. President, I urge adoption of this bill and am hopeful it will occur soon.

Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I understand the National Community Service Act of 1989 is still the pending business?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is correct.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I understand there may be some way to compromise some of the differences in the legislation. I have, and I know some others have, some serious reservations about the costs and the appropriateness of the legislation. But, at the same time, I am certain if legislation does pass—and I assume we can work out our differences—that may be in the works and maybe, if so, we can take care of all the legislation very quickly. But if it does pass the body it must ensure that individuals with disabilities are involved in national service programs as volunteers, not just as recipients.

The talents and skills of our 43 million Americans with disabilities have been seriously underutilized for much too long. At a time when the President has endorsed historic civil rights legislation for people with disabilities, we must guarantee that these citizens are given the opportunity to participate fully in any national service initiative.

Although recipients of Federal assistance under this legislation are covered by the Rehabilitation Act of 1973, and it is referenced in this legislation, I believe we could strengthen the bill by spelling it out. Doing so will improve opportunities for people with disabilities and help break the cycle of separateness that plagues this minority.

My amendments will have to be reconfigured when we have a substitute, but my amendments are simple. The bill now defines "adult volunteer" as a person beyond the age of compulsory schooling, including an older American, an employee of a private business, an employee of a public or nonprofit agency, or any other individual working without financial remuneration in an educational institution to assist students, or out of school youth.

The bill also specifies that, in providing financial assistance to adult volunteer and partnership programs, priority shall be given to programs that involve individuals of different ages, races, sexes, ethnic groups, and economic backgrounds.

My proposal would amend this language to include a person with a disability under the definition of an adult volunteer and add individuals with disabilities to the list delineating program participants.

We also modify that portion of the bill which would suggest the types of national service that may be made available under national service demonstration programs. The bill now includes health care services, child care, housing-related programs and self-help programs under the category human service. Our proposal would specifically include programs that assist those who are elderly, disabled, poor, and homeless in obtaining meaningful employment.

Project with industry programs, programs under the Job Training Partnership Act, vocational rehabilitation agencies and nonprofit organizations offering employment assistance are among the types of programs and organizations that could benefit from the services of volunteers.

Mr. President, we should not just focus on service programs that will make easier the day-to-day lives of our most vulnerable citizens. We should also emphasize programs that can assure many of these individuals achieve greater independence and dignity by helping them become productive members of society.

Important to such endeavors is the recognition that all of us have unique talents and skills—whether one happens to have a disability or not.

Overcoming the barriers that exclude adults with disabilities from jobs commensurate with their abilities has not been easy.

There are many individuals with disabilities, who by reason of their disability, are unable to work, yet could significantly contribute to volunteer activities.

It is already being done. Just recently, I might add, the Dole Foundation awarded a grant to the Center for Independent Living in Berkeley, CA, to assist the area homeless in finding shelter and eventual employment through job training activities.

The Department of Labor has taken the lead with this project through funding under the Stewart McKinney Act.

This project is just one example of true voluntarism at work—people working together providing free training and counseling to help homeless people find jobs and integrate themselves back into the community.

In addition to regular paid staff, there are many homeless and people with disabilities who volunteer their talents. Since the October 17 earthquake, the project has assisted victims in relocating and finding employment. The project has also set up a clothing center to provide free clothing to the homeless.

People with disabilities are eager and ready to contribute yet still face discrimination and lack of accessibility. Assuring access carries with it the responsibility for the provision of reasonable accommodations.

Two of the amendments under my proposal will require reasonable accommodations for people with disabilities.

One will insist that the applications in their descriptions of the equipment facilities, emergency care, and other features, include accommodations for individuals with disabilities. Often providing accommodations for participants with disabilities involves no more than taking a commonsense approach that need not be difficult to be effective. The other amendment proposes making the 3-week training program required by this legislation to be accessible wherever appropriate.

The biggest barrier to inclusion of people with disabilities is the lack of understanding. The responsibility to support people with disabilities begins and ends where it does with everyone else. These amendments will send a signal that people with disabilities, like everyone else, have the knowledge and skills to make a difference in their communities.

Finally, Mr. President, where the bill refers to individuals, or participants, with handicapping conditions, my proposal would substitute the term "with disabilities" wherever the term "with a handicapping condition" occurs. The usage of the term "with disabilities" is consistent with language found in the Rehabilitation Act of 1973 and the Fair Housing Act, as well as disability-related legislation pending before Congress, including the Americans With Disabilities Act and the Education of the Handicapped Act. This important change in terminology will bring outdated terminology up-to-date with state-of-the-art policy for people with disabilities.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that I may speak as in morning business for 1 minute.

THANKS TO PRESIDENT REAGAN

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I just had the pleasure of talking with former President Reagan by telephone. I called President Reagan to thank him for his efforts on behalf of the people of Nicaragua for the past several years, because without President Reagan's steadfast resolve, we would not have seen a free election or a fair election; we would not have seen the election of Violeta Chamorro in that country.

There is no doubt in my mind that one can look at many things that happened over the past several years, past several months, past several weeks and had it not been for Ronald Reagan, despite all the criticism he took from many Members of Congress and many Americans, he understood precisely what he wanted for the people of Nicaragua: Democracy, freedom, and get rid of a dictator.

Because of his resolve and because of his steadfast efforts, because of the money the Congress appropriated to help the Contras, because of the imposition of sanctions by the President of the United States, at that time Ronald Reagan, and because of his continuing support, never wavering in his efforts to bring freedom and democracy to the people of Nicaragua, there is no doubt in my mind that the No. 1 catalyst in all this has been former President Ronald Reagan.

So I thank him on behalf of the people of Nicaragua, on behalf of Violeta Chamorro, the winning candidate, on behalf of all of us who stood with Ronald Reagan through those rather contentious times.

I say this does vindicate, as I said earlier today, Ronald Reagan's policy during the Reagan years. Whenever you give the people a chance, an option of freedom or oppression, they are going to take freedom and democracy every time.

MORNING BUSINESS

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that there be a period for morning business, with Senators permitted to speak therein.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

S. 2168. A bill to amend the Defense Production Act of 1950 to support mobilization of the defense industrial base of the United States; to the Committee on Banking, Housing and Urban Affairs.

DEFENSE PRODUCTION ACT AMENDMENTS OF 1990

● Mr. GARN. Mr. President, today I would like to introduce a bill proposed by the administration to amend the Defense Production Act of 1950 to support mobilization of the defense industrial base of the United States. I am pleased that the administration sent us their suggestions. I think that this bill is indicative of the administration's firm support for the Defense Production Act and I join them in urging that the act be extended this year. Although I have not reviewed or taken a position of every provision of the bill, I believe these proposals deserve careful consideration and am confident that the Banking Committee and the Senate will support many of them. I ask unanimous consent that the administration's bill and explanatory materials be printed in the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 2168

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SHORT TITLE

SECTION 1. This Act may be cited as the "Defense Production Act Amendments of 1990".

EXTENSION OF THE DEFENSE PRODUCTION ACT OF 1950

SEC. 2. Section 717(a) of the Defense Production Act of 1950 (50 U.S.C. App. 2166(a)) is amended to read as follows:

"Title I, title III, and title VII of this Act shall be permanent as of August 11, 1990. Provided, That all authority hereby made permanent under Title III of this Act shall be effective for any fiscal year only to such extent or in such amounts as are provided in advance in appropriation Acts."

DECLARATION OF POLICY

SEC. 3. Section 2 of the Defense Production Act of 1950 (50 U.S.C. App. 2062) is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 2. (a)(1) In view of the present international situation, the need for measures to reduce defense production lead times and bottlenecks, and in order to provide for the national defense and national security, our defense mobilization preparedness effort continues to require the development of preparedness programs, defense industrial base improvement measures, and the expansion of domestic productive capacity and supply beyond the levels needed to meet the civilian demand, as well as a need for a maximized response to early warning indicators to ensure the timely availability of adequate industrial production and supply for national defense requirements. Also required is some diversion of certain materials and facilities from civilian use to military and related purposes.

"(2) These activities are needed in order to improve defense industrial base efficiency and responsiveness, to reduce the time required for industrial mobilization in the event of a threat to the security of the United States or an attack on the United States or to respond to actions occurring outside of the United States which could result in the termination or reduction of the availability of strategic and critical materials, including energy, and other industrial resources, which could adversely affect the national defense preparedness of the United States. In order to ensure the national defense preparedness which is essential to national security, it is also necessary and appropriate to assure the availability of domestic energy supplies for national defense needs.

"(b)(1) Executive departments and agencies shall assess the capability of the defense industrial base to satisfy peacetime, surge and mobilization requirements and take necessary actions, where appropriate, to ensure that adequate domestic production capacity exists to satisfy these requirements. To ensure that essential mobilization requirements are met, consideration should be given to stockpiling stategic materials to the extent that such stockpiling is economical and feasible.

"(2) It is the policy of the Congress that plans and programs to carry out this declaration of policy shall be undertaken with due consideration for promoting efficiency and competition."

EXPANSION OF PRODUCTIVE CAPACITY AND SUPPLY

SEC. 4. Section 303(a) of the Defense Production Act of 1950 (50 U.S.C. App. 2093(a)) is amended by striking out "25,000,000" in the last sentence and inserting in lieu thereof "50,000,000".

SEC. 5. Section 303(b) of the Defense Production Act of 1950 (50 U.S.C. App. 2093(b)) is amended by striking out "September 30, 1995" and inserting in lieu thereof "ten years from the initial date of such purchase, commitment to purchase, or sale".

SEC. 6. Section 309 of the Defense Production Act of 1950 (50 U.S.C. App. 2099) is repealed.

VOLUNTARY AGREEMENTS

SEC. 7. Section 708A of the Defense Production Act of 1950 (50 U.S.C. App. 2158a) is repealed.

SEC. 8. Section 708 of the Defense Production Act of 1950 (50 U.S.C. App. 2158) is amended—

(i) in subsections (f) and (g),

(1) by inserting "or plan of action" after "voluntary agreement" each place it appears; and

(2) by inserting "or plan" after "the agreement" each place it appears;

(j) in subsection (h),

(1) by inserting "and plans of action" after "voluntary agreements";

(2) by inserting "or plan of action" after "voluntary agreement" each place it appears;

(3) in subsection (h)(3) by striking out "subsections (b)(1) and (b)(3) of section 552" and inserting in lieu thereof "subsections (b)(1), (b)(3), and (b)(4) of section 552"; and

(4) in subsections (h)(7) and (h)(8) by striking out "subsection (b)(1) or (b)(3) of section 552" and inserting in lieu thereof "subsections (b)(1), (b)(3), or (b)(4) of section 552";

(k) in subsection (j), to read as follows:

"(j)(1) There shall be available as a defense for any person to any civil or criminal action brought under the antitrust laws (or any similar law of any State) with respect to any action taken to develop or carry out any voluntary agreement or plan of action under this section (provided that such action was not taken for the purpose of injuring competition) that—

"(A) such action was taken—

"(i) in the course of developing either a voluntary agreement, the making of which was initiated by the President, or a plan of action adopted thereunder, or

"(ii) to carry out either a voluntary agreement authorized and approved in accordance with this section, the making of which was initiated by the President, or a plan of action adopted thereunder, and

"(B) such a person complied with the requirements of this section and the rules promulgated hereunder, and acted in accordance with the terms of the voluntary agreement or plan of action.

"(2) Except in the case of actions taken to develop a voluntary agreement or plan of action, the defense provided in this subsection shall be available only if and to the extent that the person asserting the defense demonstrates that the action was specified in, or within the reasonable contemplation of an approved voluntary agreement the making of which was initiated by the President or any approved plan of action adopted thereunder.

"(3) Persons interposing the defense provided by this subsection shall have the burden of proof upon the elements of the defense, except that the burden shall be on the person against whom the defense is asserted with respect to whether the action was taken for the purpose of injuring competition.";

(l) in subsection (k), by inserting "and plans of action" after "voluntary agreements" each place it appears

(m) in subsection (l), by inserting "or plan of action" after "voluntary agreement";

(n) by adding a new subsection (n), as follows:

"(n) Notwithstanding any other provision of law, any activities conducted under a voluntary agreement or plan of action approved pursuant to this section, when conducted in compliance with the requirements of this section, the rules promulgated herunder, and the provisions of the voluntary agreement or plan of action, are exempt from all Federal laws, rules and regulations pertaining to advisory committees."; and

(o) by adding a new subsection (o), as follows:

"(o) In any action in any Federal or State court for breach of contract, there shall be available as a defense that the alleged breach of contract was caused predominantly by action taken during an emergency to carry out a voluntary agreement or plan of action authorized and approved in accordance with this section."

EXECUTIVE RESERVE

SEC. 9. Section 710 of the Defense Production Act of 1950 (50 U.S.C. App. 2160) is amended—

(a) in subsection (b), by striking paragraph (4) and inserting in lieu thereof:

"(4) Notwithstanding any other provision of law, the President, upon finding that achievement of the purpose of this section requires such action, may exempt with respect to specified activities, persons who become employed pursuant to subsection (b)(1), and their private employers, from the antitrust laws or any similar state law; Provided, that the exemption authorized in this subparagraph shall apply only with respect to activities undertaken in good faith within the scope of the employer's official governmental duties.";

(b) in subsection (b), by striking paragraph 6 and inserting in lieu thereof:

"(6) The heads of the departments or agencies making appointments under this subsection (b), shall file with the Office of the Federal Register for publication in the Federal Register a statement including the name of the appointee, the employing department or agency, the title of the appointee's position, and the name of the appointee's private employer. Any such appointee who is not required to file a financial disclosure report pursuant to section 101 of the Ethics in Government Act of 1978, shall file with the appointing department or agency a confidential financial disclosure report pursuant to section 107 of that Act.";

(c) in subsection (b)(7) by striking "Chairman of the United States Civil Service Commission" and inserting in lieu thereof "Director, Office of Personnel Management";

(d) in subsection (e), by inserting "(1)" before the first sentence, striking the last sentence, and adding the following at the end thereof:

"(2) Notwithstanding any other provision of law, the President, upon finding that achievement of the purpose of this section requires such action, may exempt with respect to sepcified activities, members of this executive reserve who become employed by the Federal Government during periods of emergency, or who are engaged in the executive reserve training program, and their private employers, from the antitrust laws or any similar State law; Provided, that the exemption authorized in this paragraph (4) shall apply only with respect to activities undertaken in good faith within the scope of the employees' official governmental duties; and

"(3) The heads of the departments or agencies employing members of the executive reserve under this subsection (e) shall file with the Office of the Federal Register for publication in the Federal Register a statement including the name of the employee's position, and the name of the employee's private employer. Any such employee who is not required to file a financial disclosure report pursuant to section 101 of the Ethics in Government Act of 1978, shall file with the employing department or agency a confidential financial disclosure report pursuant to section 107 of that Act."; and

(e) by adding the following new subsections;

"(h) As used in this section the term 'antitrust laws' has the same meaning that it has under section 708.

"(i) Notwithstanding any other provision of law, any activities conducted under this section are exempt from the operation of all Federal laws, rules and regulations pertaining to advisory committees.

"(j) The President shall promulgate regulations implementing the exemptions contained in subsections (b)(4) and (e) of this section."

SEC. 10. Chapter 11 of title 18, United States Code, is amended—

(a) in section 203, by adding a new subsection (g), to read as follows:

"(g) This section shall not apply if the President certifies in writing that the national interest so requires.";

(b) in section 205, by adding a new subsection (i), to read as follows:

"(i) This section shall not apply if the President certifies in writing that the national interest so requires.";

(c) in section 207, in the form that section is in effect before January 1, 1991, by adding a new subsection (1), to read as follows:

"(1) This section shall not apply if the President certifies in writing that the national interest so requires.";

(d) in subsection (b) of section 208, by striking "or" at the end of paragraph (3), by striking "." at the end of paragraph (4) and inserting in lieu thereof "; or", and by adding a new paragraph (5), to read as follows:

"(5) if the President certifies in writing that the national interest so requires.";

(e) in section 209, by adding a new subsection (g), to read as follows:

"(g) This section shall not apply if the President certifies in writing that the national interest so requires."; and

(f) in section 207, as amended by sections 101 and 102 of the Ethics Reform Act of 1989 (P.L. 101-199), by adding a new paragraph (7) to subsection (j), to read as follows:

"(7) NATIONAL INTEREST WAIVER.—The restrictions contained in this section shall not apply if the President certifies in writing that the national interest so requires.".

SEC. 11. The Department of Energy Organization Act (42 U.S.C. 7101 et seq.) is amended—

(a) by repealing sections 603 through 606, subsections (a) and (b) of section 607, and subsections (a) and (c) of section 608;

(b) in subsection (c) of section 607, by striking ", 603(c), 605(a), or 606(c)";

(c) in subsection (b) of section 608, by striking ", 603, 604, 605, or 606' ' and

(d) in the table of contents, by striking the items relating to sections 603 through 606.

GENERAL PROVISIONS

SEC. 17. Section 720 of the Defense Production Act of 1950 (50 U.S.C. App. 2169) is hereby repealed.

SECTIONAL ANALYSIS

Purpose: To amend the Defense Production Act of 1950 to support mobilization of the defense industrial base of the United States.

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE

This section cites Act as the "Defense Production Act Amendments of 1990".

SECTION 2. EXTENSION OF THE DEFENSE PRODUCTION ACT OF 1950

This section converts the non-permanent provisions of Titles I, III, and VII of the Act to permanent status. Currently, the Act contains an expiration date of August 10, 1990 for these non-permanent provisions of the Act. The proposed amendment avoids costly impacts on national defense and preparedness programs that would result from termination of the Act.

SECTION 3. DECLARATION OF POLICY

The Declaration of Policy was a call to action in the Korean War period. To meet the needs of the present international situation and to present a stronger basis for industrial mobilization preparedness, a clearer, more concise and workable declaration of policy is necessary.

In addition, the concept of the "Graduated Mobilization Response" (GMR) is introduced. GMR provides for a graduated response to early warning indicators to ensure the timely availability of adequate industrial production and resources for national defense requirements.

SECTION 4. RAISE CEILING FOR PURCHASE COMMITMENTS

This section raises from $25,000,000 to $50,000,000 the outstanding amount of purchases or purchase commitments to correct an industrial resource shortfall. If the aggregate outstanding amount of all procurement actions would exceed $50,000,000, then any further purchase commitments may be taken only if specifically authorized by law.

SECTION 5. EXTENSION OF THE PERIOD FOR PURCHASES AND PURCHASE AGREEMENTS

This section extends the completion date for Title III projects entered into under section 303 "ten years from the date of the purchase, commitment to purchase or sale". The current deadline is September 30, 1995, which was last extended by amendments to the Act in 1980. The proposed change permanently adds ten years to the completion date for any project under Title III of the Act.

SECTION 6. REPEAL OF SECTION 309 REPORTING REQUIREMENT

This section repeals the requirement for reporting on the effects of offsets on the defense preparedness, industrial competitiveness, employment, and trade of the United States.

SECTION 7. REPEAL OF SECTION 708A

This section repeals section 708A of the Defense Production Act. In all respects but one, section 708A is obsolete.

When enacted in 1975, section 708A prescribed procedures for developing and carrying out any voluntary agreement or plan of action to implement the Agreement on an International Energy Program dated November 18, 1974. Subsequently, the Energy Policy and Conservation Act was enacted, with section 252 therein (42 U.S.C. 6272) now serving as the exclusive statute governing the United States' participation in the International Energy Program, and rendering section 708A obsolete for purposes of the International Energy Program.

The only remaining effective provision in section 708A is subsection (o), which prohibits the use of voluntary agreements under section 708 to implement any international agreement relating to petroleum products to which the United States is a party. Consequently, subsection 708A(o) causes an antitrust defense to be unavailable for voluntary actions by United States oil companies to fulfill the United States' oil supply obligations under the North Atlantic Treaty and other international agreements, such as the United States-Israel Oil Supply Agreement. Repeal of section 708A would rectify this situation and would not affect the status of 42 U.S.C. 6272 as the exclusive statute governing voluntary agreements and plans of action pursuant to the International Energy Program.

SECTION 8. VOLUNTARY AGREEMENTS

Section 8(a) is a conforming amendment to the repeal of Section 708A.

Section 8(b) defines the term "plan of action". Section 708 presently omits any provision for plans of action, such as were employed during the Korean War and as authorized under section 252 of the Energy Policy and Conservation Act, with regard to the Agreement on an International Energy Program. Thus, at present under section 708, it appears that any actions decided by voluntary agreement participants would have to be reflected in a new "voluntary agreement," as distinguished from an implementing document adopted by the participants in an existing voluntary agreement. A plan of action may propose taking steps, the particulars of which are quite significant in their effects and which cannot be anticipated when the voluntary agreement is approved.

Thus, there is a need to recognize that a plan of action is a separate document which needs to be approved separately, but which is not subject to the elaborate procedures for approval of voluntary agreements, since such procedures could impede the ability of a voluntary agreement group to accomplish the objectives of the agreement expeditiously.

Section 8(c) is a conforming amendment to the repeal of Section 708A.

Section 8(d) permits more than one individual to be delegated the authority to make voluntary agreements under Title I of the Act.

Section 8(e) modifies section 708(d)(1) to provide authority to close to the public meetings of advisory committees established in connection with section 708 voluntary agreements, to permit consideration of classified or other sensitive information, which may be essential during severe national emergencies. Specifically, the amendments authorize the closing of advisory committee meetings to deal with subjects that fall within subsections (b)(1), (b)(3), and (b)(4) of the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA). The (b)(1) exemption relates to material classified on the grounds of national security or foreign policy considerations, and it is potentially of great significance in emergency planning and response. The (b)(3) exemption covers material exempted from disclosure by other statutes, the most important of which are 18 U.S.C. section 1905 and 50 U.S.C. App. section 2155(e), prohibiting, among other things, disclosure by government employees of trade secrets and other confidential information received in the course of employment. The (b)(4) exemption pertains to industry confidential or proprietary information or data. Also, in connection with DPA section 708(d) advisory committees, the amendments would modify subsection (d)(2) of section 708, which requires public disclosure of transcripts of advisory committee meetings and agreements resulting therefrom, unless the transcripts or agreements related to subjects that fall within FOIA exemptions (b)(1) and (b)(3). The amendment would make the public disclosure exemption applicable as well to any "plan" resulting from an advisory committee meeting, and would expand the exemption to cover subjects that fall within FOIA exemption (b)(4) pertaining to industry confidential or proprietary information or data.

Section 8 (g), (i), (j), (k), (l) and (m) inserts the term plan of action wherever the term voluntary agreement is set out in section 708 of the Act.

Section 8(k) eliminates the unique, vague and unreasonably difficult requirement that in order for actions to qualify for the antitrust defense, the person taking them must prove that he has done so "in good faith," and substitutes the test applicable to the antitrust defense in section 252 of the Energy Policy and Conservation Act (EPCA), available to participants in the International Energy Program. In contrast with the DPA's good faith requirement, EPCA section 252 provides that the actions complained of must not have been taken "for purposes of injuring competition," and, except in the case of actions taken to develop a voluntary agreement or plan of action, the person asserting the defense must demonstrate that the actions were "specified in, or within the reasonable contemplation of, an approved plan of action."

Section 8(n) exempts voluntary agreement participants from the provisions of laws, rules and regulations pertaining to advisory committees while they are carrying out the provisions of a voluntary agreement and/or plan of action under this Act.

Section 8(o) adds a new subsection (o), making available to firms fulfilling a Presidential request pursuant to a voluntary agreement or plan of action, a breach of contract defense comparable to that now afforded by EPCA section 252(j) for firms participating in actions to satisfy U.S. obligations under the International Energy Program. It is expected that voluntary agreement and plan of action participants would demand breach of contract protection as a condition of their assisting in carrying out Government policies with respect to the reallocation of resources.

SECTION 9. STRENGTHEN EXECUTIVE RESERVE

This section provides limited protection from the Federal antitrust laws to Special Government Employees Serving Without Compensation (WOC's) and National Defense Executive Reservists (NDER's), to assure that the section 710 authority can be utilized to make the most constructive use of private persons from industry during national emergencies.

In order to provide the necessary manpower to achieve the purposes of the DPA, section 710 of the Act permits the President to temporarily employ as Federal employees persons who possess outstanding experience and abilities, and whose skills are not otherwise obtainable. The close cooperation of industry officials required by these programs may be perceived as exposing them to antitrust risks. In general, antitrust liability attaches only to private conduct that has anticompetitive consequences. Thus, actions taken by a governmental official within the scope of this authority do not ordinarily give rise to antitrust concerns. Actions by NDERs or WOCs that cause competitive harm only could result in ultimate antitrust liability if such individuals were acting outside the scope of their governmental activity. What is important is the fact that the very threat of antitrust challenge may deter persons from industry from fully participating in the NDER, even where their conduct ultimately would be held not to violate the antitrust laws. The antitrust exemption authority essentially confirms legislatively the situation already established by case law. In addition, section 9 would exempt WOCs and NDERs from all statutes, rules and regulations pertaining to advisory committees.

SECTION 10. AMENDMENT TO CHAPTER 11 OF TITLE 18, UNITED STATES CODE

This section amends title 18 of the United States Code to provide exemptions to the principal conflict of interest laws for NDERs and WOCs when the President certifies in writing that the national interest requires a waiver from these laws. Existing waiver provisions in title 18 which might apply to NDERs or WOCs during a crisis are inadequate. Consequently, NDERs and WOCs could find themselves subject to criminal prosecution as a result of their activities on behalf of the government during a period of NDER activation or the NDER member may find that he or she is not employable because of the conflict of interest laws. Such considerations have seriously limited the participation of NDERs in the energy industry.

It should be emphasized that the legislative changes would not themselves waive the conflict of interest laws. Rather, they would empower the President to do so. The President, in exercising this authority, could impose restrictions on any waivers of the conflict of interest laws; for example, he could stipulate that the waiver would not apply to certain types of actions that might be taken by a WOC or NDER, such as negotiation or execution of government contracts with his or her concurrent or former employer. This legislation is proposed with the intention that the President grant waivers only insofar as necessary to achieve important national objectives. The point is that this requires administrative flexibility, which current law does not provide. The conflict of interest law waiver authority would not be limited to activated WOCs and NDERs, because the Administration believes that it is preferable to consider revisions to the criminal code conflict of interest provisions on an across-the-board basis, rather than as special purpose exemptions in the DPA.

SECTION 11. AMENDS THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY ORGANIZATION ACT

This section repeals the financial reporting and conflict of interest provisions in sections 603 through 606, section 607 (a) and (b), and section 608 (a) and (c) of the Department of Energy Organization Act. These provisions, the operation of which was suspended for one year by the Ethics Reform Act of 1989 (P.L. 101-194), are essentially duplicative of the post-employment and participation restrictions in Chapter 11 of title 18, United States Code, and of the financial disclosure requirements in the Ethics in Government Act of 1978, as amended by P.L. 101-194.

General Provisions

SECTION 12. AMENDING DEFINITIONS

Subsections (a) and (b) incorporates the term service in the definition of "materials" and "facilities," and subsection (d) adds a definition of "services."

Subsection (c) amends the term "national defense" to drop "atomic" from energy so that programs for all forms of energy production and construction are covered under the Act.

SECTION 13. REPEAL OF PROVISION PERTAINING TO TITLE IV OF ACT

This section repeals Section 703(b) which refers to Title IV of the Defense Production Act which was terminated in 1953.

SECTION 14. AUTHORIZE DISCLOSURE OF CERTAIN INFORMATION

This section repeals an obsolete paragraph which prohibits disclosure of confidential information obtained by the Office of Price Stabilization under section 705 of the Defense Production Act prior to April 30, 1953.

SECTION 15

Subsection (a) deletes the requirement that interest be paid on Title III disbursements and inventory. Subsection (b) amends section 711(a)(1) by striking "the Bureau of the Budget" and replacing it with "the Office of Management and Budget."

Subsection (c) authorizes appropriations for programs under sections 301, 302 and 303 of the Act.

Subsection (d) exempts two specific projects from the dollar ceiling in section 303(a) of the Act. These projects would exceed the current ceiling and the increase relieves the Congress and the President of a cumbersome administrative burden without diminishing existing safeguards.

SECTION 16. INCREASE PENALTIES

This section amends section 705(d) and 716 of the Act to make fines consistent with the other sections of the Act that provide for fines. Fines should reflect current financial realities and be sufficiently large to provide deterrence.

SECTION 17. REPEAL OF TERMINATED NATIONAL COMMISSION ON SUPPLIES AND SHORTAGES

This section repeals section 720 of the Act which set up the National Commission on Supplies and Shortages. The Commission expired on March 31, 1977. Its functions are provided by the Departments of Commerce and Interior and the Federal Emergency Management Agency.●

By Mr. HATFIELD:

S. 2169. A bill to amend title 35, United States Code, to impose a 5-year moratorium on the granting of patents on genetically altered or modifed animals in order to establish a Federal regulatory and review process to deal with the economic, environmental, and ethical issues raised by the patenting of such animals; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

FIVE-YEAR MORATORIUM ON PATENTING ANIMALS

● Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, shortly after the United States dropped the first atomic bombs on Hiroshima and Nagasaki, American poet E.B. White observed:

The quest for a substitute for God ended suddenly. The substitute turned up: and who do you suppose it was? It was man himself, stealing God's stuff.

Mr. President, those words came to my mind on Wednesday as my colleagues and I listened to Czechoslovakian President Vaclav Havel. "We still don't know how to put morality ahead of politics, science, and economy," he said. "We are still incapable of understanding that the only genuine backbone of all our actions, if they are to be moral, is responsibility—responsibility to something higher than my family, my country, my company, my success." More than four decades have passed since the conclusion of World War II and yet we continue in our irresponsible and indeed immoral quest to "steal God's stuff."

I rise on this floor today to introduce legislation which would suspend animal patenting for 5 years. It may seem strange to my colleagues that I have chosen to speak of nuclear weapons and to quote President Havel in this context, and yet my concerns over animal patenting are inextricably tied to this notion of "stealing God's stuff." Put simply, Mr. President, the patenting of animals blurs the distinction between man's work and God's work in a way I believe is tremendously dangerous.

In April 1987, the U.S. Office of Patents and Trademarks [PTO] issued a notice that it would begin considering patent applications for genetically engineered vertebrate and invertebrate animals. Because I was concerned by the profound economic, environmental, and ethical questions issues raised by the PTO's unilateral decision to allow the animal kingdom to be patented, I offered an amendment to the fiscal year 1987 supplemental appropriations bill that prohibited the use of Patent Office funds for patenting genetically engineered animals. Apparently my colleagues shared my concerns; the amendment was passed in the Senate and the PTO agreed not to patent any animals through fiscal year 1987.

In February 1988, I again introduced legislation—this time to establish a 2-year moratorium on animal patenting. My intent was to allow time to resolve the concerns surrounding this complex issue. Unfortunately, the Patent Office went ahead and issued a patent on genetically engineered mammals whose cells had been altered so as to contain a cancer-causing genetic sequence.

Today Mr. President, over 75 animal patents are pending. In the almost 3 years since the PTO's decision, however, virtually no progress has been made in regulating this controversial intellectual property area.

I rise today to introduce legislation which would once again place a moratorium on patenting of genetically engineered animals. This 5-year moratorium is designed to provide Congress with sufficient time in which to study and appropriately respond to the complex implications of animal patenting.

It is becoming increasingly clear that the PTO has no way of dealing with the various economic, social, governmental, environmental, and ethical issues which arise from its decision to extend patents to animal life. As I have stated before, I believe that it is the responsibility of Congress to carefully consider the broad ramifications of the technologies it encourages through patenting. This careful examination has not taken place in the case of the creation of transgenic animals. My legislation will provide time to conduct a congressional review of this technology and take appropriate legislative steps to maximize its benefits while minimizing its negative impacts.

This legislation is not an attempt to halt the promising field of genetic engineering. I want to be very clear on this point. The various techniques of biotechnology, when used responsibly, have enormous potential in a number of areas including pharmaceutical and agricultural products. However, genetic engineering now allows us to take human genetic traits and insert them into the permanent genetic code of animals. We are also gaining the increased ability to mix and match the genetic traits of animals, insects, and plants, creating new and different species. To suddenly and unconditionally grant patents for the development of any and all of these genetic creations is irresponsible and imprudent.

Specific concerns about animal patenting center on its economic, environmental, ethical, and governmental impacts. Let me address each one individually.

In economic terms, this controversial patent policy transforms the genetic makeup of the biotic community from a common heritage of us all—to the private preserve of the major corporations. Major biotechnology and chemical corporations will increasingly compete for control and ownership of the gene pool of animal species, patenting those creatures that they can successfully genetically engineer.

Fearing the dramatic economic effects of this policy on agriculture, farm groups across the country have opposed animal patenting. By genetically altering a major livestock species—and then patenting that creation—a corporation could become the sole controller of that species. Farmers would be forced to pay the corporation patent fees every time they bred the species, or sold part of their herd. Keep in mind that traditionally bred animals have never been granted patents. Thus, the PTO policy has given biotechnology breeders a significant market advantage over traditional breeders. Given the major contribution that traditional breeders have made to American agriculture—and the fact that biotechnology has yet to create a successful agricultural product—this patent advantage for biotechnology seems unwise economic policy. Researchers and small scientific institutions could also be devastated by animal patenting as they would be forced to pay patent fees on genetically engineered laboratory animals. No study has yet been conducted which focuses on the potential economic impacts of animal patenting on farmers, researchers, or other economic groups. Such a comprehensive study is long overdue.

Environmental concerns stem from the fact that corporations in search of patenting profits now have a significant incentive to manipulate animals and release genetically engineered animals into the environment. The release of large numbers of these new genetically engineered animals could have significant impact on the environment. Yet no study of these impacts has taken place either. Nor is there any regulation to review the deliberate re-release of such animals into the environment.

The ethical implications of patenting animals include the potential increase in animal suffering created by large numbers of transgenic animals being created and passing along novel genetic traits to future generations. These animals and their offspring will be the victims of increasing genetic tinkering, trials and errors. Additionally, a variety of ethicists and religious denominations have expressed deep concerns about the dissemination of human characteristics throughout the animal kingdom. They have also questioned the wisdom of characterizing the living world as patentable "manufactures." Most recently in July 1989, the World Council of Churches Central Committee agreed that:

> Animal life forms should not be patented and calls for further study of the profound moral and social implications of patenting life forms.

And in June 1989, the European Patent Commission [EPC] rejected a patent application by Harvard which was virtually identical to the patent granted in the United States. The EPC cited both legal and ethical grounds for its rejection of the patent application.

Finally, there is growing concern about the possibility of patenting human forms, especially pre-embryos, since these forms are without constitutional protection. In sum, the patenting of animals creates the urgent necessity for the establishment of ethical limits to man's right to manipulate and refashion the biotic community to his commercial needs.

Traditionally the patent and copyright laws have statutory protections assuring that rights and privileges owned by the public are not given over to private ownership. Under this rule of law, living things were held not to be patentable as being in the public ownership. Congress allowed the patenting of certain plants twice, once in 1930, and again in 1970. However, in 1980, the Supreme Court, in a 5-to-4 decision, Chakrabarty versus Diamond, held that microorganisms were patentable if they had been genetically altered. The minority in that decision maintained that the patenting of microorganisms should not be allowed without a clear signal from Congress that this was the statutory intent. Unfortunately, the Patent Office has unilaterally extended the holding in Chakrabarty to allow, for the first time, the patenting of the entire animal kingdom, with the possible exception of man himself. This represents a vast, unique and deeply troubling usurpation of congressional authority. Moreover it denies the public the traditional legislative process for the protection of their rights.

Mr. President, my legislation to rescind this Patent Office decision simply maintains the status quo, by returning major patenting policy decisions to the correct and traditional forum, Congress. In the future, Congress can decide, on a case-by-case basis, if it is in the public interest to allow genetically engineered animals to be patented.

I ask that a list of organizations supporting this legislation be inserted in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD following my remarks.

There being no objection, the list was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

By Mr. INOUYE:

S. 2170. A bill to prescribe the conditions under which contractors receiving operating-differential subsidy or their affiliates may engage in coastwise or intercoastal trade; to the Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation.

SUBSIDIZED VESSELS IN COASTAL TRADE

● Mr. INOUYE. Mr. President, in its opinion in Matson Navigation Co. versus Connor,[1] the Court, in my view, very succinctly and accurately explained the purposes of the Merchant Marine Act of 1936, and the rationale underlying certain of its provisions which are affected by the legislation I am introducing today. The Court said:

> The purposes surrounding the enactment of the Merchant Marine Act of 1936 as explained in its legislative history and Section 101 of the act were to promote and develop a strong American merchant marine to serve American shippers in time of peace. Accordingly, the 1936 Act was primarily designed to develop the carriage of a substantial portion of the nation's foreign commerce by United States flag vessels in time of war and peace through payment of construction subsidy and operating subsidy for use in competition with lower cost foreign flag vessels. Another important purpose of the Act was to promote the maintenance of an unsubsidized, privately owned merchant fleet sufficient to carry all of the nation's "domestic water-borne commerce" (Section 101 of the Act).
> Sections 506 and 605(a) of the Act contemplate exceptions to the general scheme of allowing subsidy for foreign operations only. These exceptions exist as to vessels on four specified kinds of mixed voyages, including vessels on "a voyage in foreign trade on which the vessel may stop at certain specified domestic off-shore points, providing subsidy is prorated according to domestic operation. Yet Section 805(a) directs the Secretary even in those cases not to permit the operation of subsidized vesels in domestic waters if he "finds it will result in unfair competition" to exclusively domestic operators, or that it would be prejudicial to the objects and policies of the Act.

The statutory scheme of the 1936 act is clearly intended to provide substantial protection for domestic operations as against subsidized operators in the interest of promoting and safeguarding our cabotage laws and the purposes they serve; and for this reason permission to enter the domestic trades by subsidized operators and their affiliates will only be granted as a final resort when adequate service by unsubsidized operators is unavailable. (Matson versus Connor.)

Mr. President, we continue to have a U.S. merchant marine capable of carrying all of our domestic waterborne commerce. Regrettably, however, for sometime we have not had a merchant marine capable of carrying anywhere near a substantial portion of our foreign waterborne commerce. In fact, our commercial fleet carries less and less each year. So, one part of our maritime policy is a success, and the other is a failure so far.

[1] Matson Navigation Company vs. Connor, 258 F. Supp. 144 (N.D. Cal. 1966, aff'd, 394 F.2d. 514 (9th Cr. 1968), cert. denied, 393 U.S. 998 (1968).

The past three administrations have tried without success to revitalize the liner subsidy program so that our subsidized carriers can be competitive with their foreign-flag counter parts in our international trades, and carry a substantial portion of the cargo that moves in them. It is difficult to pinpoint the reasons for their inability to reform the subsidy program, however.

Generally, industry proposals have been criticized by the Maritime Administration as failing to deal with the inefficiences in the present subsidy system, and as being too costly, especially in times of severe fiscal restraint. The industry, on the other hand, cannot agree with proposals put forth by the Maritime Administration.

Throughout this impasse, and as the fortunes of our subsidized international fleet have continued to decline, a disturbing trend has developed within the Maritime Administration. In an attempt to compensate for its inability to effect subsidy reform, previous administrations and MarAd have sought to ease restrictions on subsidized operators. These restrictions were intended to promote, implement, and safeguard the objects and policy of the 1936 act. What in effect is happening is that the distinctions Congress intended to exist between subsidized and unsubsidized operators, and between Jones Act and noneligible Jones Act operators are disappearing—with one vital exception. The subsidized operators, while free to compete with unsubsidized operators, still receive ODS. This makes for an uneven playing field, and undermines the objects and policy of the 1936 act.

Mr. President, let me cite a few examples.

In 1981 and again in 1983 at the urging of the executive branch, Congress departed from its policy of promoting vessel construction in U.S. shipyards by amending the law to provide a window of opportunity for ODS operators to build vessels in foreign shipyards.

Whenever requested, and it has been on several occasions, MarAd has approved the use of foreign-flag line haul and foreign-flag feeder vessels by subsidized operators, even though the 1936 act generally prohibits their use in competition with U.S.-flag vessels, except in special circumstances and for good cause shown.

The 1936 act requires that owners of subsidized vessels agree to operate only in foreign trades unless they come within one of two explicit exceptions. Despite this requirement when the owners of a 225,000 dwt supertanker—Stuyvesant—wanted to operate in the domestic oil trade and offered to repay the constructional differential subsidy as a condition precedent, MarAd agreed.

Similarly, section 805 of the 1936 act forbids the payment of subsidy to an operator who owns or operates vessels in the domestic trades, if the Secretary finds that the domestic operations will result in unfair competition to an exclusively domestic operator or will be rejudicial to the objects and policy of the act. In one case, the Secretary granted an exemption from this prohibition and allowed the unsubsidized affiliate of a subsidized operator to enter the Mainland-Puerto Rico trade, and in doing so relied on reasons unrelated to the objectives set out in the statute.

Most recently, over the vigorous opposition of all unsubsidized operators serving Hawaii, an administrative law judge has recommended that a subsidized operator be permitted to enter the Mainland-Hawaii trade, even though current service is qualitatively and quantitatively adequate.

Mr. President, in view of the steadily declining fortunes of our subsidized liner fleet and the willingness, indeed some might say the eagerness, of the Maritime Administration to ease restrictions for ODS operators, it should come as no surprise that the subsidized operators are actively seeking legislation which would statutorily grant two subsidized carriers authority to call weekly in Hawaii westbound from the U.S. Pacific coast. This would be regardless of whether the existing unsubsidized service was adequate; or whether subsidized service would result in unfair competition vis-a-vis the unsubsidized operator, or be contrary to the policy and objects of the Merchant Marine Act of 1936.

Furthermore, this proposal would change the ODS reduction formula presently contained in section 605 in a manner that would be much more favorable to a subsidized operator. Today section 605 requires that if a subsidized vessel makes a domestic call as part of a foreign voyage, the subsidy must be reduced on the basis of a ratio of the gross revenue derived from the domestic cargo relative to the gross revenue derived from the entire voyage. For a vessel calling westbound in Hawaii and continuing on to the Far East, this may require a subsidy reduction of perhaps 25 to 40 percent. The industry proposal uses a ratio based on the amount of time a vessel spends sailing in the domestic trade versus the amount of time of the complete round foreign/domestic voyage. If a vessel spends 5 days in the Pacific coast/Hawaii trade out of a 30-day round trip, the resulting 1 to 6 ratio yields an ODS reduction of 16.66 percent, which is considerably less than a ratio based on gross revenue.

These provisions substantially weaken the existing statutory safeguards intended to protect exclusively domestic carriers and shippers from service by subsidized operators and their affiliates, which would result in unfair competition or which would be prejudicial to the objects and policy of the Merchant Marine Act of 1936.

Under the guise of strengthening the U.S. merchant marine for national security and to compete in our international trades, the subsidized liner operators seek Government assistance—ODS reform—to increase their ability to compete with foreign flag operators, even if it is necessary to jeopardize the efficient service at reasonable rates in our domestic trades, which is now provided by Matson and other unsubsidized operators. In other words, their proposal views the domestic Hawaii market as a target of opportunity for ODS operators without regard to the shipping service and price needs of consumers in that market, or the objects and policy of the 1936 act. A cynic might observe that the U.S.-subsidized liners are to some extent responsible for making U.S. ships noncompetitive in our foreign liner trades, and now they want to disrupt our domestic trades. But even here they are unsure of their competitive ability vis-a-vis exclusively domestic carriers, so they want the existing statutory safeguards lowered to give them an edge.

Not only is theirs a bad proposal, the subsidized operators agreed upon it among themselves without consulting the unsubsidized domestic operators, such as Matson and Totem, who could be victimized by it.

Mr. President, for all the reasons I have discussed, the stability, indeed the viability of our domestic liner trades, is being threatened, and the purpose for which Federal operating subsidy is paid to our international carriers is being undermined.

For these reasons the legislation I am introducing today would amend section 805 of the 1936 act, so that subsidized liner operators could only enter the domestic trades if the Secretary of Transportation finds that existing service to that domestic point is inadequate. If he does so, and grants permission, he must also condition it upon whatever restrictions he finds necessary to guard against:

(1) Unfair competition;

(2) Prejudice to the objects and policy of the act; and

(3) Applicant's service in the coastwise or intercoastal trade being supported, directly or indirectly, by any money paid by the United States to a contractor under title VI of the 1936 act to subsidize operations by that contractor in the U.S. foreign commerce.

Domestic service by an unsubsidized liner affiliate of a subsidized operator would be permitted if the Secretary finds that it would not result in:

(1) Unfair competition;

(2) Prejudice to the objects and policy of the act; and

(3) Applicant's service in the coastwise or intercoastal trade being supported, directly or indirectly, by any money paid by the United States to a contractor under title VI of the 1936 act to subsidize operations by that contractor in the U.S. foreign commerce; and

(4) Service by any vessels built with CDS which are older than 25 years.

I believe a brief explanation is in order with respect to the prohibition against an unsubsidized affiliate operating CDS-built vessels over 25 years of age exclusively in the domestic trade. According to my information, in the next few years, several CDS-built ships will reach the end of their 25-year statutory lives and, accordingly, become eligible to operate exclusively in the Jones Act trades. In my view, our maritime policy and the shipping public will be ill-served if the domestic trades become a dumping ground for aging CDS vessels that are no longer capable of operating effectively in the foreign commerce for which they were constructed. Further, the prospect of these vessels becoming available for domestic trade in the relatively near term will undoubtedly have a very negative impact on the willingness of unsubsidized Jones Act companies to invest in modern tonnage. Commitments to build coastwise qualified vessels are very difficult business decisions in view of the sizeable amounts of capital involved and, therefore, should be encouraged by Government policy, rather than confounded. Such a consequence would also adversely affect our shipbuilding industry, because what commercial building that is being done is being done for exclusively domestic operators.

My proposal would only prohibit dedicated domestic operation of CDS vessels over 25 years old by an affiliate of a subsidized company. Mixed foreign/domestic operation by either a subsidized or unsubsidized company would not be affected. Indeed, if an operator feels that the older CDS ship is still competitive enough to operate profitably in bona fide foreign voyages while making calls in domestic ports, he remains free to do so.

Likewise, if an unsubsidized operator that is not affiliated with an operating differential subsidy contractor wishes to operate an over-25-year-old CDS vessel in the domestic trade, there is no prohibition.

It seems to me, however, that the floodgates should not be opened to permit the wholesale introduction and operation of aging CDS ships in domestic commerce. The domestic offshore communities are vitally dependent on an efficient ocean transportation system. Government policy should encourage the capital investments necessary to maintain and upgrade ocean shipping service to these dependent areas.

In my view, what the Supreme Court said in discussing the legislative history of the CDS program is instructive on this point:

> It was recognized from the outset that substantial limits would have to be placed upon the entry of subsidized vessels into the domestic trade. Any other result would have been disastrous for the unsubsidized Jones Act fleet for which that trade was (and is) reserved. Burdened by higher construction costs, greater outstanding debt, and higher operating expenses, that fleet would simply have been unable to compete with new vessels enjoying the benefits of the 1936 Act.—Seatrain Shipbuilding Corp. v. Shell Oil Co., 444 U.S. 572, 586–7 (1980).

More recently, it is interesting to note what the Assistant Secretary of the Navy for Shipbuilding wrote to the Transportation Department on April 27, 1987, officially opposing a proposed rule allowing for CDS payback by oil tankers to permit them to enter the domestic trades. As he said in his letter:

> Allowing tankers built with construction-differential subsidy to repay that subsidy to the government and enter the domestic tanker trade has had a stifling effect on the domestic tanker trade since 1978.
>
> CDS repayment would continue disrupting the domestic tanker market, as it has for nine years.

I believe his reasons are instructive as well.

Under the bill I am introducing, within 180 days after enactment the Secretary shall initiate a hearing to determine if any mixed or affiliated service then in existence is in accordance with the new standards. If he finds such service is not in compliance, he shall issue an order prescribing conditions necessary to bring it into compliance.

Finally, the provision in current law making it a misdemeanor to divert subsidy funds into coastwise operations is strengthened by expressly providing for revocation of the provision to engage in the domestic trades.

Mr. President, I would hope that the distinguished chairman of the Merchant Marine Subcommittee would hold hearings on this measure and consider it as expeditiously as his schedule permits. The reason why I feel this matter deserves our early attention is that in all probability the Maritime Administration will continue on the course I have described, and this of course puts our domestic liner trades at further risk. The need for this legislation is independent of and separate from ODS reform, and, in my view, the two should not be linked. Indeed, the prospects for ODS reform in this session of Congress are, I believe, getting dimmer as time goes on without a consensus. If the past is any indication, that is another reason for concern that MarAd will be willing to free ODS operators from restrictions in lieu of giving them more subsidy.

Mr. President, I have prepared a paper which discusses section 805 and its origins in the 1936 act and ask unanimous consent that it appear in the RECORD immediately following my remarks.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

LIMITATIONS OF SECTION 805(a) ON SUBSIDIZED VESSELS IN DOMESTIC TRADE

The general scheme of the Merchant Marine Act of 1936 is to have a commercial fleet to operate in our international trades and carry a substantial portion of the cargo that moves in them. To achieve this objective, the 1936 Act provided for the payment of construction and operating subsidy as necessary to make U.S.-flag operators competitive with their foreign-flag counterparts. The Act also intended that we have a commercial fleet to operate in our domestic trades which would carry all of the cargo that moves. Since our cabotage laws prohibited foreign-flag or foreign-built U.S.-flag vessels from competing in these trades, subsidy for domestic trades was, of course, unnecessary.

The 1936 Act recognized that in some cases it might be in the national interest to deviate from the general scheme and permit subsidized operators to divert their resources from the task for which they were subsidized, and compete with the unsubsidized, U.S.-built vessels operating in our domestic trades. The framers of the Act were well aware that when subsidized operators did so, there was a great possibility that by diverting capacity from our international trades the U.S.-flag share of cargo would be reduced. In that case, such a diversion could be contrary to the announced policy of the 1936 Act and the reason for paying subsidy—to carry a substantial portion of our foreign waterborne commerce. From the earlier experience with mail subsidies, Congress was also aware that there was a real possibility that subsidy funds could give the recipient an unfair competitive advantage over an unsubsidized domestic operator using vessels with substantially higher construction costs.

Accordingly, Sections 506 and 605(a) of the Act set out very limited exceptions to the general rule of allowing subsidy for foreign voyages only; and Section 805(a) further required that domestic calls, otherwise permissible under Sections 506 and 605(a), must not result in unfair competition for exclusively domestic operators, or prejudice the objects and policy of the Act, or divert subsidy funds to the domestic operation.

Where ocean common carriers are concerned, these statutory safeguards are in danger of being eroded by Administration policies and interpretations, so that they will no longer protect unsubsidized operators as Congress intended. This breakdown threatens the ability of our domestic liner fleet to meet the qualitative and quantitative demand of domestic shippers and eventually the needs of the public. Should this occur, we will, of course, have failed to maintain a merchant fleet capable of carrying all of our domestic waterborne commerce, and that is one of the paramount objectives of the 1963 Act.

ORIGINS OF SECTION 805(a) MERCHANT MARINE ACT, 1936

Section 605 of the Merchant Marine Act, 1936 prohibits payment of ODS to any vessel on a voyage in which it engages in domestic trade. Exceptions are made for limited carriage of domestic cargo, provided that a pro rata reduction is made in ODS payments.

Recognizing the inherent advantages of a subsidized vessel (even with a pro rata subsidy reduction), a subsidized operator or his affiliate still may not carry domestic cargo under Section 605 unless he can first demonstrate under Section 805(a) that the proposed domestic service (1) would not result in unfair competition to persons operating exclusively in the coastwise or intercoastal service, and (2) would not be prejudicial to the objects and policy of the Merchant Marine Act, 1936. If the subsidized vessel is permitted to enter the domestic trade, Section 805(a) also makes it unlawful for any subsidy to be diverted into the coastwise or intercoastal operations.

Congress' commitment to preventing unfair competition by subsidy recipients in the domestic offshore trades has been unequivocal. In discussing the legislative history of the Merchant Marine Act, 1936, the United States Supreme Court observed that:

"It was recognized from the outset that substantial limits would have to be placed upon the entry of subsidized vessels into the domestic trade. Any other result would have been disasterous for the unsubsidized Jones Act fleet for which that trade was (and is) reserved. Burdened by higher construction costs, greater outstanding debt, and higher operating expenses, that fleet would simply have been unable to compete with new vessels enjoying the benefits of the 1936 Act". Seatrain Shipbuilding Corp. v. Shell Oil Co., 444 U.S. 572, 586–7 (1980).

When the legislation which was eventually enacted as the 1936 Act was being considered by Congress, total prohibition of operation of subsidized vessels in domestic commerce was advocated both by legislators and shipping industry witnesses. Nevertheless, section 522(d) of H.R. 8555 prohibited payment of ODS while the vessel was engaged in exclusively domestic service, but provided for proportionate reduction of ODS when the vessel operated in mixed domestic/foreign voyages.

In the Committee Report accompanying H.R. 8555, the Minority Views of Congressmen Wearin and Brooks criticized the bill as "permit(ting) continuation of the unsound policy of subsidies to intercoastal operators to go through the subterfuge of merely stopping in a foreign port en route, such as Havana, Cuba; Cristobal or Balboa, Canal Zone; for the incidental transaction of business thus placing subsidized American lines in unfair competition with unsubsidized American lines. . . ." House Report No. 1277, Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries to accompany H.R. 8555 (June 20, 1935), p. 35.

Section 1010(a) of H.R. 7521, another ODS bill considered by Congress, also permitted payment of ODS on mixed voyages involving intermediate stops at offshore territories and possessions. During the 1935 House hearings, Ernest M. Bull, President of the A.H. Bull Steamship Company, a domestic operator in the Puerto Rico trade, testified in favor of revising the ODS bill to require subsidized vessels to operate only in the foreign trade, and to eliminate voyages involving intermediate stops at offshore territories and possessions from the bill's definition of "foreign trade" voyages. Hearings before the House Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries on H.R. 7521 (March–May, 1935) p. 678. Mr. Bull was quite straightforward as to the reason for his opposition to subsidized operators in the Puerto Rico trade, saying "[i]n the case of a rate war, how could we compete with them?" ibid.

When the 1936 Act became law, however, Congress opted for restrictions on domestic operation of subsidized vessels, rather than outright prohibition. The conditions which prompted Congress to elect that alternative in 1936, however, have changed considerably over the last 54 years.

In 1936, and, in fact, until containerization changed the entire cargo-handling system by revolutionizing the physical handling of cargo, it was an economic necessity for ocean-going cargo vessels to make multiple port calls along a continental coast to load and discharge numerous small units of cargo. After a transoceanic voyage, the breakbulk vessel would repeat the same process along the coast of a different continent.

Calls on domestic offshore ports for bunkers in the course of foreign voyages were also necessary, depending on the size and type of propulsion of the vessel involved. Permitting subsidized vessels to call at domestic offshore ports to load or discharge cargo in the course of foreign voyages recognized what may have been, for all by the largest or most modern vessels, an operational necessity.

Containerization and modern vessel engineering have obviated the operational concerns related to smaller breakbulk ships. Moreover, recent testimony before Congress and regulatory agencies has established that the domestic offshore trades have adequate liner common carrier cargo vessel capacity to handle present and future cargo requirements. Both the Puerto Rico and Alaska trades are said to suffer from overtonnaging with its inevitable rate instability. In the Hawaii trade, testimony introduced before the Maritime Administration in the application of American President Lines, Ltd., (APL) to call on Hawaii with subsidized vessels in the course of foreign trade voyages, documents that existing unsubsidized carriers offer sufficient capacity to meet Hawaii's present and future needs. In 1990, unlike 1936, there is no need to rely upon cargo operations by subsidized vessels in domestic commerce.

UNFAIR COMPETITION OF SUBSIDIZED VESSELS IN DOMESTIC TRADES

The difficulty of ensuring fairness is inherent in a policy that allows subsidized ships to compete with unsubsidized ships. Three sections of the 1936 Act attempt to deal with this problem.

Section 506 generally requires vessels built with construction subsidy to be operated exclusively in the foreign commerce, with certain exceptions, such as allowing limited domestic calls while the vessel is on a voyage in foreign trade. Section 605 of the Merchant Marine Act, 1936 generally prohibits payment of ODS for the operation of any vessel on a voyage on which it engages in domestic trades. Limited exceptions are made, including voyages in foreign trade on which the vessel may stop at the State of Hawaii. If the subsidized vessel engages in these domestic trades, the subsidy is reduced by an amount which bears the same ratio to the total subsidy otherwise payable as the gross revenue from the domestic cargo bears to the gross revenue derived from the entire voyage. Even after this pro rata subsidy reduction, Section 805(a) prohibits the subsidized vessel from entering the domestic trades if the Secretary of Transportation finds that the proposed domestic operation would result in unfair competition or would be prejudicial to the objects and policy of the Merchant Marine Act, 1936. Further, subsidy cannot be diverted to support domestic operations.

First, it has always been questionable whether the domestic trade reduction formula is an effective means of preventing subsidy paid for international operations from being used to support domestic service. This concern is even more true today because of the decline of the American dollar versus currencies of other major maritime nations and revisions in the Maritime Administration's method of ODS payment. More specifically, there is evidence that the amount of ODS paid exceeds the amount needed to equalize costs differentials between American and foreign vessels. This "excess subsidy" can be used, even after the subsidy reduction of Section 605, to finance competition with unsubsidized exclusively domestic operators.

Moreover, with respect to the Hawaii trade, U.S. flag operators in the foreign trades only seek to carry cargo from the U.S. Pacific Coast to Hawaii westbound, continue the voyage on to Asia, pick up high priced Asian imports, and return directly to the U.S. Pacific Coast. The westbound direction for these carriers is essentially a backhaul move where they carry low priced U.S. exports to the Far East. They generate their major revenue on the eastbound carriage of Asian imports into the United States. This contrasts to exclusively domestic operators in the Hawaii trade which must make their primary revenue on the westbound leg to Hawaii. This fundamental economic reversal gives the subsidized U.S. flag operators in foreign commerce a significant pricing advantage over exclusively domestic operators.

Consider also that the U.S. flag vessel that stops in Hawaii en route to the Far East will allocate a limited amount of space for Hawaii cargo. This carrier will inevitably set its most competitive rates (relative to the exclusively domestic operator's) on the higher rated cargo. This leaves the dedicated domestic operator to carry animal feed, fertilizer, blasting grit, and other lower rated cargoes. The domestic operator's costs have not decreased because he must still carry the container, but his revenue has decreased because the containers on the vessel are full of lower valued commodities. Likewise, the vessel in foreign trade can choose to ignore cargo which is more expensive to handle or to avoid geographic areas, such as the Neighbor Islands of Hawaii.

The concern here is that these advantages of the subsidized carrier will adversely affect the domestic company's ability to reinvest in new vessels, containers, and other equipment that is essential to maintaining reliable service in this very capital intensive industry. The exclusively domestic operator's rate of return is regulated by the Federal Maritime Commission. Moreover, the domestic carriers profits are reinvested into vessels and equipment that will be used in the domestic trades. This is not necessarily true for the carriers that serve the foreign trades.

MARITIME POLICY CONSIDERATIONS OF ALLOWING SUBSIDIZED VESSELS INTO DOMESTIC TRADES

Section 805(a) also requires the subsidized applicant to demonstrate that the proposed domestic operation will not be "prejudicial to the objects and policy of this Act". The purposes and policies of the 1936 Act, as set forth in Section 101, are to promote the development of a Merchant Marine sufficient to carry all our domestic and a "substantial" portion of our foreign commerce. Adequacy of service in both the domestic and foreign trades, therefore, is of paramount importance in deciding whether or not domestic service by subsidized operators is consistent with the Act's objectives and should be permitted.

Recent testimony before Congress and the regulatory agencies clearly establishes that the domestic offshore trades have sufficient liner common carrier cargo vessel capacity to handle the cargo requirements of the domestic offshore communities. In the Hawaii trade, testimony introduced before the Maritime Administration in the application of American President Lines to call in Hawaii westbound substantiates that existing domestic carriers offer sufficient capacity to meet Hawaii's present and future shipping needs. There is, moreover, a serious concern that APL's entry would overtonnage the Hawaii trade.

Overcapacity may precipitate a short-term benefit of lower rates for some shippers but this would undoubtedly be overshadowed by widespread rate instability. This would soon jeopardize the ability of unsubsidized companies to continue making the sizeable capital investments that are necessary to maintaining a reliable, ocean transportation system over the long term. The domestic offshore communities must be assured of a healthy U.S-flag domestic commerce fleet which is dedicated to serving them, regardless of the changing economics of international shipping.

Finally, there are serious gaps in logic of a maritime policy which has as its object the development of a merchant marine sufficient to carry a "substantial" portion of U.S. foreign commerce, and yet permits subsidized vessels to solicit domestic cargo when the U.S.-flag share of the U.S./foreign trades stands at 17%. If the dual purpose of the Merchant Marine Act of 1936 is to develop and protect the foreign and domestic waterborne commerce, neither object is served by adding capacity to an adequately served domestic trade at the expense of much needed capacity in the foreign trade.

These substantial issues of fundamental fairness and maritime policy objectives have essentially been ignored in the most recent administrative decisions involving application of Section 805(a). According to the Secretary of Transportation in a December 1984 decision in Docket No. S-724, Aeron Marine Shipping Company, et al, in order to defeat a Section 805(a) application, unsubsidized carriers must prove that subsidized competition will be of such a nature that existing domestic carriers will be driven out of the trade, which will cause both insufficient capacity in the trade and long-term detriment to the trade. That is an impossible burden of proof because it involves long range forecasting of the actions of other parties.

ODS REFORM

The United Shipowners of America (USA) is an association composed of U.S.-flag liner operators that presently receive or desire to receive operating differential subsidy. Over the last several months, USA members have discussed among themselves a legislative proposal to reform the system of ODS payment. Rather than confine themselves to this subject, they have elected to include in their proposal several provisions which have profound ramifications for the unsubsidized U.S.-flag liner operators that exclusively serve the domestic offshore trades. USA has made these decisions without consulting either the affected Congressional delegations or the exclusively domestic offshore carriers that will be impacted by some USA companies' private objectives.

For example, the USA bill would statutorily grant subsidized American President Lines authority to call weekly in Hawaii westbound from the U.S. Pacific Coast. This would be regardless of whether the Maritime Administration finds that APL's current pending application to provide such service would result in unfair competition or be contrary to the policy and objects of the Merchant Marine Act, 1936.

Pursuant to USA's proposal, Sea-Land would become an ODS contractor. Yet their extensive domestic offshore operations would be statutorily exempt from any review under Section 805(a) for unfairness or implications contrary to the objects and policy of the Act.

Furthermore, the USA bill proposes changing the ODS reduction formula presently contained in Section 605 in a manner that would be considerably more favorable to the subsidized company. More specifically, today Section 605 requires that if a subsidized vessel makes a domestic call as part of a foreign voyage, the subsidy must be reduced on the basis of a ratio of the gross revenue derived from the domestic cargo relative to the gross revenue derived from the entire voyage. For a vessel calling westbond in Hawaii and continuing on to the Far East, this may require a subsidy reduction of perhaps 25% to 40%. The USA bill uses a ratio based on the amount of time a vessel spends sailing in the domestic trade versus the amount of the complete round foreign/domestic voyage. If a vessel spends five days in the Pacific Cost/Hawaii trade out of a 30 day round-trip, the resulting one:six ratio yields an ODS reduction of 16.66%, which is considerably less than a ratio based on gross revenue.

A primary objective of ODS reform legislation would be to remove many of the government-imposed restrictions on ODS contractors that were established in 1936 as a condition of receiving subsidy. In the strictly regulated environment of 1936, Congress decided to permit subsidized operators to carry cargo in the domestic trades under the close scrutiny of the same regulatory body that controlled even the foreign trade operations of these subsidized vessels.

Today's consensus is that this system has proven too cumbersome. Thus, one of the objectives of ODS reform is to move away from this over regulated system in order to give U.S.-flag subsidized carriers "parity" with their more flexible foreign flag competitors. Yet, while the subsidy recipients of America want "parity" for themselves against foreigners, the USA bill would statutorily override even the limited provisions of Section 805(a) that are designed to protect unsubsidized U.S.-flag companies from unfair subsidized competition and to insure that U.S. maritime policy is not working at cross purposes.

Moreover, ODS reform is designed to give U.S. flag subsidized companies greater operational flexibility and other advantages that will make them more formidable competitors in the foreign trades. These advantages should not be coupled with the already considerable advantages which subsidized companies have over unsubsidized companies and used to further subsidize vessel inroads into the domestic trades.

The domestic trades are already fully served by unsubsidized carriers that have invested substantially in the development of a quality ocean transportation system to the domestic offshore communities. As long as these domestic carriers continue to demonstrate this commitment, subsidized vessels should concentrate on competing in the foreign trades for which they have been paid over $8 billion of ODS over the past 50 years.●

By Mr. NUNN (and Mr. WARNER) (by request):

S. 2171. A bill to authorize appropriations for fiscal year 1991 for military functions of the Department of Defense and to prescribe military personnel levels for fiscal year 1991, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Armed Services.

DEPARTMENT OF DEFENSE AUTHORIZATION ACT, 1991

● Mr. NUNN. Mr. President, by request, for myself and the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. WARNER] I introduce, for appropriate reference, a bill to authorize appropriations for fiscal year 1991 for military functions of the Department of Defense and to prescribe military personnel levels for fiscal year 1991, and for other purposes.

I ask unanimous consent that a letter of transmittal requesting consideration of the legislation and explaining its purpose be printed in the RECORD immediately following the listing of the bill.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 2171

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That this Act may be cited as the "Department of Defense Authorization Act, 1991".

TITLE I—PROCUREMENT

AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS

SEC. 101. ARMY.

Funds are hereby authorized to be appropriated for fiscal year 1991 for the Army as follows:

For aircraft, $1,583,200,000.

For missiles, $2,436,322,000.

For weapons and tracked combat vehicles, $2,172,600,000.

For ammunition, $1,424,400,000.

For other procurement, $2,798,243,000.

SEC. 102. NAVY AND MARINE CORPS.

Funds are hereby authorized to be appropriated for fiscal year 1991 for the Navy as follows:

For aircraft, $9,532,661,000.

For weapons, including missiles and torpedoes, $4,626,175,000.

For shipbuilding and conversion, $11,195,200,000.

For other procurement, $6,081,500,000.

Funds are hereby authorized to be appropriated for fiscal year 1991 for the Marine Corps in the amount of $782,100,000.

SEC. 103. AIR FORCE.

Funds are hereby authorized to be appropriated for fiscal year 1991 for the Air Force as follows:

For aircraft, $14,217,400,000.

For missiles, $9,005,700,000.

For other procurement, $8,307,400,000.

SEC. 104. DEFENSE AGENCIES.

Funds are hereby authorized to be appropriated for procurement for the Defense Agencies in the amount of $1,969,400,000.

SEC. 105. RESERVE FORCES.

Funds are hereby authorized to be appropriated for fiscal year 1991 for procurement of aircraft, vehicles, communications equipment, and other equipment for the reserve components of the Armed Forces, in the amount of $455,400,000.

SEC. 106. DEFENSE INSPECTOR GENERAL.

Funds are hereby authorized to be appropriated for procurement for fiscal year 1991 for the Defense Inspector General in the amount of $981,000.

SEC. 107. CHEMICAL DEMILITARIZATION PROGRAM.

Funds are hereby authorized to be appropriated for fiscal year 1991 for the destruction of lethal chemical weapons in accordance with section 1412 of the Department of Defense Authorization Act, 1986 (Public Law 99-145; 99 Stat. 747) in the amount of $354,400,000.

SEC. 108. AUTHORIZATION FOR TRANSFERS FROM FISCAL YEAR 1990 APPROPRIATIONS.

(a) M-1 TANK PROGRAM.—Of the amounts authorized to be appropriated for the Army for the procurement of weapons and tracked combat vehicles in section 101 of this Act, the following transfers, totaling $860,300,000, are authorized, when so provided in an appropriations act, from the following appropriations, in the amounts specified:

"Aircraft Procurement, Army, 1990/1992", $16,000,000;

"Procurement of Ammunition, Army, 1990/1992", $90,000,000;

"Other Procurement, Army, 1990/1992", $11,000,000;

"Weapons Procurement, Navy, 1990/1992", $13,900,000;

"Shipbuilding and Conversion, Navy, 1990/1994", $592,398,000;

"National Guard and Reserve Equipment, 1990/1992", $40,900,000;

"Research, Development, Test and Evaluation, Defense Agencies, 1990/1991", $4,950,000;

"Military Construction, Army, 1990/1994", $3,200,000;

"Military Construction, Navy, 1990/1994", $16,150,000'

"Military Construction, Army National Guard, 1990/1994", $18,301,000;

"Military Construction, Air National Guard, 1990/1994", $36,841,000;

"Military Construction, Army Reserve, 1990/1994", $16,660,000.

(b) F-15 AIRCRAFT PROGRAM.—Of the amounts authorized to be appropriated for the Air Force for aircraft in section 103 of this Act, the following transfers, totaling $498,750,000, are authorized, when so provided in an appropriations act, from the following appropriations, in the manner specified:

"Aircraft Procurement, Air Force, 1990/1992", $181,700,000;

"Missile Procurement, Air Force, 1990/1992", $131,000,000;

"Other Procurement, Air Force, 1990/1992", $70,000,000;

"Research, Development, Test, and Evaluation, Air Force, 1990/1991", $100,000,000;

"Research, Development, Test, and Evaluation, Defense Agencies, 1990/1991",

(c) AVAILABILITY OF TRANSFERS.—Amounts transferred pursuant to this authorization are authorized to be made available for the same purposes of the appropriation to which transferred and for the time period of the appropriation from which transferred or until September 30, 1993, whichever is earlier.

TITLE II—RESEARCH, DEVELOPMENT, TEST AND EVALUATION

SEC. 201. AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.

Funds are hereby authorized to be appropriated for fiscal year 1991 for the use of the Armed Forces for research, development, test, and evaluation, as follows:

For the Army, $6,025,900,000.

For the Navy, $9,017,127,000.

For the Air Force, $13,276,300,000.

For the Defense Agencies, $9,688,200,000, of which—

(i) $348,100,000 is authorized for the activities of the Deputy Director, Defense Research and Engineering (Test and Evaluation); and

(ii) $90,800,000 is authorized for the Director of Operational Test and Evaluation.

TITLE III—OPERATION AND MAINTENANCE

AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS

SEC. 301. OPERATION AND MAINTENANCE FUNDING.

Funds are hereby authorized to be appropriated for fiscal year 1991 for the use of the Armed Forces of the United States and other activities and agencies of the Department of Defense, for expenses, not otherwise provided for, for operation and maintenance, in amounts as follows:

For the Army, $23,562,900,000.

For the Navy, $24,531,600,000.

For the Marine Corps, $1,948,100,000.

For the Air Force, $22,048,900,000.

For the Defense Agencies, $8,663,100,000.

For the Army Reserve, $890,400,000.

For the Naval Reserve, $984,600,000.

For the Marine Corps Reserve, $86,100,000.

For the Air Force Reserve, $1,042,500,000.

For the Army National Guard, $1,988,500,000.

For the Air National Guard, $2,175,400,000.

For the National Board for the Promotion of Rifle Practice, $5,600,000.

For the Defense Inspector General, $98,519,000.

For Drug Interdiction and Counter-drug Activities, Defense, $1,207,900,000.

For the Court of Military Appeals, $5,600,000.

For Environmental Restoration Defense, $817,000,000.

For Humanitarian Assistance, $13,000,000.

SEC. 302. WORKING CAPITAL FUNDS.

Funds are hereby authorized to be appropriated for fiscal year 1991 for the use of the Armed Forces of the United States and other activities and agencies of the Department of Defense for providing capital for working capital funds, in amounts as follows:

For the Army Stock Fund, $407,000,000.

For the Navy Stock Fund, $37,200,000.

For the Air Force Stock Fund, $1,340,200,000.

For the Defense Stock Fund, $50,000,000.

For the Army Industrial Fund, $151,100,000.

For the Navy Industrial Fund, $238,700,000.

For the Defense Industrial Fund, $4,000,000.

TITLE IV—PERSONNEL AUTHORIZATIONS FOR FISCAL YEAR 1991

PART A—ACTIVE FORCES

SEC. 401. END STRENGTHS FOR ACTIVE FORCES.

The armed forces are authorized strengths for active duty personnel as of September 30, 1991, as follows:

(1) The Army, 727,500.

(2) The Navy, 584,800.

(3) The Marine Corps, 196,500.

(4) The Air Force, 530,000.

PART B—RESERVE FORCES

SEC. 401. END STRENGTHS FOR SELECTED RESERVE.

(a) IN GENERAL.—The Armed Forces are authorized strengths for Selected Reserve personnel of the reserve components as of September 30, 1991, as follows:.

(1) The Army National Guard of the United States, 447,300.

(2) The Army Reserve, 309,200.

(3) The Naval Reserve, 149,700.

(4) The Marine Corps Reserve, 43,900.

(5) The Air National Guard of the United States, 116,300.

(6) The Air Force Reserve, 85,200.

(7) The Coast Guard Reserve, 12,700.

(b) WAIVER AUTHORITY.—The Secretary of Defense may vary the end strength authorized by subsection (a) by not more than 2 percent.

(c) ADJUSTMENTS.—The end strengths prescribed by subsection (a) for the Selected Reserve of any reserve component shall be proportionately reduced by—

(1) the total authorized strength of units organized to serve as units of the Selected Reserve of such component which are on active duty (other than for training) at the end of the fiscal year, and

(2) the total number of individual members not in units organized to serve as units of the Selected Reserve of such component who are on active duty (other than for training or for unsatisfactory participation in training) without their consent at the end of the fiscal year.

Whenever such units or such individual members are released from active duty during any fiscal year, the end strength prescribed for such fiscal year for the Selected Reserve of such reserve component shall be proportionately increased by the total authorized strengths of such units and by the total number of such individual members.

SEC. 403. END STRENGTHS FOR RESERVES ON ACTIVE DUTY IN SUPPORT OF THE RESERVES.

Within the end strengths prescribed in section 402(b), the reserve components of the Armed Forces are authorized, as of September 30, 1991, the following number of Reserves to be serving on full-time active duty or full-time duty, in the case of members of the National Guard, for the purpose of organizing, administering, recruiting, instructing, or training the reserve components:

(1) The Army National Guard of the United States, 26,199.

(2) The Army Reserve, 13,344.

(3) The Naval Reserve, 22,997.

(4) The Marine Corps Reserve, 2,401.

(5) The Air National Guard of the United States, 8,468.

(6) The Air Force Reserve, 655.

SEC. 404. INCREASE IN NUMBER OF MEMBERS IN CERTAIN GRADES AUTHORIZED TO BE ON ACTIVE DUTY IN SUPPORT OF THE RESERVES.

(a) SENIOR ENLISTED MEMBERS.—Effective on October 1, 1990, the table in section

517(b) of title 10, United States Code, is amended to read as follows:

"Grade	Army	Navy	Air Force	Marine Corps
E–9	557	202	231	12
E–8	2,585	429	670	74."

(b) OFFICERS.—Effective in October 1, 1990, the table in section 524(a) of such title is amended to read as follows:

GENERAL COUNSEL OF THE DEPARTMENT OF DEFENSE,
Washington, DC, February 22, 1990.

Hon. DAN QUAYLE,
President of the Senate, Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. PRESIDENT: There is forwarded herewith legislation, "To authorize appropriations for fiscal year 1991 for military functions of the Department of Defense and to prescribe military personnel levels for fiscal year 1991, and for other purposes."

This legislative proposal is part of the Department of Defense legislative program for the 101st Congress and is needed to carry out the President's fiscal year 1991 budget plan. The Office of Management and Budget advises that there is no objection to the presentation of this proposal to the Congress and that its enactment would be in accord with the program of the President.

Title I provides procurement authorization for the Military Departments and for the Defense Agencies in amounts equal to the budget authority included in the President's budget for fiscal year 1991. It also authorizes the transfer of Fiscal Year 1990 appropriations for the M–1 Tank Program and the F–15 Aircraft program in accordance the requests for those transfers included in the President's budget for Fiscal Year 1991.

Title II provides for the authorization of each of the research, development, test, and evaluation appropriations for the Military Departments and Defense Agencies in amounts equal to the budget authority included in the President's budget for fiscal year 1991.

Title III provides for authorization of the operation and maintenance appropriations of the Military Departments and the Defense Agencies in amounts equal to the budget authority included in the President's budget for fiscal year 1991. Title III also includes appropriations for the purpose of providing capital for working-capital funds of the Military Departments and the Defense Agencies in amounts equal to the budget authority included in the President's budget for fiscal year 1991.

Title IV prescribes the personnel strengths for the active forces and the selected Reserve of each reserve component of the Armed Forces in the numbers provided for by the budget authority and appropriations requested for the Department of Defense in the President's budget for fiscal year 1991. This title also prescribes the end strengths for reserve component members on full-time active duty or full-time National Guard duty for the purpose of administering the reserve forces and provides for an increase in the number of certain enlisted and commissioned personnel who may be serving on active duty in support of the reserve components. Finally, title IV provides for the average military training student loans in the numbers provided for this purpose in the President's amended budget for fiscal year 1991.

Title V consists of five general provisions. Section 501 repeals the provisions of section 114(e) of title 10, United States Code, requiring a separate budget request for the procurement of Reserve Equipment. Section 502 repeals the provisions of section 115(b)(2) of title 10, United States Code, requiring the authorization of an end strength for civilian personnel of the Department of Defense. Section 503 repeals the provisions of section 194 of title 10, United States Code, on the number of personnel who may be assigned to management and nonmanagement headquarters support activities. Section 504 repeals the requirement contained in section 2215 of title 10, United States Code, for submission of reports on unobligated balances and the requirement in section 2216 of title 10 for submission of an annual report on budgeting for inflation. Section 505 repeals the requirement contained in Section 5 of the National Defense Authorization Act for fiscal years 1990 and 1991 for the submission of a joint annual outlay report by the Director of the Office of Management and Budget and the Director of the Congressional Budget Office.

Enactment of this legislation is of great importance to the Department of Defense and the Department urges its speedy and favorable consideration.

Sincerely,

Terrence O'Donnell.●

By Mr. NUNN (for himself and Mr. WARNER) (by request):

S. 2172. A bill to authorize certain construction at military installations for fiscal year 1991, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Armed Services.

MILITARY CONSTRUCTION AUTHORIZATION ACT, 1991

● Mr. NUNN. Mr. President, by request, for myself and the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. WARNER] I introduce, for appropriate reference, a bill to authorize certain construction at military installations for fiscal year 1991, and for other purposes.

I ask unanimous consent that a letter of transmittal requesting consideration of the legislation and explaining its purpose be printed in the RECORD immediately following the listing of the bill.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 2172

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, This title may be cited as the "Military Construction Authorization Act, 1991".

The Secretary shall report the facts concerning any transfer made pursuant to this section to the appropriate Committees of Congress.

BASE CLOSURES AND REALIGNMENTS

SEC. 809. (a) This section may be cited as the "Defense Base Consolidation Act".

(b) Section 2687 of title 10, United States Code, is amended to read as follows:

"§ 2687. Base closures and realignments.

"(a) THRESHOLD.—Notwithstanding any other provision of law, no action may be taken, except for those closures or realignments authorized by other provisions of law, to effect or implement—

"(1) the closure of any military installation at which at least 300 civilian personnel are authorized to be employed,

"(2) any realignment with respect to any military installation referred to in paragraph (1) involving a reduction by more than 1,000, or by more than 50 percent, in the number of civilian personnel authorized to be employed at such military installation at the time the Secretary of Defense notifies the Congress under this section of the Secretary's plan to close or realign such installation, or

"(3) any construction, conversion, or rehabilitation of any military facility that may be required as a result of the closure or realignment of a military installation to which this section applies, unless and until the provisions of subsection (b) are complied with.

"(b) CONGRESSIONAL NOTIFICATION.—If an action described in subsection (a) with respect to the closure or realignment of a military installation is taken, the Secretary shall notify the Committees on Armed Services of the Senate and House of Representatives of the proposed closure or realignment, and submit with the notification an evaluation of the fiscal, local economic, budgetary, environmental, strategic, and operational consequences of such closure or realignment.

"(c) NATIONAL SECURITY EXEMPTION.—Subsections (a) and (b) of this section shall not apply to the closure or realignment of a military installation if the President certifies to the Congress that such closure or realignment must be implemented for reasons of national security or a military emergency.

"(d) IMPLEMENTATION.—

"(1) The Secretary of Defense may—

"(A) carry out actions necessary to implement such closure or realignment, including the acquisition of such land, the construction of such replacement facilities, the performance of such activities, and the conduct of such advance planning and design as may be required to transfer functions from such military installation to another military installation, using funds in the Base Closure Account or funds appropriated to the Department of Defense for use in planning and design, minor construction, or operation and maintenance;

"(B) provide—

"(i) economic adjustment assistance to any community located near a military installation being closed or realigned, and

"(ii) community planning assistance to any community located near a military installation to which functions will be transferred as a result of such closure or realignment, if the Secretary of Defense determines that the financial resources available to the community (by grant or otherwise) for such purposes are inadequate, using funds in the Base Closure Account or funds authorized for and appropriated to the Department of Defense for economic adjustment assistance or community planning assistance;

"(C) carry out activities for the purposes of environmental restoration and mitigation using funds in the Base Closure Account or funds appropriated to the Department of Defense for environmental restoration and mitigation; and

"(D) provide outplacement assistance to separating employees at military installations being closed or realigned using funds in the Base Closure Account or funds appropriated to the Department of Defense for outplacement assistance to employees.

"(2) Nothing in this section restricts the authority of the Secretary of Defense or the Secretary of the military department concerned to obtain architectural and engineering services under section 2807 of this title.

"(e) MANAGEMENT AND DISPOSAL OF PROPERTY.—

"(1) The Administrator of General Services shall delegate to the Secretary of Defense, with respect to excess and surplus real property and facilities located at a military installation closed or realigned under the procedures established by this section—

"(A) the authority of the Administrator to utilize excess property under section 202 of the Federal Property and Administrative Services Act of 1949 (40 U.S.C. § 483);

"(B) the authority of the Administrator to dispose of surplus property under section 203 of that Act (40 U.S.C., § 484); and

"(C) the authority of the Administrator to grant approvals and make determinations under section 13(g) of the Surplus Property Act of 1944 (50 U.S.C. App. § 1622(g)).

"(2)(A) Subject to subparagraph (B), the Secretary of Defense shall exercise the authority delegated to the Secretary pursuant to paragraph (1) in accordance with—

"(i) all regulations in effect on the date of the Defense Authorization Amendments and Base Closure and Realignment Act (Public Law 100-526) governing the utilization of excess property and the disposal of surplus under the Federal Property and Administrative Services Act of 1949; and

"(ii) all regulations in effect on the date of the enactment of the Defense Authorization Amendments and Base Closure and Realignment Act governing the conveyance and disposal of property under section 13(g) of the Surplus Property Act of 1944 (50 U.S.C. App. 1622(g)).

"(B) The Secretary of Defense, after consulting with the Administrator of General Services, may issue regulations that are necessary to carry out the delegation of authority required by paragraph (1).

"(C) The authority required to be delegated by paragraph (1) to the Secretary of Defense by the Administrator of General Services shall not include the authority to prescribe general policies and methods for utilizing excess property and disposing of surplus property.

"(D) The Secretary of Defense may transfer real property or facilities located at a military installation to be closed or realigned under this section, with or without reimbursement, to a military department or other entity (including nonappropriated fund instrumentalities) within the Department of Defense or the United States Coast Guard.

"(E) Before any action may be taken with respect to the disposal of any surplus real property or facility located at any military installation to be closed or realigned under this section, the Secretary of Defense shall consult with the Governor of the State and the heads of the local governments concerned for the purpose of considering any plan for the use of such property by the local community concerned.

"(3)(A) Except as provided in paragraph (B), all proceeds—

"(i) from any transfer under paragraph 2(D); and

"(ii) from the disposal of any property or facility made as a result of a closure or realignment under this section, shall be desposited into the Base Closure Account.

"(B) In any case in which the Secretary of Defense requests assistance from the General Services Administration in the management or disposal of property or facilities, the Secretary of Defense shall reimburse the Administrator of General Services in accordance with section 1535 of title 31, United States Code, for any expenses incurred in such activities.

"(f) APPLICABILITY OF OTHER LAW.—

"(1) The provisions of the National Environmental Policy Act of 1969, as amended (42 U.S.C. 4321 et seq.) shall not apply to the actions of the Department of Defense in selecting a military installation for closure or realignment, in selecting a military installation to receive functions from an installation to be closed or realigned, and in preparing and providing the Congressional reports required by this section.

"(2) The provisions of the National Environmental Policy Act of 1969, as amended, shall apply to actions of the Department of Defense (A) during the process of property disposal, and (B) during the process of relocating functions from a military installation being closed or realigned to another military installation after the receiving installation has been selected, but before the functions are relocated. In applying the provisions of such Act, the Secretary of Defense or the Secretary of the military departments concerned shall not have to consider—

"(i) the need for closing or realigning the military installation which has been selected for closure or realignment by the Secretary of Defense or the Secretary of the military department concerned;

"(ii) the need for transferring functions to the military installation which has been selected as the receiving installation; or

"(iii) military installations alternative to those selected.

"(3) A civil action for judicial review, with respect to any requirement of the National Environmental Policy Act of 1969, as amended, to the extent such Act is applicable, of any act or failure to act by the Department of Defense or the military department concerned during the closing, realigning, or relocating of functions referred to in clauses (A) and (B) of paragraph (2), or of any act or failure to act by the Department of Defense or the military department concerned under this section, may not be brought later than the 60th day after the date of such act or failure to act.

"(g) WAIVER.—The Secretary of Defense may close or realign military insallations pursuant to the procedures set forth in this section without regard to—

"(1) any prior enacted provision of law restricting the use of funds for closing or realigning military installations included in any appropriations or authorization Act; and

"(2) the procedures set forth in section 2662 of this title.

"(h) BASE CLOSURE ACCOUNT.—

"(1) The Department of Defense Base Closure Account established under Section 207 of the Defense Authorization Amendments and Base Closure and Realignment Act is hereby permanently established on the books of the Treasury as an account to be known as the "Department of Defense Base Closure Account" which shall be administered by the Secretary of Defense as a single account.

"(2) There shall be deposited into the Account—

"(A) funds appropriated to the Account;

"(B) any funds that the Secretary of Defense may transfer to the Account, from funds appropriated to the Department of Defense for any purpose, provided that the Secretary of Defense transmits written notice of, and justification for, such transfer to the appropriate committees of Congress; and

"(C) proceeds described in subsection (e)(3)(A);

"(3) The Secretary of Defense may use the funds in the Account only for the purposes described in subsection (d).

"(4) When funds in the Account are used to carry out a construction project under section (d)(1), and the cost of the project will exceed the maximum amount authorized by law for a minor construction project, the Secretary of Defense must notify, in writing, the appropriate committees of Congress of the nature of, the justification for, and the amount of expenditures for the project. Any such construction project may be carried out without regard to section 2805 of this title.

"(i) DEFINITIONS.—In this section:

"(1) The term "military installation" means a base, camp, post, station, yard, center, or other activity under the jurisdiction of the Secretary of a military department which is located within the several States, the District of Columbia, the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico, American Samoa, the Virgin Islands, or Guam. Such term does not include any facility used primarily for civil works, rivers and harbors projects, or flood control projects.

"(2) The term "civilian personnel" means direct-hire, permanent civilian employees of the Department of Defense.

"(3) The term "realignment" includes any action which both reduces and relocates functions and civilian personnel positions, but does not include a reduction in force resulting from workload adjustments, reduced personnel or funding levels, skill imbalances, or other similar causes.

"(4) The term "Account" means the Department of Defense Base Closure Account established by Public Law 100-526.

"(5) The term "appropriate committees of Congress" means the Committees on Armed Services and the Committees on Appropriations of the Senate and the House of Representatives.".

THE SECRETARY OF DEFENSE,
Washington, DC, February 8, 1990.

Hon. J. DANFORTH QUAYLE,
President of the Senate,
Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. PRESIDENT: Enclosed is a draft of legislation "To authorize certain construction at military installations for fiscal year 1991, and for other purposes." This legislative proposal is needed to carry out the President's Fiscal Year 1991 budget plan.

This proposal would authorize appropriations in Fiscal Year 1991 for new construction and family housing support for the Active Forces, Defense Agencies, NATO Infrastructure, and Guard and Reserve. In addition, the draft legislation includes an amendment to section 2687 of title 10, United States Code, to improve the management of the Department of Defense by streamlining procedures to close or realign military installations.

This draft Military Construction Authorization Bill would authorize construction projects at installations that I announced as candidates for closure or realignment. When final closure decisions are made, I will ask for appropriate changes to our request.

Current law limits my ability to improve the management of the Department of Defense and achieve savings in the defense budget by closing unneeded or obsolete military installations until after the completion of lengthy and time-consuming studies and evaluations. The net effect of these cumbersome procedures is that few, if any, bases ever get closed.

Section 2687 currently requires Congressional notification during a narrow once a year window. Further, coupled with the National Environmental Policy Act of 1969, it requires extensive reviews of the anticipated fiscal, local economic, budgetary, environmental, strategic, and operational consequences of proposed actions way out of proportion to the benefit of the studies.

In an era when we are attempting to reduce the size of the Department in a prudent, cost-effective manner, section 2687 procedures are wasteful and expensive, and constitute an exercise in futility. They serve only to protect parochial interests and encourage lawsuits.

The enclosed legislation will allow us to streamline and reorganize the Department's domestic base structure in an efficient and constructive manner. It will improve section 2687 procedures to permit Congressional notification at any time, not just the limited window of opportunity now available. Further, it will expedite the lengthy procedures required by the National Environmental Policy Act of 1969, while still complying fully with all substantive provisions of law designed to protect the environment.

To ease the impact on affected communities, the draft legislation will establish permanently a Base Closure Account. This fund will be available to provide community planning assistance, community impact assistance, environmental restoration and mitigation, as well as out-placement assistance to separating employees.

This Office of Management and Budget advises that enactment of this legislation would be in accord with the program of the President.

Sincerely,

DICK CHENEY.●

By Mr. NUNN (for himself and Mr. WARNER) (by request):

S. 2173. A bill to improve the management of the Department of Defense by streamlining procedures to close or realign military installations, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Armed Services.

DEFENSE BASE CONSOLIDATION ACT

● Mr. NUNN. Mr. President, by request, for myself and the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. WARNER], I introduce, for appropriate reference, a bill to improve the management of the Department of Defense by streamlining procedures to close or realign military installations, and for other purposes.

I ask unanimous consent that a letter of transmittal requesting consideration of the legislation and explaining its purpose be printed in the RECORD immediately following the listing of the bill.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 2173

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That this Act maybe cited as the "Defense Base Consolidation Act."

SEC. 2. Section 2687 of title 10, United States Code, is amended to read as follows:

"§ 2687. Base closures and realignments

"(a) THRESHOLD.—Notwithstanding any other provision of law, no action may be taken, except for those closures or realignments authorized by other provisions of law, to effect or implement—

"(1) the closure of any military installation at which at least 300 civilian personnel are authorized to be employed,

"(2) any realignment with respect to any military installation referred to in paragraph (1) involving a reduction by more than 1,000, or by more than 50 percent, in the number of civilian personnel authorized to be employed at such military installation at the time the Secretary of Defense notifies the Congress under this section of the Secretary's plan to close or realign such installation, or

"(3) any construction, conversion, or rehabilitation of any military facility that may be required as a result of the closure or realignment of a military installation to which this section applies, unless and until the provisions of subsection (b) are complied with.

"(b) CONGRESSIONAL NOTIFICATION.—If an action described in subsection(a) with respect to the closure or realignment of a military installation is taken, the Secretary shall notify the Committees on Armed Services of the Senate and House of Representatives of the proposed closure or realignment, and submit with the notification an evaluation of the fiscal, local economic, budgetary, environmental, strategic, and operational consequences of such closure or realignment.

"(c) NATIONAL SECURITY EXEMPTION.—Subsections (a) and (b) of this section shall not apply to the closure or realignment of a military installation if the President certifies to the Congress that such closure or realignment must be implemented for reasons of national security or a military emergency.

"(d) IMPLEMENTATION.—

"(1) The Secretary of Defense may—

"(A) carry out actions necessary to implement such closure or realignment, including the acquisition of such land, the construction of such replacement facilities, the performance of such activities, and the conduct of such advance planning and design as may be required to transfer functions from such military installation of another military installation, using funds in the Base Closure Account or funds appropriated to the Department of Defense for use in planning and design, minor construction, or operation and maintenance;

"(B) provide—

"(i) economic adjustment assistance to any community located near a military installation being closed or realigned, and

"(ii) community planning assitance to any community located near a military installation to which functions will be transferred as a result of such closure or realignment, if the Secretary of Defense determines that the financial resources available to the community (by grant or otherwise) for such purposes are inadequate, using funds in the Base Closure Account or funds authorized for and appropriated to the Department of Defense for economic adjustment assistance or community planning assistance;

"(C) carry out activities for the purposes of environmental restoration and mitigation using funds in the Base Closure Account or funds appropriated to the Department of Defense for environmental restoration and mitigation; and

"(D) provide outplacement assistance to separating employees at military installations being closed or realigned using funds in the Base Closure Account or funds appropriated to the Department of Defense for outplacement assistance to employees.

"(2) Nothing in this section restricts the authority of the Secretary of Defense or the Secretary of the military department concerned to obtain architectural and engineering services under section 2807 of this title.

"(e) MANAGEMENT AND DISPOSAL OF PROPERTY.—

"(1) The Administrator of General Services shall delegate to the Secretary of Defense, with respect to excess and surplus real property and facilities located at a military installation closed or realigned under the procedures established by this section—

"(A) the authority of the Administrator to utilize excess property under section 202 of the Federal Property and Administrative Services Act of 1949 (40 U.S.C. § 483); and

"(C) the authority of the Administrator to grant approvals and make determinations under section 13(g) of the Surplus Property Act of 1944 (50 U.S.C. App. § 1622(g)).

"(2)(A) Subject to subparagraph (B), the Secretary of Defense shall exercise the authority delegated to the Secertary pursuant to paragraph (1) in accordance with—

"(i) all regulations in effect on the date of the Defense Authorization Amendments and Base Closure and Realignment Act (Public Law 100-526) governing the utilization of excess property and the disposal of surplus property under the Federal Property and Administrative Services Act of 1949; and

"(ii) all regulations in effect on the date of the enactment of the Defense Authorization Amendments and Base Closure and Realignment Act governing the conveyance and disposal of property under section 13(g) of the Surplus Property Act of 1944 (50 U.S.C. App. 1622(g)).

"(B) The Secretary of Defense, after consulting with the Administrator of General Services, may issue regulations that are necessary to carry out the delegation of authority required by paragraph (1).

"(C) The authority required to be delegated by paragraph (1) to the Secretary of Defense by the Administrator of General Services shall not include the authority to prescribe general policies and methods for utilizing excess property and disposing of surplus property.

"(D) The Secretary of Defense may transfer real property or facilities located at a military installation to be closed or realigned under this section, with or without reimbursement, to a military department or other entity (including nonappropriated fund instrumentalities) within the Department of Defense or the United States Coast Guard.

"(E) Before any action may be taken with respect to the disposal of any surplus real property or facility located at any military installation to be closed or realigned under this section, the Secretary of Defense shall consult with the Governor of the State and the heads of the local governments concerned for the purpose of considering any plan for the use of such property by the local community concerned.

"(3)(A) Except as provided in paragraph (B), all proceeds—

"(i) from any transfer under paragraph 2(D); and

"(ii) from the disposal of any property or facility made as a result of a closure or realignment under this section, shall be deposited into the Base Closure Account.

"(B) In any case in which the Secretary of Defense requests assistance from the General Services Administration in the management or disposal of property or facilities, the Secretary of Defense shall reimburse the Administrator of General Services in accordance with section 1535 of title 31, United States Code, for any expenses incurred in such activities.

"(f) APPLICABILITY OF OTHER LAW.—

"(1) The provisions of the National Environmental Policy Act of 1969, as amended (42 U.S.C. 4321 et seq.) shall not apply to the actions of the Department of Defense in selection a military installation for closure or realignment, in selecting a military installation to receive functions from an installation to be closed or realigned, and in preparing and providing the Congressional reports required by this section.

"(2) The provisions of the National Environmental Policy Act of 1969, as amended, shall apply to actions of the Department of Defense (A) during the process of property disposal, and (B) during the process of relocating functions from a military installation being closed or realigned to another military installation after the receiving installation has been selected, but before the functions are relocated. In applying the provisions of such Act, the Secretary of Defense or the Secretary of the military departments concerned shall not have to consider—

"(i) the need for closing or realigning the military installation which has been selected for closure or realignment by the Secretary of Defense or the Secretary of the military department concerned;

"(ii) the need for transferring functions to the military installation which has been selected as the receiving installations; or

"(iii) military installations alternative to those selected.

"(3) A civil action for judicial review, with respect to any requirement of the National Environmental Policy Act of 1969, as amended, to the extent such Act is applicable, of any act or failure to act by the Department of Defense or the military department concerned during the closing, realigning, or relocating of functions referred to in clauses (A) and (B) of paragraph (2), or of any act or failure to act by the Department of Defense or the military department concerned under this section, may not be brought later than the 60th day after the date of such act or failure to act.

"(g) WAIVER.—The Secretary of Defense may close or realign military installations pursuant to the procedures set forth in this section without regard to—

"(1) any prior enacted provision of law restricting the use of funds for closing or realigning military installations included in any appropriations or authorization Act; and

"(2) the procedures set forth in section 2662 of this title.

"(h) BASE CLOSURE ACCOUNT.—

"(1) The Department of Defense Base Closure Account established under Section 207 of the Defense Authorization Amendments and Base Closure and Realignment Act is hereby permanently established on the books of the Treasury as an account to be known as the 'Department of Defense Base Closure Account' which shall be administered by the Secretary of Defense as a single account.

"(2) There shall be deposited into the Account—

"(A) funds appropriated to the Account;

"(B) any funds that the Secretary of Defense may transfer to the Account, from funds appropriated to the Department of Defense for any purpose, provided that the Secretary of Defense transmits written notice of, and justification for, such transfer to the appropriate committees of Congress; and

"(C) proceeds described in subsection (e)(3)(A);

"(3) The Secretary of Defense may use the funds in the Account only for the purposes described in subsection (d).

"(4) When funds in the Account are used to carry out a construction project under section (d)(1), and the cost of the project will exceed the maximum amount authorized by law for a minor construction project, the Secretary of Defense must notify, in writing, the appropriate committees of Congress of the nature of, the justification for, and the amount of expenditures for the project. Any such construction project may be carried out without regard to section 2805 of this title.

"(i) DEFINITIONS.—In this section:

"(1) The term' military installation means a base, camp, post, station, yard, center,' or other activity under the jurisdiction of the Secretary of a military department which is located within the several States, the District of Columbia, the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico, American Samoa, the Virgin Islands, or Guam. Such term does not include any facility used primarily for civil works, rivers and harbors projects, or flood control projects.

"(2) The term 'civilian personnel' means direct-hire, permanent civilian employees of the Department of Defense."

THE SECRETARY OF DEFENSE,
Washington, DC, February 8, 1990.

Hon. J. DANFORTH QUAYLE,
President of the Senate, Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. PRESIDENT: Enclosed is a draft of legislation "To improve management of the Department of Defense by streamlining procedures to close or realign military installations, and for other purposes."

Current law limits my ability to improve the management of the Department of Defense and achieve savings in the defense budget by closing unneeded or obsolete military installations until after the completion of lengthy and time-consuming studies and evaluations. The net effect of these cumbersome procedures is that few, if any, bases every get closed.

Section 2687 of title 10, United States Code, currently requires Congressional notification during a narrow once a year window. Further, coupled with the National Environmental Policy Act of 1969, it requires extensive reviews of the anticipated fiscal, local economic, budgetary, environmental, strategic, and operational consequences of proposed actions way out of proportion to the benefit of the studies.

In an era when we are attempting to reduce the size of the Department in a prudent, cost-effective manner, section 2687 procedures are wasteful and expensive, and constitute an exercise in futility. They serve only to protect parochial interests and encourage lawsuits.

The enclosed legislation will allow us to streamline and reorganize the Department's domestic base structure in an efficient and constructive manner. It will improve section 2687 procedures to permit Congressional notification at any time, not just the limited window of opportunity now available. Further, it will expedite the lengthy procedures required by the National Environmental Policy Act of 1969, while still complying fully with all substantive provisions of law designed to protect the environment.

To ease the impact on affected communities, the draft legislation will establish permanently a Base Closure Account. This fund will be available to provide community planning assistance, community impact assistance, environmental restoration and mitigation, as well as out-placement assistance to separating employees.

The Office of Management and Budget advises that enactment of this legislation would be in accord with the program of the President.

Sincerely,

DICK CHENEY.[1]

By Mr. NUNN (for himself and Mr. WARNER) (by request):

S. 2174. A bill to repeal or modify certain reporting requirements relating to activities of the Department of Defense; to the Committee on Armed Services.

DEFENSE REPORTS REDUCTION ACT

● Mr. NUNN. Mr. President, by request, for myself and the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. WARNER], I introduce, for appropriate reference, a bill to repeal or modify certain reporting requirements relating to activities of the Department of Defense.

I ask unanimous consent that a letter of transmittal requesting consideration of the legislation and explaining its purpose be printed in the RECORD immediately following the listing of the bill.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 2174

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That this Act may be cited as the "Defense Reports Reduction Act".

GENERAL COUNSEL,
DEPARTMENT OF DEFENSE,
Washington, DC, February 6, 1990.

Hon. DAN QUAYLE,
President of the Senate, Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. PRESIDENT: Enclosed is draft legislation "To repeal or modify certain reporting requirements relating to activities of the Department of Defense."

This proposal is part of the Legislative Program of the Department of Defense for the 101st Congress. The Office of Management and Budget advises that, from the standpoint of the Administration's program, there is no objection to the presentation of this proposal for the consideration of the Congress. It is recommended that the proposal be enacted by the Congress.

PURPOSE OF THE LEGISLATION

The proposed legislation would repeal or amend certain statutory provisions that require the submission to Congress or to a committee of Congress of recurring reports, notifications, or studies relating to the national defense. The proposal is submitted in accordance with section 602 of the Goldwater-Nichols Department of Defense Reorganization Act of 1986 (Public Law 99-433; 10 U.S.C. 111 note).

Section 602(a) of the Act expresses a congressional policy to eliminate unnecessary reporting requirements imposed on the Department of Defense. Section 602(b) directs the Secretary of Defense to provide Congress a list of provisions requiring the submission of recurring reports, notifications, or studies relating to the national defense; to recommend to Congress whether the requirements should be retained, modified, repealed, or consolidated; and to submit to Congress draft legislation to implement any recommended changes in law involving these requirements as well as to conform to the termination of certain reporting, notification, and study requirements by section 602(c). The enclosed draft bill would implement the changes in law recommended by the Department under section 602(b) and the conforming changes warranted by section 602(c).

COST AND BUDGET DATA

Enactment of this legislation would bring about a net reduction in departmental reporting requirements, resulting in some savings in cost to the Department.

Sincerely,

TERRENCE O'DONNELL.

SECTIONAL ANALYSIS

"To repeal or modify certain reporting requirements relating to activities of the Department of Defense."

TITLE I—REPEALS

Title I repeals certain statutory provisions that require the submission to Congress or to a committee of Congress of recurring reports, notifications, or studies concerning the national defense. A number of these provisions are repealed by recommendation of the Department of Defense under section 602(b)(2)(D) of the Goldwater-Nichols Department of Defense Reorganization Act of 1986 (Public Law 99-433; 10 U.S.C. 111 note), which directed the Secretary of Defense to recommend to Congress whether certain requirements for reports, notifications, or studies should be retained, modified, or repealed. Other provisions are repealed to conform to section 602(c) of the Goldwater-Nichols Act, which terminated various statutory reporting requirements.

Following is an analysis of each section of title I. In the case of those sections effecting a repeal in accordance with a recommendation of the Department of Defense under section 602(b)(2)(D) of the Goldwater-Nichols Act, the analysis gives a rationale for each repeal. No rationale is given for a repeal conforming to the termination of a reporting requirement by section 602(c) of the Goldwater-Nichols Act, or for a clerical amendment ancillary to any repeal.

Section 101

Section 101 repeals provisions in title 10, United States Code.

Paragraph (1)(A) of section 101 repeals 10 U.S.C. § 117, which requires the Secretary of Defense to make an annual report to the Committees on Armed Services and on Appropriations of the Senate and House of Representatives on the readiness of the military forces of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization (NATO). The information in this report is generally redundant with information available to Congress in other documents, such as the report required by section 1002(d) of the Department of Defense Authorization Act, 1985 (Public Law 98-525; 98 Stat. 2575) and the Annual Posture Statements submitted by the Secretary of Defense and the Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff. The report under 10 U.S.C. § 117 becomes even more unnecessary in light of section 202(1)(B) of the bill, which amends the Department of Defense Authorization Act, 1985, to expand the reporting requirement in section 1002(d) to cover additional selected indicators of NATO capability.

Paragraph (1)(B) of section 101 strikes out the item relating to 10 U.S.C. § 117 in the table of sections at the beginning of chapter 2 of title 10.

Paragraph (2)(A) of section 101 amends 10 U.S.C. § 127 by striking out the reference in subsection (a) to subsection (c).

Paragraph (2)(B) of section 101 strikes out subsection (c) of 10 U.S.C. § 127. Subsection (c) requires the Secretary of Defense to submit a quarterly report to the Committees on Armed Services and on Appropriations of the Senate and House of Representatives on the expenditure of funds for emergency or extraordinary purposes under subsections (a) and (b).

Paragraph (3) of section 101 strikes out the last sentence of 10 U.S.C. § 673(b). This sentence requires the Secretary of Defense to report at least annually to the Committees on Armed Services of the Senate and House of Representatives on policies and procedures to ensure equitable treatment for the involuntary call to active duty of members of the Ready Reserve.

Paragraph (4)(A) of section 101 strikes out 10 U.S.C. § 2006(e)(3). Section 2006(e)(3) requires the Department of Defense Education Benefits Board of Actuaries to report to the President and Congress, at least once every four years, on the status of the Department of Defense Education Benefits Fund and to recommend such changes as are necessary to protect the public interest and maintain the Fund on a sound actuarial basis.

Paragraph (4)(B) of section 101 redesignates paragraph (4) of 10 U.S.C. § 2006(e) as paragraph (3).

Paragraph (5)(A) of section 101 amends 10 U.S.C. § 2113(j) by striking out the reference to paragraph (2) in paragraphs (1) (B), (C), and (E).

Paragraph (5)(B) of section 101 strikes out 10 U.S.C. § 2113(j)(2). Section 2113(j)(2) requires the Board of Regents of the Uniformed Services University of the Health Sciences to notify the Committees on Armed Services of the Senate and House of Representatives in advance of certain arrangements involving cooperative enterprises with the Henry M. Jackson Foundation for the Advancement of Military Medicine or with other nonprofit entities.

Paragraph (5)(C) of section 101 redesignates paragraphs (3), (4), and (5) of 10 U.S.C. § 2113(j) as paragraphs (2), (3), and (4), respectively.

Paragraph (6) of section 101 strikes out 10 U.S.C. § 2208(k). Section 2208(k) requires the submission of annual reports to the President and Congress on working-capital funds in the Department of Defense. These reports duplicate information in the Statement of Financial Conditions, Standard Forms 220 and 221, filed annually with the Department of the Treasury by each of the military departments. The information so filed is publicly available. The report required by § 2208(k) does not provide additional information which effects the oversight of working-capital funds.

Paragraph (7)(A) of section 101 repeals 10 U.S.C. § 2216. Section 2216 requires the Secretary of Defense to make an annual report to the Committees on Armed Services of the Senate and House of Representatives which identifies and explains, for each budget account for the current fiscal year and the two preceding fiscal years, variances between amounts appropriated to the Department of Defense to offest anticipated inflation and amounts estimated, as of the date of the report, to be needed to offset anticipated inflation. The Department of Defense routinely reports on the current status of programs and makes the information available independently of the requirement in § 2216.

Paragraph (7)(B) of section 101 strikes out the item relating to 10 U.S.C. § 2216 in the table of sections at the beginning of chapter 131 of title 10.

Paragraph (8) of section 101 strikes out 10 U.S.C. § 2307(d). Section 2307(d) prohibits the Department of Defense, the Department of Transportation, and the National Aeronautics and Space Administration from exercising authority to make certain advance contractual payments in excess of $25,000,000, unless they give prior notification to the Committee on Armed Services of the Senate and House of Representatives.

Paragraph (9)(A) of section 101 repeals 10 U.S.C. § 2357, which requires the Secretaries of the military departments to submit a semiannual report to Congress on all contracts for research or devlopment made during the preceding six months which exceed $50,000. The same information is maintained by the Federal Procurement Data Center and is publicly available.

Paragraph (9)(B) of section 101 repeals 10 U.S.C. § 2359, which requires the Secretary of Defense to give Congress an annual notification with detailed information on any employee of a federal contract research center whose compensation from the United States exceeded the basic pay for level II of the Executive Schedule.

Paragraph (9)(C) of section 101 strikes out the items relating to 10 U.S.C. §§ 2357, 2359 in the table of sections at the beginning of chapter 129 of title 10.

Paragraph (10) of section 101 strikes out 10 U.S.C. § 2367(c). Section 2367(c) prohibits the use of Department of Defense appropriations to operate new federally funded research centers without a prior report to Congress. The report duplicates material available under Office of Procurement Policy Letter 84-1, which requires three notices over a 90 day period in both the Commerce Business Daily and the Federal Register before establishing a new federally funded research and development center. Notices given under this administrative procedure have resulted in numerous inquiries by members of Congress, which indicates that the procedure is adequate to keep Congress informed.

Paragraph (11) of section 101 strikes out 10 U.S.C. § 2388(d). Section 2388(d) requires the Secretaries of the military departments to report to the Committees on Armed Services of the Senate and House of Representatives the terms of contracts for storage, handling, and distribution of liquid fuels and the names of the contractors.

Paragraph (12)(A) of section 101 amends 10 U.S.C. § 2394a by redesignating subsection (b)(1) as subsection (b).

Paragraph (12)(B) of section 101 amends 10 U.S.C. § 2394a by striking out subsection (b)(2). Subsection (b)(2) requires the Secretary of Defense to submit to the Committee on Armed Services of the Senate and House of Representatives a report at least biennially on studies on the use of solar and other renewable forms of energy to meet the needs of the Department of Defense.

Paragraph (13)(A) of section 101 amends 10 U.S.C. § 2401 by deleting the requirement, in subsection (b), for the Secretaries of the military departments to notify the Committees on Armed Services and on Appropriations of the Senate and House of Representatives before contracting for the long-term lease of a vessel or aircraft or for the provision of a service through use by a contractor of a vessel or aircraft. This notification requirement apparently arose out of concern that, under previous tax law, the rental cost of the lessee government agency did not represent the entire cost of the arrangement to the Government because the lessor received tax benefits. However, with the elimination of such tax benefits under recent laws, the Department of Defense believes that the rationale for the congressional notification is no longer valid.

Paragraph (13)(B) of section 101 amends 10 U.S.C. § 2401 by striking out subsection (e). Subsection (e) specifies certain information that must be provided in a request to Congress for authorization for certain leases of aircraft or naval vessels including an analysis by the Secretary of Defense which compares the cost of the Government of the lease (including lost tax revenues) with the cost of direct procurement. Subsection (e) also provides that, after submission of this analysis to Congress, the Director of the Office of Management and Budget and the Secretary of the Treasury shall report to Congress on their evaluation of the analysis. The rationale for striking out § 2401(e) is the same as in the above analysis for paragraph (13)(A); which eliminates the notification requirement in § 2401(b).

Paragraph (13)(C) of section 101 amends 10 U.S.C. § 2401 by redesignating subsection (f) as subsection (e).

Paragraph (14)(A) of section 101 amends 10 U.S.C. § 2404 by striking out subsection (d). Subsection (d) requires the Secretary of Defense to notify Congress whenever he has exercised his authority to waiver provisions of law that govern the formation, terms and conditions, and performance of contracts for the procurement of petroleum by the Department of Defense.

Paragraph (14)(B) amends 10 U.S.C. § 2404 by redesignating subsection (e) as subsection (d).

Paragraph (15)(A) amends 10 U.S.C. § 2431 by striking out subsection (b). Subsection (b) requires the Secretary of Defense to submit a supplemental report or notification to Congress before procuring specified weapon systems. The Department of Defense believes that the annual report on these weapon systems required by subsection (a) of § 2431 currently provides comprehensive data, including information provided in the supplemental reports under subsection (b), and is sufficient for congressional oversight. Further, while the annual report is used extensively by Congress for source documentation, it does not seem that similar use is made of the supplemental reports.

Paragraph (15)(B) of section 101 amends to U.S.C. § 2431 by striking out the reference in subsection (c) to reports required to be submitted under subsection (b).

Paragraph (15)(C) of section 101 amends 10 U.S.C. § 2431 by redesignating subsections (c) and (d) as subsections (b) and (c), respectively.

Paragraph (16)(A) of section 101 repeals 10 U.S.C. § 2455, which requires the Secretary of Defense to submit annual progress reports to the Committees on Armed Services of the Senate and House of Representatives on cataloging and standardizing supplies.

Paragraph (16)(B) of section 101 strikes out the item relating to 10 U.S.C. § 2455 in the table of sections at the beginning of chapter 145 of title 10.

Paragraph (17) of section 101 strikes out the last sentence of 10 U.S.C. § 2672a(b). This sentence requires the Secretaries of the military departments to give notice to the Committees on Armed Services of the Senate and House of Representatives before acquiring an interest in land, the acquisition of which is not provided for in a military construction authorization act.

Paragraph (18)(A) of section 101 amends 10 U.S.C. § 2675 by redesignating § 2675(a) as § 2675.

Paragraph (18)(B) of section 101 amends 10 U.S.C. § 2675 by striking out subsection (b). Subsection (b) provides that the Secretaries of the military departments may not exercise their authority under the section to acquire certain real property by lease in a foreign country unless they make prior notification to the Committees on Armed Services of the Senate and House of Representatives.

Paragraph (19)(A) of section 101 repeals 10 U.S.C. § 2706, which requires the Secretary of Defense to submit annual progress reports to Congress on environmental restoration at military facilities.

Paragraph (19)(B) of section 101 strikes out the item relating to 10 U.S.C. § 2706 in the table of sections at the beginning of chapter 160 of title 10.

Paragraph (20) of section 101 strikes out 10 U.S.C. § 2779(b)(4). Subsection (b)(4) requires the Secretary of Defense to report to Congress annually on funds that were appropriated by subsection (b)(2) for the purpose of eliminating losses in military construction or expenses of family housing caused by fluctuations in the exchange rates of foreign currencies. All funds appropriated for that purpose by § 2779(b)(2) have been obligated and expended. More recently, funds were appropriated for the same purpose by section 121 of the Military Construction Appropriations Act, 1987 (as enacted in Public Law 99-591; 100 Stat. 3341-293 and in Public Law 99-500; 100 Stat. 1783-293). Section 121 also prescribes an annual report by the Secretary of Defense to Congress on all transfers made to or from the appropriation. The reporting requirement in section 121 supersedes that in 10 U.S.C. § 2779(b)(4).

Paragraph (21) of section 101 strikes out 10 U.S.C. § 2805(b)(3). Sections 2805(b)(3) prohibits the Secretaries of the military departments from exercising their authority to carry out minor construction projects to relocate certain activities from one installation to another, unless they notify the appropriate congressional committees in advance. The Department of Defense believes that the notification requirement in § 2805(b)(3) is unnecessary because it is subsumed in more stringent notification requirements imposed by provisions in annual appropriations acts, such as section 107 of the Military Construction Appropriations Act, 1988 (as enacted in Public Law 100-202) and section 107 of the Military Construction Appropriations Act, 1987 (as enacted in Public Law 99-591; 100 Stat. 3341-292 and in Public Law 99-500; 100 Stat. 1783-292). These provisions require notification to the Committees on Appropriations before using funds appropriated in those Acts to transfer or relocate any activity from one installation to another.

Paragraph (22)(A) of section 101 amends 10 U.S.C. § 2834 by striking out subsection (b). Subsection (b) prohibits the Secretaries of the military departments from exercising their authority to execute agreements under which the Secretary of State provides housing in foreign countries for personnel of the military departments assigned to those countries, unless the Secretaries of those departments give prior notification to the appropriate congressional committees. The information in these notifications duplicates that in budgets submitted to Congress.

Paragraph (22)(B) of section 101 amends 10 U.S.C. § 2834 by redesignating subsection (c) as subsection (b).

Paragraph (22)(A) of section 101 amends 10 U.S.C. § 2854 by striking out the reference in subsection (a) to subsection (b) and by redesignating § 2854(a) as § 2854.

Paragraph (23)(B) of section 101 amends 10 U.S.C. § 2854 by striking out subsection (b). Subsection (b) prohibits the Secretaries of the military departments from exercising their authority to repair or replace damaged or destroyed military facilities if the cost of repair or replacement would exceed that for a minor military construction project, unless they give prior notification to the appropriate congressional committees. Such repairs and replacements do not increase real property inventory or reflect any changes in stationing or force structure. Accordingly, the Department of Defense believes that notification of these repairs and replacements are of little use to Congress.

Paragraph (24) of section 101 strikes out the last sentence of 10 U.S.C. § 4314. This sentence requires the Secretary of the Army to report annually to the Committees on Armed Services of the Senate and House of Representatives on the awarding of degrees of master of military art and science to graduates of the United States Army command and General Staff College.

Paragraph (25)(A) of section 101 amends 10 U.S.C. § 6956 by striking out subsection (a). Subsection (a) requires the Secretary of the Navy to notify each member of Congress annually of any vacancy that will occur at the United States Naval Academy in the following year for which the member is entitled to nominate candidates.

Paragraph (25)(B) of section 101 amends 10 U.S.C. § 6956 by redesignating subsections (b), (c), and (d) as subsections (a), (b), and (c), respectively.

Paragraph (26)(A) of section 101 repeals 10 U.S.C. § 7217. Section 7217 requires the Secretary of the Navy to submit an annual report to Congress on appropriations for the Department of the Navy for the preceding fiscal year.

Paragraph (26)(B) of section 101 strikes out the item relating to 10 U.S.C. § 7217 in the table of sections at the beginning of chapter 631 of title 10.

Paragraph (27) of section 101 strikes out 10 U.S.C. § 7308(c). Section 7308(c) provides that the Secretary of the Navy may not use his authority to transfer an obsolete or captured naval vessel to a state or nonprofit organization unless prior notice is given to Congress.

Paragraph (28) of section 101 strikes out the last sentence of 10 U.S.C. § 7309(b). This sentence prohibits the President from exercising his authority to contract for construction of a vessel or certain major components thereof in a foreign shipyard, unless the President gives prior notice to Congress.

Section 102

Section 102 strikes out the last sentence of 32 U.S.C. § 314(d). This sentence requires the Secretaries of the Army and the Air Force to submit abstracts to Congress each year of the reports that are sent to the Secretaries by the state adjutants general of the National Guard.

Section 103

Section 103 repeals provisions in title 37, United States Code.

Paragraph (1) of section 103 strikes out 37 U.S.C. §§ 301a(e), 301c(e). Section 301a(e) requires the Secretary of Defense to submit an annual report to Congress on the payment of aviation career incentive pay to certain members of the uniformed services. Section 301c(e) requires the Secretary of Defense to submit an annual report to Congress on the payment of submarine duty incentive pay to certain members of the Navy.

Paragraph (2) of section 103 strikes out the last sentence of 37 U.S.C. § 303a(c). This sentence requires the Secretary of Defense to report biennially to Congress on special pay for health professionals.

Paragraph (3) of section 103 strikes out 37 U.S.C. § 306(f). Section 306(f) requires the Secretary of Defense to make a report to Congress for any year in which special pay is paid under § 306 to certain officers performing critical duties of unusual responsibility.

Paragraph (4)(A3) of section 103 amends 37 U.S.C. § 308b by striking out subsection (e). Subsection (e) requires the Secretary of Defense to submit a report to Congress every three months on the payment of reenlistment bonuses to members of the Selected Reserve of the Ready Reserve.

Paragraph (4)(B) of section 103 amends 37 U.S.C. § 308b by redesignating subsections (f) and (g) as subsections (e) and (f), respectively.

Paragraph (5)(A) of section 103 amends 37 U.S.C. § 308c by striking out subsection (e). Subsection (e) requires the Secretary of Defense to submit a report to Congress every three months on the payment of enlishment bonuses to members of the Selected Reserve of the Ready Reserve.

Paragraph (5)(B) of section 103 amends 37 U.S.C. § 308c by redesignating subsection (f) as subsection (e).

Paragraph (6) of section 103 strikes out 37 U.S.C. § 310(d). Section 310(d) requires the Secretary of Defense to report annually to Congress on the administration of payment of hostile fire or imminent danger pay to members of the uniformed services under § 310.

Paragraph (7)(A) of section 103 amends 37 U.S.C. § 312b by striking out subsection (c). Subsection (c) requires the Secretary of the Navy to make an annual report to the Committees on Armed Services of the Senate and House of Representatives on the payment of bonuses to individuals who agree to participate in officer naval nuclear propulsion plant training.

Paragraph (7)(B) of section 103 amends 37 U.S.C. § 312b by redesignating subsection (d) as subsection (c).

Paragraph (8)(A) of section 103 amends 37 U.S.C. § 312c by striking out subsection (d). Subsection (D) requires the Secretary of the Navy to make an annual report to the Committees on Armed Services of the Senate and House of Representatives on the payment of bonuses to certain officers qualified for naval nuclear propulsion plant service.

Paragraph (8)(B) of section 103 amends 37 U.S.C. § 312c by redesignating subsection (e) as subsection (d).

Paragraph (9) of section 103 strikes out the last sentence of 37 U.S.C. § 1008(a). This sentence requires the President to submit an annual report to Congress on the adequacy of pay and allowances for members of the uniformed services. This report is not used as a basis for decision making on military compensation by either Congress or the executive branch. The automatic annual military pay raises provided for by law eliminated the need for such a report as a means of documenting the need for adjustments in compensation. Further, this report is in large part redundant with the report submitted to Congress on the quadrennial review of compensation for members of the uniformed services, which is required by § 1008(b).

Section 104

Section 104 repeals provisions in the National Defense Authorization Act for Fiscal Year 1987 (Public Law 99-661; 100 Stat. 3816).

Paragraph (1)(A) of section 104 amends § 1207(g) of Public Law 99-661 by striking out paragraph (3)(C). Paragraph (3)(C) provides that the Secretary of Defense shall include, in the semiannual reports to Congress on meeting the goal in § 1207(a) for awarding defense contracts to minority entities, a separate description for blacks, native Americans, Hispanics, Asian Pacific Americans, and other minorities of the percentage and dollar amounts of contracts awarded and the number of entities involved. The reporting requirement in § 1207(g)(3)(C) necessitates the generation of a large volume of records. These records are not created in the normal course of contracting with minority organizations, and are much more detailed than necessary to measure progress toward meeting the minority contract award goal in § 1207(a).

Paragraph (1)(B)(i) of section 104 amends § 1207(g) of Public Law 99-661 by striking out paragraph (4)(B). Paragraph (4)(B) provides that the Secretary of Defense shall include, in the annual reports to Congress on meeting the goal in § 1207(a) for awarding contracts to minority entities, detailed information on failures of such entities to perform in accordance with contractual cost and technical requirements. The collection of such detailed information involves an administratively burdensome and expensive review of every minority contract to determine if all cost and technical requirements have been met. Further, the information available is often incomplete, because on many contracts the Government has no right to obtain information on estimated costs to the contractor or on amounts expended by the contractor.

Paragraph (1)(B)(ii) of section 104 amends § 1207(g) of Public Law 99-661 by redesignating paragraph (4)(C) as paragraph (4)(B).

Paragraph (2) of section 104 repeals § 1362 of Public Law 99-661. Section 1362 prohibits the closure, transfer, or relocation of the correctional facilities at Fort Riley, Kansas, unless the Secretary of Defense gives 180 days advance notice to Congress. The Department of Defense believes that § 1362 infringes unduly on the Department's ability to manage its resources efficiently.

Section 105

Section 105 repeals provisions in the Department of Defense Authorization Act, 1986 (Public Law 99-145; 99 Stat. 583).

Paragraph (1)(A) of section 105 amends § 913 of Public Law 99-145 by striking out subsection (b). Subsection (b) requires the Secretary of Defense to report to Congress each year on establishing and meeting goals for making defense procurements that are competitive procurements.

Paragraph (1)(B) of section 105 amends § 913 of Public Law 99-145 by redesignating subsection (c) as subsection (b).

Paragraph (2) of section 105 repeals § 915 of public Law 99-145. Section 915 requires the Secretary of Defense to report annually to Congress on his plan for performing cost analyses for major defense acquisition programs.

Paragraph (3)(A) of section 105 amends § 1456 of Public Law 99-145 by redesignating § 1456(a) of § 1456.

Paragraph (3)(B) of section 105 amends § 1456 of Public Law 99-145 by striking out subsection (b). Subsection (b) requires the Secretary of Defense to report to Congress every five years on the status of the domestic textile and apparel defense industrial base.

Section 106

Section 106 repeals a provision in the Department of Defense Authorization Act, 1985 (Public Law 98-525; 98 Stat. 2492).

Paragraph (1) of section 106 amends § 1002(d)(2) of Public Law 98-525 by striking out subparagraph (A). Subparagraph (A) requires the Secretary of Defense to make an annual report to Congress on the status and cost of the United States commitment to the North Atlantic Treaty Organization (NATO). The Department of Defense believes that the costs in this report have little utility. They obscure the fact that the bulk of United States forces have worldwide missions, and this makes it analytically misleading to single out specific costs as being attributable solely to membership in NATO.

Paragraph (2) of section 106 amends § 1002(d)(2) of Public Law 98-525 by redesignating subparagraphs (B) and (C) as subparagraphs (A) and (B), respectively.

Paragraph (3) of section 106 amends § 1002(d)(2) of Public Law 98-525 by striking out the reference in subparagraph (a) (as redesignated by section 106(2) of the bill) to the reporting requirement in "subparagraph (A)" and inserting in lieu thereof a reference to the reporting requirement in "paragraph (1)" of § 1002(d).

Paragraph (4) of section 106 amends § 1002(d)(2) of Public Law 98-525 by striking out the reference in subparagraph (B) (as redesignated by section 106(2) of the bill) to a reporting requirement in "subparagraph (B)" and inserting in lieu thereof a reference to a reporting requirement in "subparagraph (A)" of § 1002(d)(2).

Section 107

Section 107 repeals § 808 of the Department of Defense Appropriation Authorization Act, 1976 (Public Law 94-106; 10 U.S.C. 7291 note). Section 808 requires the Secretary of Defense to submit an annual report to the Committees on Armed Services of the Senate and House of Representatives on any changes in the five year naval ship new construction and conversion program.

Section 108

Section 108 strikes out the last sentence of § 506(d) of Public Law 91-441 (50 U.S.C. 1518). This sentence provides that an immediate report should be made to Congress if a chemical or biological warfare agent is disposed of without having first been made harmless, where such disposal is accomplished in an emergency to save human life.

Section 109

Section 109 strikes out the last two sentences of the first section of Public Law 85-804 (50 U.S.C. 1431). These sentences prohibit an agency that exercises national defense functions from using its emergency authority to make certain procurements without regard to contract laws, unless there is an advance notification to the Committees on Armed Services of the Senate and House of Representatives.

Section 110

Section 110 strikes out § 802(e) of the Military Construction Authorization Act, 1981 (Public Law 96-418; 10 U.S.C. 2431 note). Section 802(e) requires the Secretary of Defense to make an annual report to the Committees on Armed Services and on Appropriations of the Senate and House of Representatives on assistance provided by the Secretary, under § 802, to communities near MX Missile System sites or near the East Coast Trident Base and to the states in which those communities are located.

Section 111

Section 111 repeals provisions in the Department of Defense Appropriations Act, 1986 (as contained in section 101(b) of Public Law 99-190 (99 Stat. 1185)).

Paragraph (1) of section 111 strikes out the clause in § 8005(j) of Public Law 99-190 that requires the Secretary of Defense to notify Congress before obligating funds to pay for an unusual cost overrun incident to overhaul, maintenance, or repair for a ship inducted into an industrial fund activity or contracted for in a prior fiscal year.

Paragraph (2) of section 111 strikes out § 8009(d) of Public Law 99-190. Section 8009(d) requires the Secretary of Defense to notify and report to Congress on the use of the following authorities: to exempt departmental funds and contract authorizations from the apportionment requirements in 31 U.S.C. § 1512; to provide for the cost of an airborne alert as an expense that is excepted, under 41 U.S.C. § 11(a), from the restriction that a Government procurement may be made only when authorized by law or under an adequate appropriation; and to provide for the cost of an increase in the number of members of the armed forces, beyond the number for which funds are appropriated, as an excepted expense under 41 U.S.C. § 11(a).

Section 112

Section 112 repeals provisions in § 18 of the Military Selective Service Act (50 U.S.C. App. 468).

Paragraph (1)(A) of section 112 amends § 18(a) of the Military Selective Service Act by striking out a clause in the first sentence. This clause prohibits the President from using his authority under the sentence to order a private facility to sell certain articles to the armed forces, unless the Committees on Armed Services of the Senate and House of Representatives have received advance notice.

Paragraph (1)(B) of section 112 amends § 18(a) of the Military Selective Service Act by striking out the second sentence. This sentence provides guidance in computing the amount of advance notice that must be given to congressional committees under the clause in § 18(a) that is stricken out by section 112(1)(A) of the bill.

Paragraph (2)(A) of section 112 amends § 18(h) of the Military Selective Service Act by redesignating subsection (h)(1) as subsection (h).

Paragraph (2)(B) of section 112 amends § 18(h) of the Military Selective Service Act by striking out paragraph (2). Section 18(h)(2) provides that the President shall make semiannual reports to Congress on the share of United States steel production that he has required producers to make available to individuals or firms under § 18(h) for use in filling military orders for steel products.

Section 113

Section 113 repeals § 309 of the Defense Production Act of 1950 (50 U.S.C. App. 2099). Section 309 requires the President to make an annual report to the Committee on Banking, Finance and Urban Affairs of the House of Representatives and the Committee on Banking, Housing, and Urban Affairs of the Senate on the impact of offsets on United States defense preparedness and on selected aspects of the United States economy. Reports submitted recently under § 309 have shown that the impact of foreign military sales offsets on defense exports and overall exports is slight.

Section 114

Section 114 strikes out § 514(e) of the Foreign Assistance Act of 1961 (22 U.S.C. 2321h(e)). Section 514(e) requires the President to report to Congress whenever United States defense articles valued at more than $10,000,000 are used abroad during any fiscal year to create a new war reserve stockpile or add to an existing stockpile for a foreign country. With regard to countries that are not members of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization (NATO), the report under § 514(e) duplicates information that is provided to Congress for its use in setting the annual ceiling on stockpiling under § 514(b)(1). Further, based on the lack of congressional inquiries arising from the reporting requirement under § 514(e) during the past 10 years, the Department of Defense believes the requirement to be of minimal utility at best.

Section 115

Section 115 repeals a provision in § 910 of the Water Resources Development Act of 1986 (33 U.S.C. 2287).

Paragraph (1) of section 115 amends § 910 of the Water Resources Development Act of 1986 by striking out subsection (b). Subsection (b) requires the Secretary of the Army to submit an annual report to the Committee on Public Works and Transportation of the House of Representatives and the Committee on Environment and Public Works of the Senate on planning, engineering, and design by the Chief of Engineers for water resources development projects. This report duplicates information provided in support of the budget.

Paragraph (2) of section 115 amends § 910 of the Water Resources Development Act of 1986 by redesignating subsection (c) as subsection (b).

Section 116

Section 116 repeals § 12 of the Water Resources Development Act of 1974 (33 U.S.C. 579). Section 12 requires the Secretary of the Army to submit to Congress annually a list of civil waterway projects that have been authorized for at least eight years without any appropriations in the last eight years, and which the Secretary determines should no longer be authorized. This list essentially duplicates the one that the Secretary of the Army must submit to Congress under § 1001(b)(2) of the Water Resources Development Act of 1986 (Public Law 99-662; 33 U.S.C. 579a(b)(2)), which identifies water resources projects that have been authorized, but for which there has been no obligation of funds during the preceding 10 fiscal years.

Section 117

Section 117 repeals a provision in § 221 of the Flood Control Act of 1970 (42 U.S.C. 1962d-5b).

Paragraph (1) of section 117 amends § 221 of the Flood Control Act of 1970 by striking out subsection (e). Subsection (e) requires the Secretary of the Army to maintain information on agreements with local authorities for construction by the Army of water resources projects, and to report annually to Congress on the status of those agreements. The Department of Defense believes that the excellent record in the performance of these agreements makes it unnecessary to submit recurring reports on their status; information could be provided to Congress in response to specific requests.

Paragraph (2) of section 117 amends § 221 of the Flood Control Act of 1970 by redesignating subsection (f) as subsection (e).

TITLE II—MODIFICATIONS

Title II amends certain statutory provisions that require the submission to Congress or to a committee of Congress of recurring reports, notifications, or studies concerning the national defense. These amendments are made by recommendation of the Department of Defense under section 602(b)(2)(D) of the Goldwater-Nichols Department of Defense Reorganization Act of 1986 (Public Law 99-433; 10 U.S.C. 111 note), the pertinent requirements of which are described in the first paragraph of this sectional analysis, under the heading "TITLE I—REPEALS". The amendments in title II are intended to make the affected statutory reports, notifications, and studies more meaningful to Congress and to facilitate their preparation by the Department of Defense. Following is an analysis of each amendment in title II.

Section 201

Section 201 amends provisions in title 10, United States Code.

Paragraph (1) of section 201 amends 10 U.S.C. § 115(b)(3)(A) to change from February 15 to April 1 the date by which the Secretary of Defense must submit to Congress the report recommending the end strength for the active armed forces and for the civilian personnel of the Department of Defense for the following fiscal year. This report reflects the President's budget, and often requires extensive and time consuming revisions to conform to unforeseen last minute changes in the budget. Submission of the report on April 1 will allow for orderly preparation based on availability of more firm budget data, and will result in a more complete and useful document.

Paragraph (2) of section 201 amends 10 U.S.C. § 662(b) to provide that the report which the Secretary of Defense must make to Congress at least semiannually on the promotion rates of officers in joint duty assignments shall include information on any failure of those promotion rates to meet the objectives set forth in § 662(a), and information on what action is taken to prevent further failures. Currently, § 662(b) requires such information to be provided in the form of a separate notification to Congress. Including this information in the periodic reports would place it in the context in which it can best be understood, while also reducing the number of congressional notifications.

Paragraphs (3) (A) and (B) of section 201 amend 10 U.S.C. § 2215(a), (d) to provide that the report which the Secretary of Defense must submit to the Committee on Armed Services of the Senate and House of Representatives on excess unobligated departmental funds shall be submitted once a year, concurrent with the President's budget, rather than three times a year. The new timing would ensure that this report on excess funds, or savings, coincides with the budgetary submission on which the savings are premised, thus making the report more meaningful. The reduced frequency of the report would decrease the administrative burden of preparation.

Paragraph (4) of section 201 amends 10 U.S.C. § 2434(a)(2) so that the Secretary of Defense may grant approval for full-scale engineering development, or production and deployment, of a major defense acquisition program at any time after having submitted a manpower estimate of the program to the Committees on Armed Services of the Senate and House of Representatives. Currently under § 2434(a)(2) the Secretary must withhold such approval until at least 30 days after submission of the manpower estimate to the Committees. The requirement to wait at least 30 days can result in costly delays in the execution of programs.

Paragraph (5) of section 201 amends 10 U.S.C. § 2457 (d) to provide that the report of the Secretary of Defense to Congress on North Atlantic Treaty Organization (NATO) standardization and interoperability shall be biennial rather than annual. This would be consistent with the Department's biennial budget process and would provide Congress with ample information on NATO standardization and interoperability.

Paragraph (6)(A) of section 201 amends 10 U.S.C. § 2662(b), to change from $5,000 to $25,000 the lower limit of certain real property transactions on which the Secretaries of the military departments must report annually to the Committees on Armed Services of the Senate and House of Representatives. This change in the current threshold takes into account inflation occurring after it was enacted, and will thus reduce reporting requirements while continuing to provide for submission of information to Congress on the financially more significant transactions.

Paragraph (7) of section 201 amends 10 U.S.C. § 2687(b)(1) so that notifications by the Department of Defense to the Committees on Armed Services of the Senate and House of Representatives on certain proposed closures or realignments of military installations would no longer be postponed until the submission of a request for authorization of appropriations, but rather would be made at any time after the particular proposals have been developed. This would generally provide for much earlier submission of information to Congress and for better advance planning to implement the proposals.

Paragraph (8) of section 201 amends 10 U.S.C. § 2853(d)(3) to clarify that certain limitations on reductions in the scope of military construction projects or on increases in the costs of such projects become inapplicable 21 days after the Department of Defense has notified the appropriate congressional committees of such a proposed reduction or increase, or when each of the committees has indicated approval, whichever occurs earlier. The current statutory text does not include the "whichever occurs earlier" language, and has sometimes been interpreted so that the limitations continue to apply long after the 21 day notification period, while congressional committees have neither indicated approval nor disapproval of the proposals. This has caused costly delays.

Section 202

Section 202 amends provisions in the Department of Defense Authorization Act, 1985 (Public Law 98-525; 98 Stat. 2492).

Paragraph (1) of section 202 amends § 1002(d)(1) of Public Law 98-525 to provide that the report which the Secretary of Defense is required to submit to the Committees on Armed Services of the Senate and House of Representatives on certain munitions and aircraft shelters for NATO shall be a biennial rather than an annual report. Biennial submission would be consistent with the Department's budget process, would be of sufficient frequency to ensure that the report is current, and would reduce the administrative burden of preparing the report.

Paragraph (1)(B) of section 202 amends § 1002(d)(2) of Public Law 98-525 (as amended by section 106 of this bill) by adding a new subparagraph (A)(xi). This expands the scope of the report on NATO that is made biennial by section 202(1)(A) of this bill so that the report covers information on selected indicators of NATO capability in addition to those currently listed in subparagraphs (B)(i)-(X) of § 1002(d)(2). The expanded report would give Congress a more complete description of the military status of NATO.

Paragraph (2) of section 202 amends § 1003(c) of Public Law 98-525 to change the timing and frequency of the report on allied contributions to the common defense which the Secretary of Defense is required to submit to Congress. Currently the report must be submitted by March 1 of each year; this is changed to April 1 of every other year. The new timing and frequency would be consistent with the Department's biennial budget process, would continue to ensure that the report is current, and would reduce the administrative burden of preparing the report.

Section 203

Section 202 amends § 21(c)(2) of the Arms Export Control Act (22 U.S.C. 2761(c)(2)) to extend, from 48 hours to five days, the time within which the President must report to Congress on the existence of or a change in status of significant hostilities or terrorist acts which may endanger American lives or property, and which involve a country in which United States personnel are performing security assistance functions. More than 48 hours are generally required to obtain accurate, complete information and to develop prudent assessments of the danger which hostilities or terrorist acts may pose to American lives or property, and to reach a coordinated judgment in the executive branch that a report is legally required under § 21(c)(2). Extending the time for submitting the report would enable more accurate and comprehensive preparation.●

By Mr. BAUCUS:

S. 2175. A bill to amend the Solid Waste Disposal Act to extend the compliance date of financial responsibility requirements and to establish a national program to provide loan guarantees to small businesses for the closure and replacement of underground storage tanks; to the Committee on Environment and Public Works.

UNDERGROUND STORAGE TANK POLLUTION PREVENTION AND ASSISTANCE ACT

● Mr. BAUCUS. Mr. President, I rise today to introduce the Underground Storage Tank Pollution Prevention and Assistance Act. This legislation is needed to help small service stations—especially those in rural areas—comply with Federal underground storage tank requirements.

Mr. President, last week I chaired a hearing to review—among other things—the problems that many tank owners are having in complying with the UST Program.

The general sense from the long list of witnesses that testified at the hearing—witnesses with diverse backgrounds I might add—is that there are serious problems that we must address if the UST Program is going to work.

Let me spend a moment to describe the key problems that were on the minds of the experts at the hearing, and quite frankly on my mind and many of my colleagues.

First, the Underground Storage Tank Program is not working as we had planned. We envisioned a program that would require leak detection first, tank upgrade and replacement next and financial assurance, in that order. Instead, EPA has implemented a program where most underground tank owners need insurance even before they are required to install leak detection equipment.

The problem is that tank owners can't get insurance until they upgrade or replace their tanks or otherwise ensure there is no contamination. Most insurance companies generally require a clean bill of health before they will write a policy. Other insurers will write policies at sites that may have some contamination but the insurance premiums may be as much as $15,000 per tank.

A related problem is that many tank owners simply can't get the money they need to clean up prior releases. Nor can they get the money needed to test their tanks for leaks, or to upgrade or replace their tanks. It seems that some lenders are unwilling to loan money to tank owners out of fear of future liability.

The Petroleum Marketers Association of America sums up the problems best, noting that tank owners: "are caught in a catch-22 situation in their efforts to make the required upgrades for their underground storage tanks and obtain pollution liability insurance for their systems * * *. Insurance companies are telling marketers they must make the upgrades before they will be considered for insurance * * * [but] insurance companies, fearful of what they believe to be potential environmental liability problems, are reluctant to make loans to marketers for the necessary upgrades."

Still another problem is that pollution insurance—which will be required this April for some tank owners, and this October for all others—may not be as readily available as we had hoped. Although 15 private companies offer some form of insurance, and 34 States have insurance funds, recent announcements from the 2 largest insurers of tank insurance—Federated Mutual and Petromark—call into question the short-term availability of insurance.

Federated, has decided to stop writing policies in States that have set up State insurance funds. And Petromark, earlier this month learned that it has serious financial problems that threatens its existence. As a result, Petromark will not sell any new policies, at least until its financial problems are resolved.

These two decisions have created a new wrinkle in the insurance market. One which will make insurance more difficult to get—at least in the short term.

Mr. President, I have received two letters that I ask to be printed in the RECORD at the conclusion of my remarks that illustrates the difficulty tank owners are having.

Mr. President, we need to help tank owners get the money they need to upgrade or replace their tank systems so they can get pollution insurance—and so they can prevent future contamination.

Unfortunately, we are too late to prevent leaks at some 200,000 to 600,000 tanks that are leaking now. Many of these tanks are made of unprotected bare steel and have already corroded.

In my home State of Montana, one-third of the 11,000 tanks are considered high risk tanks. They are made of uncoated steel and have been around for more than 15 years. These tanks may be storing millions of gallons of petroleum, solvents and other chemicals that will leak as tanks corrode and valves loosen.

For some communities in Montana its already too late. Some tanks are already leaking. No one knows for sure how many have leaked but tanks at 250 facilities—presently under State investigation—are leaking and contaminating the soil and groundwater. In fact, in several communities, the municipal water supply wells have been closed after being contaminated from leaking underground storage tanks.

Mr. President, Montana's Department of Health and Environmental Sciences recently sent my office a letter describing real life problems that have occurred in several Montana communities from leaking underground storage tanks. I ask that this letter be printed in the RECORD at the conclusion of my remarks.

Mr. President, leaking underground storage tanks clearly present a very real threat to our health and environment. We must clean up existing contamination and protect against new leaks.

Unfortunately, many small businesses are fighting an uphill battle to comply with the tank requirements we have established. If we are to protect everyone, and prevent new problems from occurring, we must help these owners solve their problems.

The legislation that I am introducing today does just that. It will help small economically disadvantaged businesses meet all of the underground storage tank requirements.

It assures that these businesses—convenience stores, mom and pop gas stations and others—will be able to stay in business. And it assures that these businesses will provide first class environmental protection to the citizens that depend on their services.

The bill ensures this by establishing a loan guarantee program. It authorizes the EPA to guarantee loans up to $200,000, made by lenders, to small disadvantaged businesses. In certain special circumstances, a tank owner could even get a grant to offset some of the regulatory costs.

This program should make it much easier for small disadvantaged businesses to get the financing necessary to replace their unprotected bare steel tanks with the newest tanks available.

The funding for this program will come from the LUST Trust Fund. As my colleagues know, the LUST Trust Fund is currently used to clean up contamination that has already occurred. This bill simply allows the fund to also be used to guarantee loans to small disadvantaged businesses so they can replace their tanks before they leak. Its like preventive medicine.

The bill also extends the compliance date of the financial responsibility requirements by 1 year.

Mr. President, it is true that the law currently provides EPA with authority to suspend enforcement if insurance is not available. However, a suspension could place some tank owners in a vulnerable position with their creditors. Some creditors require compliance with all laws and regulations as a condition for further credit or supplies.

A suspension of enforcement would remove the threat of Government penalties but tank owners without insurance would still be out of compliance. Therefore, this bill extends the compliance date rather than suspending enforcement.

There are some who do not believe that an extension is needed—that it will send a signal that Congress isn't serious about requiring insurance. Others feel that 6 months is all that is needed. Still others argue that one year is not enough.

Let me assure everyone. Congress is serious about pollution insurance. Tank owners must be financially responsible for cleaning up contamination from their tanks. However, given the current disarray and transition within the tank insurance industry I am convinced that an extension is needed.

I believe that a 1-year extension should provide ample time for more insurance to become available. One more year should give more States the time they need to get their insurance funds in place and approved by EPA. And it should provide the time for more tanks to be tested, upgraded, or replaced so they are more insurable.

Mr. President, we must move forward in implementing the Underground Storage Tank Program. It is important to our well-being that we do. This bill, will help many tank owners get on the right track so that we will make real, measured progress.

Our latest information tells us that we have serious health and environmental problems from leaking underground storage tanks. But it also tells us that we are having serious problems with the UST Program itself. That it's not working.

Without this legislation we could face even more serious environmental problems than we do today. And we could face severe economic disruptions as well—especially to our small mom and pop services. Without this bill, I could easily see a situation where many small stations close up shop but leave behind a huge environmental mess.

This legislation will keep these services open and operating in an environmentally sound manner.

I urge my colleagues to support this bill. I ask unanimous consent that the bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 2175

Be it enacted in the Senate and the House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SHORT TITLE AND TABLE OF CONTENTS

SEC. 1. (a) SHORT TITLE.—This Act may be cited as the "Underground Storage Tank Pollution Prevention and Assistance Act".

(b) TABLE OF CONTENTS.—

Sec. 1 Short Title and Table of Contents.
Sec. 2 Congressional Policy.
Sec. 3 Definitions.
Sec. 4 Underground Storage Tank Loan Guarantee Program.
Sec. 5 Pollution Prevention.
Sec. 6 Leaking Underground Storage Tank Trust Fund Amendment.
Sec. 7 Compliance Dates.

CONGRESSIONAL POLICY

SEC. 2. It is the policy of the Congress to assist in the closure and replacement of underground storage tanks and to assure that qualified small businesses are not prevented from such efforts due to lack of adequate capital. Accordingly, it is the policy of the Congress to provide guarantees of loans made for such purposes.

DEFINITIONS

SEC. 3. Section 9001 of the Solid Waste Disposal Act is amended by adding at the end thereof—

"(9) the term "small business" refers to an owner of an underground storage tank who owns a single such tank or who owns not more than 12 such tanks which are located at a single facility, as defined in subparagraph (D) of paragraph (6) of subsection (h) of section 9003 of this subtitle.

"(10) The term "essential community service" refers to an underground storage tank or several tanks at a facility which is deemed by the agency designated pursuant to subsection (b) of section 9002 of this subtitle to be essential to the continued economic viability of the community or area in which the tank is located. At a minimum, any tank or facility which is currently engaged in the distribution of petroleum to the public and is located more than 50 miles from another underground storage tank currently engaged in the distribution of petroleum to the public may be deemed to be an essential service."

"(11) The term "threatened release" refers to a circumstance where, in the judgment of the Administrator, the failure to take corrective action will result in the release of petroleum."

UNDERGROUND STORAGE TANK LOAN GUARANTEE PROGRAM

SEC. 4. Subtitle I of the Solid Waste Disposal Act is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new section—

"UNDERGROUND STORAGE TANK LOAN GUARANTEE PROGRAM

"SEC. 9011(a) ENCOURAGEMENT OF CLOSURE AND REMOVAL.—(1) In order to encourage the closure and replacement of underground storage, the Administrator is authorized to guarantee, and to enter into commitments to guarantee, principal and interest on loans made by lenders to qualified small business concerns, for the purpose of—

"(A) closure of underground storage tanks, consistent with the requirements of sections 9003(c)(5) and 9004(a)(5) of this subtitle; and

"(B) replacement of underground storage tanks, consistent with the requirements of section 9003(e).

"(b) AMOUNTS OF LOAN GUARANTEE.—(1) Any guarantee under this section shall apply only to so much of the principal amount of the loan involved as does not exceed 90 percentum of the aggregate cost of the activity with respect to which the loan is made.

"(2) The amount of the guarantee of any loan shall not exceed $200,000.

"(3) The aggregate amount of guarantees outstanding under this section at any one time shall not exceed $100,000,000.

"(c) TERMS AND CONDITIONS.—Loan guarantees under this section shall be on such terms and conditions as the Administrator determines, except that a guarantee shall be made under this section only if—

"(1) the loan bears interest at a rate not to exceed such annual percent on the principal obligation outstanding as the Administrator determines to be reasonable, taking into account the range of interest rates prevailing in the private sector for similar loans and risks by the United States;

"(2) the terms of such loan require full repayment over a period not to exceed 20 years;

"(3) in the judgment of the Administrator, the amount of the loan (when combined with amounts available to the qualified borrower from other sources) will be sufficient to carry out the activity with respect to which the loan is made;

"(4) in the judgment of the Administrator, there is reasonable assurance of repayment of the loan by the qualified borrower; and

"(5) the Administrator finds that no other reasonable means of financing or refinancing is reasonably available to the applicant.

"(d) PAYMENT OF PRINCIPAL AND INTEREST.—(1) With respect to any loan guaranteed pursuant to this section, the Administrator is authorized to enter into a contract to pay, and to pay, the lender for and on behalf of the borrower the principal and interest charges which become due and payable on the unpaid balance of such loan if the Administrator finds that—

"(A) the borrower is unable to meet principal and interest charges, that it is in the public interest to permit the borrower to continue to pursue the purposes of the project, and that the probable net cost to the Federal Government in paying such principal will be less than that which would result in the event of a default; and

"(B) the amount of such principal and interest charges which the Administrator is authorized to pay shall be no greater than the amount of principal and interest which the borrower is obligated to pay under the loan agreement.

"(2) In the event of any default by a qualified borrower on a guaranteed loan, the Administrator is authorized to make payment in accordance with the guarantee, and the Attorney General shall take such action as may be appropriate to recover the amounts of such payments, including any payment of principal and interest under paragraph (1) from such assets of the defaulting borrower as are associated with the activity with respect to which the loan was made or from any other surety included in the terms of the guarantee.

"(3) Such amounts as may be returned to the United States pursuant to this subsection shall be paid to the Leaking Underground Storage Tank Trust Fund established pursuant to section 9508 of chapter 98 of subchapter (A) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986, as amended.

"(e) ESSENTIAL SERVICE MAINTENANCE.—(1) The Administrator may make a grant to a small business, in conjunction with a loan pursuant to this section, for up to 50 percent of the cost of closure and replacement of underground storage tanks if the Administrator determines that–

"(A) the small business is an essential community service;

"(B) not less than three private lending institutions have declined to provide a loan for the closure and replacement of underground storage tanks as guaranteed pursuant to this section; and

"(C) such assistance is in the public interest.

"(f) SEVEN YEAR LIMIT.—No loan guarantee shall be made, or contracts entered pursuant to this section, after the expiration of the 5-year period following the date of enactment of this section.

"(g) REPORTS.—The Administrator shall submit to the Congress annually upon the completion of the appropriate accounting period a report describing the financed operations of the program authorized by this section and making such recommendations for the improved management of the program as he determines to be appropriate.

"(h) PLEDGE OF FULL FAITH AND CREDIT OF UNITED STATES.—The full faith and credit of the United States is pledged to the payment of all obligations incurred under this section."

POLLUTION PREVENTION PROJECTS

SEC. 5. "(a) Section 9003(h)(2) of the Solid Waste Disposal Act is amended by inserting in the second sentence after the term "release" the phrase "or threatened release."

"(b) Section 9003(h)(6)(A) of the Solid Waste Disposal Act is amended by inserting after the term "release" the phrase "or threatened release."

LEAKING UNDERGROUND STORAGE TANK TRUST FUND AMENDMENT

SEC. 6. Section 9508 of Chapter 98 of Subchapter A of the Internal Revenue Code is amended by deleting the period at the end of subsection (c)(1) and adding at the end thereof "and the loan guarantee and principal and interest payment program authorized by section 9011 of such Act, including the payment of administrative expenses incurred in connection therewith".

COMPLIANCE DATES

SEC. 7. COMPLIANCE DATE.—Section 9003(f)(3) of the Solid Waste Disposal Act is amended by adding at the end the following:

"Owners and operators shall be in compliance with regulations promulgated under subsections (c) and (d) of this section not later than April 26, 1991 for all petroleum marketing firms owning 13-99 underground storage tanks at more than one facility, and not later than October 26, 1991 for persons owning 1-12 underground storage tanks."

FIRST NATIONAL BANK,
Bozeman, MT, February 15, 1990.

Hon. MAX BAUCUS,
U.S. Senate, Washington DC.

DEAR SENATOR BAUCUS: Mr. John Taggart is the owner and operator of the Conoco Travel Shop near Bozeman, Montana and has been a good customer of this bank for many years.

John and I met today regarding his commercial loan account with our bank and the future of his business. During the course of our discussion, I became much more concerned about the enormous liability we lenders have as it pertains to financing of retail gasoline stations due to federal laws concerning leakage of underground gasoline storage tanks.

As a result of this increased liability we lenders are forced to shoulder, I foresee a substantial decrease in willingness on the part of lenders nationwide, to loan money to retail gasoline station operators for testing and clean up of their existing locations, construction of new facilities or remodeling their present facilities. I am sure you recognize that ultimately the consumer and small business owner will suffer from this federal legislation.

Max, please understand I am concerned about leakage of underground gasoline tanks and the contamination of our ground water and soil. I believe lenders across the nation share my interest in providing the necessary loan funds for testing and clean up, if our liability is negated or substantially eliminated.

As I see it, Congress has the choice to relax the liability we lenders face or drive the price of gasoline even higher with substantially fewer small business operators willing to sell gasoline.

Thank you for your consideration.

Sincerely,

ROBERT A. NYSTUEN,
Vice President.

Re pollution liability.

JOHN TAGGART,
Conoco Travel Shoppe,
Huffine Lane, Bozeman, MT.

DEAR JOHN: I've contacted all the companies I represent including the one that currently writes the insurance on your business and I cannot find a market for pollution liability for you. I have heard of several risk retention groups. However, I'm not sure they have the financial strength to handle such a volatile area of insurance. I've had dealings in the past with Federated Insurance and their pollution coverage and found them to be almost pulling out of the market due to such poor loss experience.

If I hear of a market for pollution, I'll be glad to research it for you. At the present time, I'm closing my file regarding pollution liability for you.

Best Regards,

Re underground storage tank program.

CLIFF ROTHENSTEIN,
Aide ot Senator Max Baucus,
Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. ROTHENSTEIN: Enclosed is some material you requested by phone today regarding leaking underground storage tanks (USTS) in Montana. I have included a copy of a Quarterly Report that we recently submitted to EPA that summarizes numbers of leaking UST sites for various categories. There are currently about 250 leaking UST sites that our office is involved with; there are approximately 9,700 UST facilities inventoried in the state. Our office has been receiving about 20 to 30 reports of new leaking UST sites per month in Montana. As I mentioned to you on the phone, the leaking tank sites range in extent of contamination from minor spills/overfills to larger leaks that have impacted drinking water supplies or caused gasoline vapors to enter buildings.

Also attached are some excerpts from reports on several leaking tank sites in Montana that cover a variety of impacts. Included are:

Lewistown; State Fish Hatchery; contaminated groundwater discovered when an abandoned UST was removed; located near Big Spring which is the municipal water supply source for Lewistown.

Livingston; Tracy's Chevron gasoline pipeline leak; contaminated groundwater and caused vapor problems in three business buildings in downtown Livingston.

Judith Gap, groundwater contamination that closed down two municipal water supply wells resulting from leaking UST.

Poplar groundwater contamination from leaking USTS that entered city sewer lines and caused vapor problems in several buildings in Poplar.

Great Falls; US West Manhole; gasoline product entered telephone utility line causing vapor and maintenance problems.

West Glacier; gasoline vapors entering several residences in town from unknown source.

Augusta; groundwater contamination that impacted several private drinking wells in town; source appears to be from several leaking USTs.

In addition, a municipal water supply well in Cascade recently was closed down due to benzene contamination that may be from a leaking UST. A school in Baker had to be evacuated approximately two years ago because of gasoline vapors that came from a nearby service station's leaking UST. As you can see, there are a number of problems that can and do result from leaking USTs in Montana.

Please contact me if you have questions or need additional information.

Sincerely,

DOUG ROGNESS,
UST Program,
Corrective Action Manager.●

By Mr. LIEBERMAN (for himself, Mr. LAUTENBERG, Mr. CHAFEE, Mr. DURENBERGER, Mr. JEFFORDS, and Mr. WILSON):

S. 2176. A bill to provide better enforcement of the environmental laws of the United States, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Environment and Public Works.

POLLUTION PROSECUTION ACT

● Mr. LIEBERMAN. Mr. President, today joined by my colleagues, Senators LAUTENBERG, CHAFEE, DURENBERGER, JEFFORDS, and WILSON, I am introducing legislation designed to strengthen the criminal and civil enforcement program at the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency. Specifically, the legislation I am proposing would:

First, increase the number of EPA criminal investigators from 47 to 171;

Second, authorize EPA to hire 50 investigators to assist in the development and prosecution of civil cases;

Third, establish a National Enforcement Training Institute to train lawyers, inspectors, experts and investigators in the Nation's environmental laws;

Fourth, provide that the funding for these measures would come from the penalties collected by EPA in enforcing the Nation's environmental laws.

During my experience as Attorney General of Connecticut, I became acutely aware that having tough laws and regulations in place is only half the battle in achieving compliance with our environmental laws. Ensuring that the laws are enforced is the second critical part of any truly effective system of environmental laws.

One especially important and relatively new approach to environmental enforcement is the use of criminal penalties and imprisonment of individuals who violate our environmental laws.

Attorney General Dick Thornburgh recently stressed the importance of criminal prosecution as a means of deterring deliberate non-compliance with our environmental laws. He stated:

With callous disregard for our actions and an almost hostile view toward the environment, for nearly 200 years we seemed not to care and America took a very long journey down the road of indiscriminate pollution.

But now, thankfully, we do care. And even though it will take a very long time to undo the damage we have done, and even though it will be hugely expensive, and even though our success will be measured in increments—we are on a new course from which we shall not retreat.

Which means that, as a government and as a people, we must and will reamin vigilant. It means, as legal defenders of the health of the land, water and air, we must and will investigate, prosecute and convict polluters. And it means that, as individuals, we must never again say, 'So what?' to environmental crimes.

The laws we have enacted are tough. Under the Clean Water Act, the oil spill legislation passed by the Senate and the Clean Air Act provisions passed by the Senate Environment and Public Works Committee, a violator can go to jail and face large civil penalties for each violation.

But, while the Attorney General's words are tough, the program at EPA does not provide enough tools for EPA and the Justice Department to follow up on these words. The backbone of EPA's criminal enforcement program is its investigators, who provide EPA with the ability to collect evidence about environmental violations. Yet, unbelievably, EPA only has 47 criminal investigators throughout the nation—in essence, less than one investigator for each State. Some individual States have devoted almost that many investigators to enforcement of State criminal environmental laws. And other law enforcement agencies, such as the Fish and Wildlife Service, have more than four times the number of investigators which EPA has.

In testimony before the Environment and Public Works Committee last November, the former head of the Justice Department's environmental crimes section pointed out the weaknesses in EPA's program created by the woefully inadequate number of investigators. Currently, he testified, cases are investigated by EPA only after the violations are discovered and the harm is done. This means that EPA is always in a reactive posture and that few cases are the product of reasoned or targeted focus on suspected wrongdoing. He testified that, "as a consequence, EPA's limited resources are not directed toward uncovering practices which would provide the greatest public exposure and deterrence." However, with more criminal investigators, EPA would be able to bring cases that would have greater deterrent value than those currently being brought.

I am especially pleased that the proposal to increase the number of criminal investigators and to establish a National Enforcement Training Institute, as set forth in this proposed legislation, was supported in a resolution to the President from the National District Attorneys Association.

Even with the scant resources available, EPA's criminal enforcement program has been active in prosecuting environmental crimes. Since 1983, more than 400 defendants have either pled guilty or been convicted of environmental offenses; more than $23 million in fines have been paid; and more than 271 years of jail time have been imposed.

With the proposed increase in the number of criminal and civil investigators and an increased emphasis on training of law enforcement personnel, I am hopeful that the enforcement of our environmental laws will be strengthened and greater compliance with the laws will occur.

Finally, I believe the proposal to authorize EPA to hire 50 civil investigators will not only strengthen compliance with our laws, but will do so in a cost-effective manner. Investigators are used to track down witnesses; they also provide critical support for court cases. Currently, however, EPA is too often required to rely on outside consultants to only develop cases. As a member of the Governmental Affairs Committee, I have heard extensive testimony that EPA's reliance on contractors is not cost-effective. This legislation will help ensure that EPA's reliance on outside consultants is decreased.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the text of the bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 2176

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "Pollution Prosecution Act of 1990".

SEC. 2. EPA OFFICE OF CRIMINAL INVESTIGATION.

The Administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency (hereinafter referred to as the "Administrator") shall increase the number of professional criminal investigators assigned to its Office of Criminal Investigations in fiscal year 1991, and in each of the next following 4 fiscal years. The increase in each such fiscal year shall be at least equal to 30 percent of the aggregate number of criminal investigators assigned to that office during the prior fiscal year. For fiscal year 1991, and in each of the next following 4 fiscal years, the Administrator shall provide additional support staff to the Office of Criminal Investigations.

SEC. 3. CIVIL INVESTIGATORS.

The Administrator, as soon as practicable following the date of the enactment of this Act, but no later than fiscal year 1991, shall hire 50 civil investigators to assist the Office of Enforcement and Compliance Monitoring in developing and prosecuting civil and administrative actions and carrying out its other functions.

SEC. 4. NATIONAL TRAINING INSTITUTE.

The Administrator shall, as soon as practicable but no later than fiscal year 1991, establish within the Office of Enforcement and Compliance Monitoring the National Enforcement Training Institute. It shall be the function of the Institute, among others, to train Federal, State, and local lawyers, inspectors, civil and criminal investigators, and technical experts in the enforcement of the Nation's environmental laws.

SEC. 5. FUND.

(a) There is established in the Treasury of the United States the Pollution Prosecution Fund (hereinafter referred to as the "fund").

(b) Commencing with fiscal year 1991, and each fiscal year thereafter, the Secretary of the Treasury shall transfer to the fund an amount equal to the greater of (1) $10,000,000, or (2) an amount determined by the Secretary to be equal to 50 percent of all moneys (other than moneys specifically earmarked by law for other purposes) deposited in the general revenues of the Treasury during the preceding fiscal year from penalties imposed in connection with the violation of laws administered by the Environmental Protection Agency.

(c) Moneys in the fund shall be available, in such amounts as are provided in appropriation Acts, for use in carrying out the provisions of this Act. Moneys in the fund, to the extent determined by the Administrator to be in excess of the amounts needed for purposes of this Act, shall be returned to the general revenues of the Treasury.

(d) Nothing in this Act shall be construed as reducing or otherwise modifying or limiting any other authorization for appropriations available to the Environmental Protection Agency.

SEC. 6. AUTHORIZATION.

For the purpose of meeting the initial needs of this Act for fiscal year 1991, there is authorized to be appropriated $10,000,000.●

● Mr. LAUTENBERG. Mr. President, I join Senator LIEBERMAN in introducing the Pollution Prosecution Act of 1990. This legislation recognizes that our environmental laws do not work if they are not vigorously enforced.

The bill aims at enhancing EPA enforcement capabilities in a number of ways. First, it increases the number of EPA criminal investigators from 47 to 171. Second, it authorizes EPA to hire 50 investigators to assist in the development and prosecution of civil cases. Third, it establishes a National Enforcement Training Institute to provide training in the enforcement of the Nation's environmental laws for Federal, State, and local lawyers, inspectors, civil and criminal investigators, and technical experts.

Provisions in this bill enjoy important support from the National District Attorneys Association, as was indicated in their November 1989 resolution. This support is not surprising because the bill's author, Senator LIEBERMAN, was himself a distinguished law enforcement official in his prior position as attorney general of Connecticut. Testimony before the Subcommittee on Toxic Substances, Environmental Oversight, and Research & Development particularly noted the problems caused by understaffing. A former Justice Department official noted how the number of criminal investigators currently available was limiting the deterrence capability of EPA enforcement.

Better enforcement training and staffing will result in more effective implementation of our environmental laws. The measure seeks to accomplish these improvements by using funds deposited in the Treasury from the penalties collected by EPA in enforcing environmental laws. So the goal is to enhance enforcement not at the expense of other Federal programs, but instead from drawing from penalties received from violations of environmental laws. And the bill does this without reducing, modifying, or limiting any other authorization, such as Superfund, for example, available to the Environmental Protection Agency. The virtue of this approach, as is the case with our other Federal environmental statutes, is that the polluter will pay for the costs of responding to pollution.

Mr. President, I believe this legislation provides a basis upon which to improve the Nation's environmental law enforcement, and I look forward to working with the distinguished Senator from Connecticut on moving the legislation forward.●

● Mr. CHAFEE. Mr. President, I am most pleased to join my good friend from Connecticut—Senator LIEBERMAN—and my good friends from the Committee on Environment and Public Works, Senators LAUTENBERG, DURENBURGER, and JEFFORDS—as well as my good friend from California—Senator WILSON—in introducing legislation today that would greatly strengthen the ability of our Government to enforce the many statutes we have enacted to protect our environment.

This bill addresses a pressing need by ensuring that the Environmental Protection Agency will be equipped with the resources to continue our progress as a Nation toward a cleaner and safer environment.

Mr. President, I am proud to say that many Senators have joined with me over the years to enact a great number of statutes designed to protect the environment. As one recent example, I recall the overwhelming vote by which the Senate overrode a Presidential veto of the Water Quality Act of 1987. In addition, of course, we have enacted the Superfund Amendments of 1986, the Hazardous and Solid Waste Amendments of 1984, and a host of other laws on behalf of environmental protection.

But one important fact can not be overlooked in this avalanche of well-intentioned environmental legislation. That fact is that enforcement of these statutes is the essential ingredient in ensuring that the statutes have their desired effect. We can pass all the environmental legislation we want, but the effect will be trivial unless the EPA has the tools to enforce the requirements contained in the legislation.

All of which brings me to the bill we introduce today. This bill goes to the heart of the environmental enforcement effort. It contains several specific provisions that will significantly enhance the ability of the EPA and other Government agencies to ensure compliance with the environmental statutes.

Specifically, the bill would accomplish the following:

First, it would increase from 50 to 175 the number of investigators employed by the EPA to pursue criminal violations of the environmental laws. By so doing, it would significantly increase the ability of the EPA to discover and to punish those who deliberately flout the requirements of the law.

Second, it would authorize the EPA to hire an additional 50 investigators to focus on civil violations of environmental statutes.

Third, it would direct the EPA to establish a national enforcement training institute to educate Federal, State, and local inspectors, experts, investigators, and lawyers in the most current and effective methods of pursuing violations of the environmental statutes.

In addition, the bill provides that funding for these worthwhile objectives would be derived from penalties collected by the EPA from persons and companies that are proved to have violated the environmental statutes. In this fashion, the bill directs that fines collected for environmental harms are directed back into the effort to redress such harms.

Mr. President, this bill merits the strong support of my colleagues, and I invite them to join with me in seeing that it is enacted into law.●

S. 2178. A bill to amend title 18, United States Code, to establish a Federal criminal offense for illegal creation of a fuel shortage; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. LIEBERMAN (for himself, Mr. LEVIN, Mr. KOHL, Mr. COHEN, Mr. PELL, Mr. MOYNIHAN, Mr. BRADLEY, Mr. LEAHY, Mr. DODD, Mr. CONRAD, and Mr. DASCHLE):

S.J. Res. 261. Joint resolution making dire emergency supplemental appropriations for low income home energy assistance; to the Committee on Appropriations.

LEGISLATION RELATIVE TO THE HOME HEATING FUELS CRISIS

● Mr. LIEBERMAN. Mr. President, about 12 million households in America heat their homes with heating oil; millions more use propane. When unusually cold weather hit this past December, many of those families found themselves scrambling to get fuel to keep warm, and they were forced to pay top dollar to get it—up to four times higher than usual in some areas. Families and some businesses were hit hard, and many households relying on government energy assistance confronted a painful choice of heating their homes or putting food on the table.

On January 16, 1990, the Governmental Affairs Committee held a hearing on the home heating fuels crisis. Representatives from the Energy Department and Justice Department, as well as the oil industry and consumer groups, testified. Following up on information we received at that hearing, Senator LEVIN and I have prepared three pieces of legislation that we believe will help deal with the aftershocks of this year's crisis and reduce the risk of a similar predicament occurring in the future.

The first bill would require the Department of Energy to establish recommended minimum inventory levels for No. 2 distillate—heating oil and diesel fuel—propane fuel, and natural gas for each winter heating season and report on the adequacy of the Nation's inventories at the start of the season. This year, preseason stocks of distillate were at historic lows, the culmination of nearly a decade-long decline in inventories, and stocks of propane were so low that there were shortages in a number of places. Low inventories contributed to the dramatic rise in prices in December. Our bill would require the Energy Information Administration to publish weekly prices and inventories of these fuels on a State-by-State, regional and national basis. If actual inventories fall below recommended review, the Secretary of Energy would have to notify the President, Congress, and State energy offices for affected States. Finally, the bill would require the Department of Energy to conduct a study on the use of interruptible natural gas contracts, which require large industrial users to switch from gas to heating oil or other fuels when demand for gas is extremely high. Witnesses at the hearing suggested that interruptible natural gas customers added considerably to the strain on the heating oil and propane markets in December and contributed to the steep price increases.

The second bill would make it a Federal offense for anyone to create a fuel shortage with the intent to raise prices or restrict competition. It would also authorize the Attorney General to initiate a civil action for injunctive or monetary relief, including treble damages. Our bill, which is modeled on a State statute, differs from existing antitrust laws because it would apply to a single individual or company and would not require concerted action or a conspiracy.

Finally, we are introducing a companion bill to the House dire energy emergency supplemental appropriations bill—H.J. Res. 455—for the Low Income Home Energy Assistance Program [LIHEAP]. LIHEAP is a program that works. It is a lifeline to families who are struggling to get by. Witnesses at the hearing testified that, because of the cold snap and high prices early this winter, many housholds have already exhausted their benefits and will be unable to heat their homes as the winter wears on. The bill would provide an additional $300 million to replenish depleted LIHEAP funds, an important step in view of this winter's problems, and the administration's proposed 25 percent cut in LIHEAP funding for fiscal year 1991.

As the weather gets warmer, we should not let the events of this winter slip from memory without taking meaningful steps both to help those in need and to prevent the same thing from happening a few years down the road. We can take those steps by acting on this legislation.●

● Mr. LEVIN. Mr. President, I am pleased to join my colleague, Senator LIEBERMAN, and the rest of our cosponsors in introducing legislation to address the dramatic rise in the price of home heating fuel this past December.

For thousands of families in Michigan and other parts of the Midwest and Northeast, the frigid temperatures of December 1989 will be remembered as a financial nightmare. As fast as the termperatures dropped, fuel prices rose, until many people were faced with the bitter reality of choosing between feeding their families or heating their homes.

The price of home heating oil and propane gas in Michigan in the month of December increased 35 to 40 percent. This dramatic price increase, coupled with a substantial increase in the amount of these products used because of the severe cold spell, resulted in some Michigan residents seeing heating bills that had almost doubled over last year's bills.

Lyle and Betty Hudson of Cedarville, MI, sent my office four of their recent heating bills to show the outrageous increase in the cost of propane. Seeing the actual bill gives you a real feeling for what it is like to be on the receiving end of this price increase. Mr. Hudson was charged $.75 per gallon for his propane on September 1, 1989. He was charged $.95 per gallon just 1 week later, September 8, 1989—an increase of almost 40 percent in 1 week. On December 1, 1989, he was charged $.97 per gallon and then on January 2, 1990, 1 month later, he was charged $1.32 per gallon. That's a 77-percent increase over September 1. Let me tell you, he's mad. He understands that there will be some increase in price because of the severe weather, but he can't understand a 77-percent increase in 4 months, and neither can I.

The Governmental Affairs Committee held a hearing last month to find out the cause for these price increases and to consider ways to prevent the reoccurrence of such a nightmare. The legislation that we are introducing today, if passed, would implement an early warning system for future fuel crises, deter any person from manipulating the fuel supply in order to increase fuel prices by adding a new criminal sanction for such conduct, and, finally, provide immediate relief for those families that were hardest hit by the sudden rise in fuel prices.

To accomplish these legislative goals, Mr. President, we are introducing three separate bills. First, we are introducing a bill which would require more monitoring and information from the Department of Energy [DOE], so we can be apprised on a weekly basis about the status of oil and propane prices and supplies. We must take whatever action we can to prevent or minimize the possibility of a price increase like the one we saw this winter. We can't control the weather, but we can have better management and tighter control over our oil supplies and, therefore, our oil prices.

This bill would require DOE to recommend specific preseason inventory levels for home heating oil and propane and advise the President, Congress and State governments when the inventory levels fall below the DOE recommended levels. Currently, DOE takes no position on the recommended inventory level. We need DOE to be more aggressive in assessing the adequacy of the heating oil and propane fuel inventory. DOE is in an excellent position to determine just what an adequate preseason inventory is and thereby set a goal or standard for the industry to meet.

Second, Mr. President, we are introducing a bill which would make it easier for the Justice Department to bring a price-gouging case. This bill would make it a new crime to individually manipulate fuel supplies in order to increase prices. Under this new statute, the Attorney General would not have to prove collusion or conspiracy amongst companies; the act of one individual or company alone would be enough. Any violation of this statute could result in a criminal penalty of $250,000 or 5 years in prison, or both and the possibility of triple damages in a civil suit.

Finally, we are introducing a joint resolution which would appropriate an additional $300 million for this year's nearly exhausted Low Income Home Energy Assistance Program. On January 8, 1990, 17 governors from the Northeast and Midwest regions of the country wrote to President Bush urging him to seek additional funding for this program and stating that such an increase is "essential." Many States are running out of money, including my home State of Michigan. And this is a program that serves our neediest families—families with incomes averaging $7,000 a year nationally and $5,500 a year in Michigan.

Mr. President, this legislation is not the complete answer to our home fuel pricing problems, but it is an important and worthwhile step we can take right now. We will continue our work to develop legislation to establish a home heating oil and propane gas reserve system, either held by the Federal Government or required of the private oil companies. Establishing a specific reserve seems to be the best hedge against a disastrous period like last December.●

● Mr. CONRAD. Mr. President, I am pleased today to join my colleagues in introducing this resolution making dire emergency supplemental appropriations for the Low Income Home Energy Assistance Program.

Since its inception, LIHEAP has provided essential heating and cooling assistance to millions for poor families. It has helped them keep warm during the winter and cool during the summer. In States with extreme temperatures like North Dakota, some recipients could not survive without this aid.

But despite the fact that so many children, elderly, and their families depend on this important program, LIHEAP has been subjected to repeated budgetary assaults during the past several years. Because of this, only about one-third of those eligible for assistance are receiving it.

Many LIHEAP-eligible households are forced to do without heat at some point during the winter when funds are not available. For example, the National Low Income Energy Consortium reported that 28 percent of all poor or near poor U.S. households reported that because they were unable to pay their utility and fuel bills, they were without heat for 1 or more days during the winter of 1986-87. And LIHEAP funding has continued to decrease since 1987.

From the $1.83 billion level in 1987, LIHEAP funding has now decreased to $1.39 billion. And for the coming year, President Bush has proposed to cut back LIHEAP to $1.05 billion.

The inadequacy of LIHEAP funding has been apparent for years. Yet many have refused to acknowledge the problem. For example, one survey showed that 21 of 49 States were forced to cut heating benefits due to the fiscal year 1988 cuts. Nineteen States reduced the number of households served; 17 eliminated or reduced the use of LIHEAP funds for weatherization—something that would save money in the long run; and 28 States used oil overcharge funds to supplement LIHEAP. In this last group of States, two-thirds were forced to reduce program services.

And what was the reaction? In fiscal year 1989 LIHEAP was cut from $1.53 billion to $1.38 billion.

Finally this past year we were able to stop the steady erosion in LIHEAP appropriations. But then came the record cold temperatures of December, depleting LIHEAP funds to their current levels.

The Washington Post on February 20 ran an article entitled "In Cold Spell, U.S. Heating Assistance Becomes A Lifesaver." That article told the story of several families, and the indispensable nature of LIHEAP to them. It mentioned one family in particular that ran out of heating oil during December. When the schools were closed by the cold weather, the family's five children had to huddle around a wood stove. The family had to pile bales of hay around the base of their farmhouse to insulate the pines.

While the temperature during the last several weeks has been milder, the fact remains that the cold December weather severely depleted LIHEAP funding reserves. It is imperative that Congress act to restore those funds now.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that an article entitled "The LIHEAP Squeeze: Budget Cuts Hurt Program" from October of last year be printed in the RECORD immediately after my statement.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE LIHEAP SQUEEZE: BUDGET CUTS HURT PROGRAM

The past few years have been difficult for our national legislators as they struggle with the federal budget. Lawmakers face increasing pressure to reduce the deficit which eventually means that some good programs will experience budget cuts. Add the influence of the savings and loan bailout, the proposed multi-billion dollar anti-drug campaign and the message is clear—the budget is being stretched to the limit.

In this political climate, many programs are in a funding squeeze. Some are in more trouble than others, however, because of the number of years they have been subject to the budget knife. One such plan which has taken more than its share of funding cuts is the Low Income Home Energy Assistance Program (LIHEAP). In fact, funding has been in a steady decline since 1985 when appropriations peaked at $2.1 billion. Since then, funding has dropped by one-third to $1.38 billion this year.

In human terms this means that many low income, handicapped and elderly Americans may not be able to pay their energy bill.

In monetary terms, budget cuts may signal potential increases in energy costs to all customers. LIHEAP has paid a portion of the energy bill of those customers who may otherwise be unable to pay. And just like any other business, the energy utility must include uncollectible accounts in the cost of business, resulting in increases in the overall cost of energy.

For these reasons, the decline in LIHEAP funding is of concern to the nation's natural gas and electric providers.

In 1990, LIHEAP will need to be reauthorized by Congress. Many energy industry leaders will be looking at this activity as an opportunity to strengthen support for the program. A renewed commitment to LIHEAP is necessary because as federal support decreases, the future of this valuable energy assistance program is in jeopardy.

A VALUABLE PROGRAM IN JEOPARDY

A crisis is developing because of a $700 million drop in LIHEAP funds in four years. As a result of this decline, benefits to millions of homes have been reduced and nearly half a million have seen them totally disappear.

Food, water and a warm, dry shelter are essential elements to human existence. Prehistoric man thrived on freshwater streams and a fire to warm the cave and cook the food.

Society has evolved and people with varying standards of living will debate today's essentials for human existence. But regardless of the outcome, the most basic human needs will remain the same—food, water and shelter.

Throughout time a segment of each society has been less fortunate than the rest. In most cases, benevolent citizens have sought ways to provide the essentials to people in need.

One such essential is, of course, warmth. Home heating is certainly a basic requirement in our area of the country and in 1979, President Carter developed a concept to provide heating assistance to needy people. Called the Low Income Home Energy Assistance Program (LIHEAP), the plan has been providing an essential human need to millions of Americans.

In 1989, 5.8 million households received heating assistance from LIHEAP with benefits ranging from $51 to $458 per household. The program benefits low income, handicapped, the elderly and other people truly in need by paying a portion of their energy bills. Typically, LIHEAP recipients have annual incomes under $6,000 with the program covering about 22 percent of their energy costs.

Now the program's future is in question. A crisis is developing because LIHEAP has been victim of a steady decline in funding since 1985. Program funds have dropped $700 million in the past four years. As a result of this 33 percent cut, benefits to millions of homes have been reduced and nearly half a million people have seen LIHEAP benefits totally disappear.

But, funding problems have always been a part of LIHEAP. Even when money for this income-based, block grant program was at its highest, it was never adequate to serve all eligible households nor even pay more than a portion of their energy costs. As a result, further budget cuts will slice deeply into the program. Currently, regular LIHEAP benefits reach only 5.8 million households, just 25 percent of the 24 million households eligible nationwide according to the National Consumer Law Center.

Many states have looked to various solutions to resolve the budget shortfall. Some have raised eligibility criteria so fewer low income households qualify. Other states have simply reduced benefits across the board. Still others have opened the program later or closed it before the heating season ended.

From a LIHEAP perspective, in recent years our area has been more fortunate than others due to the mild winters we have experienced. In 1988, our winter was 10 percent warmer than normal and in 1987, it was 20 percent warmer than normal. This warmer weather, plus the decline and stabilization of energy costs, has masked the full impact of the past LIHEAP funding cuts. But, area utility leaders warn that a normal winter will put many additional low income consumers in jeopardy and a severely cold winter could very well bring about a crisis situation as benefits are lowered and program participation is cut back.

In 1990, LIHEAP will need to be reauthorized. Utility companies along with national energy and consumer associations will be using the reauthorization proceedings as a platform to discuss the benefits of the program. Clearly, LIHEAP has been a valuable tool to help millions of needy families meet a basic human need.

As we approach the 1990s, solutions to budget deficit problems while retaining programs which benefit the needy will not only challenge our creativity but will serve to define our nation's social conscience.

Low Income Home Energy Assistance Program Funding Allocation by State

[In millions]

State	Fiscal years—					Difference from 1985–89
	1985	1986	1987	1988	1989
Montana	$15.2	$14.5	$13.4	$11.3	$10.2	$5.0
North Dakota	16.6	15.8	14.6	12.2	11.0	5.6
South Dakota	13.4	12.8	11.8	9.9	9.0	4.4
Wyoming	6.2	5.9	5.5	4.6	4.1	2.1

Federal funding of LIHEAP in our region has decreased about 33 percent in four years. This is in spite of the fact that our region has extremely cold winters and high levels of energy usage. Since the typical LIHEAP recipient resides in substandard housing without appropriate weatherization construction and considering the average LIHEAP recipient has an annual income of under $6,000—the cost of energy is a substantial portion of that family's budget.

In recognition of the impact declining LIHEAP funding would have on our region, the program has received substantial support from our congressional delegation. In a gesture of bi-partisan support, the majority of the Senators and House members from our region signed a "Dear Colleague" letter urging full funding of LIHEAP.

Federal funding of LIHEAP

Fiscal year:	Billions
1985	$2.10
1986	2.01
1987	1.83
1988	1.53
1989	1.38
1990

For fiscal year 1990, the House of Representatives authorized a LIHEAP appropriation of $1.4 billion. The Senate decreased the appropriation and approved a budget of $1.278 billion. The approved bill is now in conference committee where it is expected that congressional leaders will "split the difference." LIHEAP supporters have been seeking approval of the House appropriation of $1.4 billion which represents last year's funding level plus inflation. Across the board cuts to fund the administration's drug program as well as other reductions for deficit control reasons may be an additional complication to the LIHEAP appropration.

Congress has cited the availability of oil overcharge funds as justification for previous funding reductions. Oil overcharge funds were collected from oil companies as a penalty for violating retail price controls imposed in the 1970s. Many states have used these funds to offset LIHEAP cuts but the funds are now nearly exhausted. A survey conducted by the National Consumer Law Center and funded by the Department of Energy, revealed the 95 percent of oil overcharge funds had been allocated. In fact, this year when the administration proposed a reduced LIHEAP appropriaiton, the availability of oil overcharge funds was not indicated as a resource as was done in previous years.●

ADDITIONAL COSPONSORS

S. 364

At the request of Mr. GORE, the name of the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. KOHL] was added as a cosponsor of S. 364, a bill to amend the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 to increase the amount of the earned income tax credit, to make credit for dependent care expenses refundable, and for other purposes.

S. 619

At the request of Mr. SARBANES, the name of the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. LIEBERMAN] was added as a cosponsor of S. 619, a bill to authorize the Alpha Phi Alpha Fraternity to establish a memorial to Martin Luther King, Jr. in the District of Columbia.

S. 874

At the request of Mr. FORD, the name of the Senator from Illinois [Mr. SIMON] was added as a cosponsor of S. 874, a bill to establish national voter registration procedures for Presidential and congressional elections, and for other purposes.

S. 1430

At the request of Mr. KENNEDY, the name of the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. CONRAD] was added as a cosponsor of S. 1430, a bill to enhance national and community service, and for other purposes.

S. 1675

At the request of Mr. KENNEDY, the name of the Senator from Maryland [Mr. SARBANES] was added as a cosponsor of S. 1675, a bill to provide financial assistance for teacher recruitment and training, and for other purposes.

S. 1695

At the request of Mr. BINGAMAN, his name was added as a cosponsor of S. 1695, a bill to provide financial assistance to conduct agricultural research and to commercialize such research, and for other purposes.

S. 1751

At the request of Mr. GORTON, the name of the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. BINGAMAN] was added as a cosponsor of S. 1751, a bill to prohibit the use of refrigerated motor vehicles for the transportation of solid waste, to prohibit the use of cargo tanks in providing motor vehicle transportation of food and hazardous materials, and for other purposes.

S. 1850

At the request of Mr. CONRAD, the name of the Senator from Washington [Mr. GORTON] was added as a cosponsor of S. 1850, a bill to require sequestration for a fiscal year if the actual deficit for the preceding fiscal year exceeds the target by more than $10,000,000,000.

S. 1853

At the request of Mr. CHAFEE, the names of the Senator from Colorado [Mr. WIRTH], the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. KERRY], the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. HOLLINGS], the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. COCHRAN], the Senator from Delaware [Mr. BIDEN], the Senator from Virginia [Mr. ROBB], and the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. KENNEDY] were added as cosponsors of S. 1853, a bill to award a Congressional Gold Medal to Laurence Spelman Rockefeller.

S. 1865

At the request of Mr. DANFORTH, the name of the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. BINGAMAN] was added as a cosponsor of S. 1865, a bill to require the Comptroller General of the United States to review and report on the effectiveness and fairness of agency policies and procedures for distributing Federal research funds.

S. 1974

At the request of Mr. HARKIN, the names of the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. HOLLINGS] and the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. PRESSLER] were added as cosponsors of S. 1974, a bill to require new televisions to have built-in decoder circuitry.

S. 2006

At the request of Mr. GLENN, the names of the Senator from Vermont [Mr. JEFFORDS] and the Senator from Arizona [Mr. DECONCINI] were added as cosponsors of S. 2006, a bill to establish the Department of the Environment, provide for a global environmental policy of the United States, and for other purposes.

S. 2021

At the request of Mr. DOLE, the name of the Senator from Washington [Mr. GORTON] was added as a cosponsor of S. 2021, a bill to amend title 11, United States Code, to ensure that the bankruptcy laws are not used to prevent restitution to, or recovery of, failed financial institutions.

S. 2039

At the request of Mr. COCHRAN, the names of the Senator from Alabama [Mr. SHELBY], the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. LIEBERMAN], the Senator from Oregon [Mr. PACKWOOD], and the Senator from Maryland [Ms. MIKULSKI] were added as cosponsors of S. 2039, a bill to improve the quality of student writing and learning, and the teaching of writing as a learning process in the Nation's classrooms.

S. 2056

At the request of Mr. HARKIN, the names of the Senator from Michigan [Mr. RIEGLE] and the Senator from Hawaii [Mr. MATSUNAGA] were added as cosponsors of S. 2056, a bill to amend title XIX of the Public Health Service Act to provide grants to States and implement State health objectives plans, and for other purposes.

S. 2083

At the request of Mr. KERRY, the names of the Senator from Maryland [Mr. SARBANES], the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. BURDICK], and the Senator from New York [Mr. MOYNIHAN] were added as cosponsors of S. 2083, a bill to bring about a negotiated end to the war in El Salvador, and for other purposes.

S. 2114

At the request of Mr. KENNEDY, the name of the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. CONRAD] was added as a cosponsor of S. 2114, a bill to promote excellence in American mathematics, science, and engineering education; enhance the scientific and technical literacy of the American public; stimulate the professional development of scientists and engineers; provide for education, training, and retraining of the Nation's technologists; increase the participation of women and minorities in careers in mathematics, science, and engineering; and for other purposes.

S. 2158

At the request of Mr. PRYOR, the names of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. GLENN] and the Senator from Oregon [Mr. HATFIELD] were added as cosponsors of S. 2158, a bill to direct the Secretary of Health and Human Services to promulgate regulations to require that an individual telephoning the Social Security Administration has the option of accessing a Social Security Administration representative in a field office in the geographical area of such individual, and for other purposes.

SENATE JOINT RESOLUTION 224

At the request of Mr. BYRD, the names of the Senator from California [Mr. WILSON], the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. BUMPERS], and the Senator from Maryland [Ms. MIKULSKI] were added as cosponsors of Senate Joint Resolution 224, a joint resolution to designate the month of May 1990 as "National Trauma Awareness Month."

SENATE JOINT RESOLUTION 234

At the request of Mr. LAUTENBERG, the name of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. EXON], was added as a cosponsor of Senate Joint Resolution 234, a joint resolution to amend one of the reservations under which the United States consented to and participates in the Delaware River Basin Compact.

SENATE JOINT RESOLUTION 240

At the request of Mr. BINGAMAN, the name of the Senator from Arizona [Mr. DECONCINI], was added as a cosponsor of Senate Joint Resolution 240, a joint resolution designating the week of June 10, 1990, through June 16, 1990, as "Multiple-Use Sustained-Yield Week."

SENATE JOINT RESOLUTION 248

At the request of Mr. BOSCHWITZ, the names of the Senator from Montana [Mr. BURNS], the Senator from Indiana [Mr. LUGAR], the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. PELL], the Senator from New York [Mr. D'AMATO], the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. COCHRAN], the Senator from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN], the Senator from Texas [Mr. BENTSEN], the Senator from Georgia [Mr. NUNN], the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. KASTEN], the Senator from Arizona [Mr. DECONCINI], the Senator from California [Mr. WILSON], the Senator from Kansas [Mr. DOLE], the Senator from Idaho [Mr. SYMMS], the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. LIEBERMAN], the Senator from Maryland [Ms. MIKULSKI], the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. BRADLEY], the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. HEINZ], the Senator from Missouri [Mr. BOND], the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. BURDICK], the Senator from Ohio [Mr. GLENN], and the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. DURENBERGER], were added as cosponsors of Senate Joint Resolution 248, a joint resolution to designate the month of September 1990 as "International Visitor's Month."

SENATE JOINT RESOLUTION 251

At the request of Mr. RIEGLE, the names of the Senator from Vermont [Mr. JEFFORDS], the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. NICKLES], the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. CHAFEE], the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. BRADLEY], the Senator from Georgia [Mr. FOWLER], the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. BOSCHWITZ], the Senator from Utah [Mr. HATCH], the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. KENNEDY], the Senator from Missouri [Mr. BOND], and the Senator from Texas [Mr. BENTSEN], were added as cosponsors of Senate Joint Resolution 251, a joint resolution designating "Baltic Freedom Day."

SENATE JOINT RESOLUTION 258

At the request of Mr. BRADLEY, the names of the Senator from Delaware [Mr. BIDEN], the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SANFORD], and the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. DOMENICI], were added as cosponsors of Senate Joint Resolution 258, a joint resolution to authorize the President to proclaim the last Friday of April 1990 as "National Arbor Day."

SENATE RESOLUTION 206

At the request of Mr. DANFORTH, the name of the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. BINGAMAN], was added as a cosponsor of Senate Resolution 206, a resolution to establish a point of order against material that earmarks research moneys for designated institutions without competition.

SENATE RESOLUTION 249—AUTHORIZING THE USE OF THE HART SENATE OFFICE BUILDING ATRIUM ON MARCH 5, 1990

Mr. FORD submitted the following resolution; which was ordered held at the desk by unanimous consent:

S. RES. 249

Resolved, That the Western Kentucky University Choir under the sponsorship of Senator Ford is authorized to use the Hart Senate Office Building Atrium on March 5, 1990 for a musical performance beginning at approximately 12:30 p.m. and ending at 1:00 p.m.

AMENDMENTS SUBMITTED

CLEAN AIR ACT AMENDMENTS

BOSCHWITZ AMENDMENT NO. 1261

(Ordered to lie on the table.)

Mr. BOSCHWITZ submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 1630) to amend the Clean Air Act to provide for attainment and maintenance of health protective national ambient air quality standards, and for other purposes, as follows:

On page 587, after line 23, add the following:

WATER QUALITY OF MISSISSIPPI RIVER

SEC. 703. (a) The Director of the Geological Survey (hereafter referred to in this section as the "Director") shall conduct a study of the water quality of the Mississippi River.

(b) In conducting such study, the Director shall consult with, and request the assistance of, the United States Fish and Wildlife Service, Environmental Protection Agency, the United States Army Corps of Engineers, and appropriate States.

(c) The Director shall enter into a planning period during which he shall consult with such Federal agencies and States to develop a framework for the study. The framework for the study shall be completed within 120 days following the date of the enactment of this Act.

(d) The Director shall report the results of such study, together with his findings and recommendations, to the Congress on or before December 1, 1992.

(e) There is authorized to be appropriated $2,000,000 to carry out the study authorized by this section.

On page 159, immediately after the item "Sec. 702. Stratospheric ozone and global climate protection." add "Sec. 703. Water quality of the Mississippi River.".

NOTICES OF HEARINGS

COMMITTEE ON ENERGY AND NATURAL RESOURCES

Mr. BINGAMAN. Mr. President, I would like to announce for the public that a hearing before the Mineral Resources Development and Production Subcommittee of the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources has been rescheduled.

The hearing originally scheduled for 2 p.m. on Wednesday, March 7, 1990, has been rescheduled for Friday, March 9, 1990, at 1 p.m. in room 366 of the Dirksen Senate Office Building in Washington, DC.

The purpose of the hearing is to receive testimony concerning S. 1908 and H.R. 737, legislation to amend the Stock Raising Homestead Act, and S. 1805, legislation to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to reinstate oil and gas lease LA 033164.

Those wishing to submit written statements for the hearing record should write to the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources, U.S. Senate, Dirksen Senate Office Building, room 364, Washington, DC 20510. For further information, please contact Lisa Vehmas of the subcommittee staff at (202) 224-7555.

SELECT COMMITTEE ON INDIAN AFFAIRS

Mr. INOUYE. Mr. President, I would like to announce that the Select Committee on Indian Affairs will be holding an oversight hearing on Wednesday, February 28, 1990, beginning at 9 a.m., in 484 Russell Senate Office Building on the fiscal year 1991 budget for Indian programs.

Those wishing additional information should contact the Select Committee on Indian Affairs at 224-2251.

SPECIAL COMMITTEE ON AGING

Mr. PRYOR. Mr. President, I would like to announce for the public that the Senate Special Committee on Aging has scheduled a hearing on marketing abuses in the Medigap insurance industry.

The hearing will take place on Wednesday, March 7, 1990, beginning at 9 a.m. in room 628 of the Dirksen Senate Office Building in Washington, DC.

For further information, please contact Portia Mittelman, staff director at (202) 224-5364.

COMMITTEE ON AGRICULTURE, NUTRITION, AND FORESTRY

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, I wish to announce that the Committee on Agriculture, Nutrition, and Forestry will hold a hearing on Wednesday, March 21, 1990, to receive testimony for the 1990 farm bill. The hearing will be held at 9:30 a.m. in room 332 of the Senate Russell Office Building. For further information, please call Bob Young of the committee staff at 224-5207.

SUBCOMMITTEE ON AGRICULTURAL RESEARCH

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, I wish to announce that the Subcommittee on Agricultural Research, of the Committee on Agriculture, Nutrition, and Forestry, will hold a hearing on March 22, 1990, on S. 2108, the Organic Foods Production Act of 1990. The hearing will be held at 9:30 a.m. in room 332 of the Senate Russell Office Building. For further information, please call Kathleen Merrigan of the committee staff at 224-5207.

AUTHORITY FOR COMMITTEES TO MEET

COMMITTEE ON FINANCE

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Subcommittee on International Trade of the Committee on Finance be authorized to meet during the session of the Senate on February 26, 1990, at 2 p.m. to hold a hearing to evaluate progress thus far in the negotiations to open the Japanese forest products market, and explore trade retaliation should the talks fail.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

SUBCOMMITTEE ON PUBLIC LANDS, NATIONAL PARKS AND FORESTS

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Subcommittee on Public Lands, National Parks and Forests of the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources be authorized to meet during the session of the Senate, 2 p.m., February 26, 1990, to receive testimony on two major provisions of H.R. 987, the House-passed Tongass reform legislation: section 104(e), provisions relating to fisheries protection and buffer zones; and title III, provisions relating to the designation of additional wilderness areas on the Tongass National Forest.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

PERMANENT SUBCOMMITTEE ON INVESTIGATIONS

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Permanent Subcommittee on Investigations of the Committee on Governmental Affairs, be authorized to meet during the session of the Senate on Monday, February 26, 1990, to hold hearings on the abuses in Federal student aid programs.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

SUBCOMMITTEE ON SOCIAL SECURITY AND FAMILY POLICY

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Subcommittee on Social Security and Family Policy of the Committee on Finance be authorized to meet during the session of the Senate on February 26, 1990, at 10 a.m. to hold a hearing on the Job Opportunities and Basic Skills Training Program, an education and training program created through the Family Support Act of 1988.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

ADDITIONAL STATEMENTS

HIGHER TECHNOLOGY TERRORISM

● Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, recently I was invited to speak to a meeting of anti-terrorism experts at the FBI Academy in Quantico, VA. The threat of international, state-sponsored terrorist attacks in the United States is of serious concern to me. Many experts in this area agree that there is a need for the United States to be much better prepared to defend itself against sophisticated terrorists exploiting high technology to attack us here at home. The Senate should be doing more to draw attention to this threat to our security.

I ask that my remarks to this seminar be printed in the RECORD.

The remarks follow:

INTERNATIONAL TERRORISM: THE THREAT TO THE UNITED STATES

(Remarks by Senator Patrick Leahy)

Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It is a pleasure to participate in this seminar on the threat of high technology terrorism to the United States.

This is a subject of special concern to me. In the summer and fall of 1988, I held two hearings specifically on high tech terrorism and the risks it poses to the United States. One of my main witnesses was Buck Revell, of the FBI.

In our first hearing we reviewed the nature and scope of the threat. What we heard from all our witnesses was sobering.

There was a consensus that it is only a matter of time before international terrorism strikes us at home. And these terrorists are not likely to be "down at the heels" fringe radicals. They will be well supported by terrorist states like Libya, Iran, Iraq and Syria.

There was also wide agreement that when it comes here, international terrorism is likely to be much more sophisticated in its methods and weapons than we have seen to date.

I have seen nothing in the eighteen months since those hearings to alter these conclusions.

The second hearing concentrated on how prepared we are to cope with this high tech terrorism threat. We looked at some illustrative high tech terrorism scenarios, and worked through how the Administration would deal with them.

Despite some important steps inside the Executive branch to improve intelligence collection, strengthen coordination and do contingency planning, I came away from those hearings deeply concerned that we were not yet ready as a government to deal with a terrorist threat directed against us.

Let me cite just one example.

We looked at a hypothetical scenario in which the US Government had intelligence that terrorists were planning to shoot down an American airliner in revenge for the accidental destruction of the Iranian Airbus by the USS Vincennes in the Persian Gulf.

I pressed the Administration witnesses on how we would handle such advance intelligence. Would we go public and alert the traveling public, with all the likely hysteria that would cause? Or would we withhold the information to prevent panic?

The ambiguous, evasive nonresponses made me uneasy. I was concerned that the Government in fact was not thinking through how we would respond to this kind of situation. I feared this might be symptomatic of a broader unwillingness to face up to the hard policy dilemmas inherent in preparing for international terrorism aimed directly at us.

And within three months, that scenario happened for real.

In December 1988, using a sophisticated, difficult-to-detect device in a tape recorder, terrorists destroyed Pan American flight 103 over Lockerbie, Scotland. Scores of Americans and others died.

In the Pan Am 103 case, the U.S. Government did have certain forewarning of a terrorist threat aimed at an American airline, and using just the type of device which blew up Pan Am 103. Yet, confusion, uncertainty and bureaucratic caution prevailed in that case, as it did in the discussion before my committee in September 1988.

I do not want to dwell on that tragedy. But, I hope you and your colleague are now trying to think through this particular problem of a workable public information policy on terrorist threats.

The point I want to make is that despite a lot of talk and a lot of planning, the failure to have a workable public information policy about terrorism underscores that we still have not got ourselves truly ready for what is likely to be a major long term threat to the security of the United States.

We offer an inviting, highly vulnerable target to the sophisticated international terrorist.

The United States is a society totally dependent on interlocking networks and nodes for communications, transportation, energy transmission, financial transactions, and essential government and public services. Disruption of key nodes by terrorists could cause havoc, untold expense, and perhaps even mass deaths.

We are, in the jargon of the trade, a "target-rich environment."

As my hearings revealed in 1988, the experts in the FBI, DoE, FEMA, the State Department and other agencies are aware of this vulnerability, accept the probability of international terrorism seeking to exploit technology against us, and are doing what they can to deter, defeat and recover from such attacks. Important actions are being taken at the working level in the key agencies in contingency planning for nuclear, biological and chemical terrorism incidents.

For example, I am impressed by the joint task forces of national, state, and local law enforcement, intelligence and emergency response agencies which have been formed under FBI leadership.

It is also very significant that the FBI, DoE, FEMA and other agencies now assign a high priority to preparing for a nuclear terrorist incident. Work is also being done to prepare for what is probably far more likely, a major terrorist action involving chemical or biological agents.

Coordination, collection and sharing of intelligence, pooling of resources, both at the national and local level, and contingency planning are vastly improved over the last five years.

So, I do not want to convey the impression that we in Congress believe little is being done. Merely that not enough is being done.

However, as one who has taken more than a passing interest in this subject, I have to stress that I do not yet feel we are ready pyschologically to cope when international terrorism hits us at home. The mishandling of the Lockerbie tragedy is a warning sign.

Despite a lot of rhetoric—which we do not even hear much anymore—I sense that many political leaders in this country do not seriously believe there is a real and present danger of international terrorism in the United States.

Given our national predilection for being energized by what is in the news today, maybe this complacency is understandable. Through a combination of luck and skill and hard work by the FBI and other agencies, we have thus far had only relatively minor international terrorism incidents at home.

But, to think luck and skill will protect us indefinitely is to live in a fool's paradise.

I think there really is dangerous complacency at the highest levels of our government on this terrorism issue. The pressure we saw two years ago from the Reagan Administration to work with the Congress to forge a strong policy to deal with international terrorism at home is no longer there.

When international terrorism strikes here, I do not think it will be limited to a pipe bomb here or a shooting there. It will be state sponsored terrorists, supported and abetted by intelligence services, national treasuries, embassies and diplomatic pouches. They will strike at us in ever more sophisticated, high tech attacks, exploiting our vulnerabilities and threatening mass destruction. Their aim will be to force changes in our foreign policy or to humiliate us, or to seek revenge.

So, I welcome discussions like this one today. More planning, more coordination, and more work by the experts is certainly necessary, and I commend you for it.

But I would feel a lot more comfortable if I saw real national leadership in pushing for more resources, more high level policy debate, and more sustained attention to the international terrorist threat.●

THE 100TH ANNIVERSARY OF THE FOUNDING OF THE UNITED MINE WORKERS OF AMERICA

● Mr. HEINZ. Mr. President, the year 1990 marks an important milestone for my State and for the Nation. 1990 is the 100th anniversary of the founding of the United Mine Workers of America.

The UMW's history is inextricably linked with America's progress. During the latter part of the last century, America was blessed with a booming industrial expansion. Providing the fuel for this expansion became an urgent priority. Deep in the bowels of the Earth men toiled, picking, shoveling, and blasting at walls of coal. It was coal that satisfied the insatiable appetites of the factories and railroads.

But the workers were unorganized. Their labors were often exploited. Wages were cut. Dependency on the company town was commonplace. The companies were more interested in profit, rather than the welfare of those who labored in their behalf.

On January 25, 1890 a group of 198 mineworkers, representing 20,000 miners from nine States, met and formed the United Mine Workers of America. The union was open to all miners, of all ages, colors, and creeds.

Over the next century, the brothers and sisters of the UMW held together through countless challenges. Through those struggles, they would help achieve living wages, 8-hour work-days, safer workplaces, the end of child labor, and health and retirement benefits. These are all just part of the fair labor practices that all working men and women now enjoy.

Mr. President, we owe a great deal to the membership of the UMW for their tireless efforts in behalf of working people. Around the Nation this year, in areas where coal has been mined for generations, celebrations will be held to commemorate this anniversary. In my State, on March 31 at California, PA, a joint parade and observance will be held by the members and friends of UMWA's districts 4 and 5. I invite my colleagues to join me in commemorating the 100th anniversary of the founding of the United Mine Workers of America.●

NATIONAL RETIREE VOLUNTEER CENTER

● Mr. PRYOR. Mr. President, as the chairman of the Senate Special Committee on Aging, I would like to take this opportunity to draw the attention of my fellow Members to a very special organization known as the National Retiree Volunteer Center [NRVC]. The NRVC serves as a bridge between retired individuals with a desire to serve and community organizations in need of their help. Under this innovative initiative, older men and women work to lessen illiteracy, hunger, drug abuse, at risk youth, and a host of other problems.

NRVC is founded on the principle that this Nation's retirees represent a rich, but untapped, resource of skills and experience. Giving substance to this principle, NRVC volunteers successfully challenge the myth that retirement marks the conclusion of one's contributive years. For these volunteers, the opportunity to contribute to their community may be richer than ever before.

Broadly stated, the goals of the NRVC are to seek lasting solutions to community problems and mobilize retiree assistance, while enriching the quality of life for retirees and their communities. To fulfill these ends, NRVC initiates, develops and expands retiree volunteer programs under the auspices of corporations, Government, educational institutions, and professional institutions.

Through NRVC, all participants—retirees, corporations, and community organizations—gain. In applying the experience they have obtained during their working years, NRVC volunteers are provided a continued sense of purpose. At the same time, corporate sponsors note that their involvement with the program fosters good will with retirees, employees, and community leaders. Community agencies benefit from a skilled and motivated corps of volunteers which allow them to stretch the reach of their existing services and to develop innovative approaches to meeting social needs.

Founded over a decade ago as a local, nonprofit initiative in Minnesota, NRVC currently is helping more than 30 major corporations, 6,000 retiree volunteers, and 800 community agencies across the nation. As part of this effort, NRVC has initiated a number of corporate retiree volunteer programs, among them General Mills, IBM, 3M, Dow Chemical, Unisys, Honeywell, Westinghouse, and American Express. At the same time, it is serving as a guiding force in the development of similar programs for many other corporations.

Mr. President, the number of older Americans is growing, while the chances of living longer and healthier lives are increasing. At the same time, there can be little doubt that the demand for community services across a broad range of areas is continuing to climb. Drawing on the skills, energy, and good will of older volunteers clearly should be among the means this Nation uses to help meet these needs. NRVC is in the vanguard of this effort, and I applaud this successful and timely organization.●

HEALTH CARE CRISIS IN THE UNITED STATES

● Mr. DASCHLE. Mr. President, there is a growing awareness of the magnitude of the health care crisis in the United States, and it becomes increasingly clear to Congress that our past palliative attempts to restrict the escalation of health care costs have failed. Americans pay more for health care than the citizens of any other country in the world, yet we seem to get little in return. Our population is no healthier than that of countries that spend far less per capita on doctors and hospitals, and invest a much smaller proportion of their gross national product on health care.

Much of the debate on health care reform has focused on the problem of those citizens who are too poor to pay for health insurance. However, many working Americans are also unable to insure against the costs of illness or injury because they work in occupations blacklisted by the insurance industry. Blacklisted groups range from auto dealers to window washers. This problem is most acute for employees of small business which employ less than 50 people.

The magnitude of this problem of occupational underwriting is illustrated in the following article from the New York Times, February 5, 1990. I ask that the full text of this article be reprinted in the RECORD.

The article follows:

[From the New York Times, Feb. 5, 1990]

HEALTH INSURERS, TO REDUCE LOSSES, BLACKLIST DOZENS OF OCCUPATIONS

(By Milt Freudenheim)

In an effort to avoid losses, many insurance carriers have quietly blacklisted dozens of types of small businesses and professions. A wide variety of occupations, from bartender and gas-station attendant to oil driller and dentist, have been declared ineligible for health insurance.

The exclusions are adding heat to the growing debate over how to protect the 31 million uninsured Americans, more than half of whom are working people and their families. At least three Congressional committees and several state commissions are drafting laws that could help make health insurance accessible to those without it. And the insurance industry, hoping to ward off new Government programs and regulations, is scrambling to come up with its own proposals.

SITUATION IS "JUST AWFUL"

In his State of the Union address last week, President Bush said his White House domestic policy advisers would review "recommendations on the quality, accessibility and cost" of health care being developed by Government study groups. A number of Democrats in Congress are working on bills that would require all employers to offer health coverage. Some critics of the insurance industry are also calling for national standards of conduct for insurers.

The situation is "just awful" for small businesses that need health insurance, said James Bissonett, an insurance broker in Eden Prairie, Minn., a suburb of Minneapolis.

The exclusions can have serious consequences for workers in the affected industries. In a number of states, including New York, they may turn to a Blue Cross or Blue Shield plan for coverage, often at a high monthly cost, but in many states such people go without insurance. And many hospitals, doctors and medical clinics will not treat uninsured patients.

While some health insurers have been accused of denying coverage to people in cities and occupations where the insurers contend the AIDS virus is most prevalent, the exclusions extend well beyond these groups. More than 40 industries are listed as "ineligible" in correspondence to insurance brokers from several large insurers. The lists were provided by a New York insurance broker, who asked not to be identified, as examples of the exclusions imposed by many insurance companies.

For instance, a list under the letterhead of the Phoenix Mutual Life Insurance Company, based in Hartford, includes service businesses like laundries, service stations, hotels, motels and restaurants; hazardous or seasonal industries like oil drilling and ski resorts, and health-care providers.

At the Hartford Group, a subsidiary of the ITT Corporation, types of businesses listed as ineligible for medical, disability and life insurance included barber shops, bars, beauty salons, car washes, entertainment groups, fishing enterprises, logging or mining operations, Government-financed nonprofit organizations, drilling and exploration operations for oil and natural gas, scrap dealers, taxi drivers and used-car dealers.

For dental coverage, the same company said chiropractors, dentists, education groups and municipal employees were also ineligible.

Insurance executives cite a number of reasons for the exclusions, which they say are based on their profit-and-loss experiences with such groups. Insurers say that employees of some businesses that sell alcohol, like restaurants and bars, have higher rates of alcoholism, resulting in expensive health problems. They say businesses like lumberyards, munitions plants and sanitation companies can be unprofitable for insurers because of frequent accidents or illnesses.

Other businesses with high turnover and many part-time employees, like motels, convenience stores and hair salons, are excluded because transient employees may be in poor health to start with and insurers find it difficult to verify their health histories, said Henry Raymond, a director of insurance, managed care and provider relations with the Health Insurance Association of America, an insurer trade group in Washington.

"Some industries that have high turnover and low pay may be perceived as occupations that attract an employee whose truthfulness and veracity may be difficult to verify," Mr. Raymond added. He said that in analyzing the health of applicants to decide whether their group should be accepted for insurance and what rates to charge, "it is very difficult to verify what hospital a transient individual went to, or to get a documented health history."

Yet another reason for exclusion, insurance executives say, is a high incidence of claims by people in the health-care professions, like doctors, dentists, nurses, chiropractors and other medical workers. "Because they are highly aware of health-care needs, health providers tend to have a high rate of utilization," said Joan Herman, a senior vice president at Phoenix Mutual.

ADMINISTRATIVE COSTS

Finally, some groups are excluded because insurers say they require high administrative expenses. Insurers say they usually take several years to earn back the start-up costs of enrolling new members, so they shun clients like local governments that require annual open bidding and may frequently switch insurers. Similarly, they contend that some small nonprofit organizations may lose their financing and drop their coverage before the insurer can recoup its costs.

But many groups say the exclusions are arbitrary and unfair. "I would like to see statistical data to show why the arts community is treated like the ammunition industry," said Ted Berger, executive director of the New York Foundation for the Arts.

INDIVIDUALS ALSO DENIED COVERAGE

Arts and dance groups and people like florists and interior designers say their groups are often unfairly excluded on the mistaken assumption that their employees are likely to contract the AIDS virus, even though many states prohibit discrimination against people thought to be at increased risk of AIDS.

Mark Scherzer, a Manhattan insurance lawyer, said small businesses with employees who have consulted mental health therapists were also often refused health insurance.

The exclusions extend beyond certain groups to individuals in small businesses that have not been blacklisted. Many individuals who are ill or have a sick dependent go without health insurance after being rejected—while their fellow workers are accepted—or after being charged steep rate increases. About 2.5 million Americans are considered medically uninsurable, according to Federal estimates.

"Middle-class folks often don't realize how shallow their coverage is and how vulnerable they are," said Maryann O'Sullivan, executive director of Health Access, a California consumer coalition based in Los Angeles. The most impoverished Americans are insured by the Medicaid program run by states and the Federal Government.

The exclusion problem "has gotten worse over the last few years," said Lisa M. Carroll, health services director of the Small Business Service Bureau, an association based in Worchester, Mass., that arranges group insurance for 35,000 businesses.

Insurers say the exclusions have resulted from rapidly rising medical costs that increase their risks. "We're being told the problems are becoming more acute," said Mr. Raymond of the Health Insurance Association. "We hear it from the state insurance commissioners, customers having trouble getting coverage and on Capitol Hill."

SMALL GROUPS SUFFER MOST

Critics of exclusions, including some insurance executives, say blanket denials of coverage are adding heat to a growing debate over improving access to health care for uninsured Americans. The insurance exclusions are felt most by groups of fewer than 50 employees, whose combined premiums frequently do not meet the costs of a single expensive illness. While insurance brokers say they can sometimes negotiate exceptions to the exclusions, small groups often find the price beyond their reach.

The critics say many insurance carriers now concentrate on the customers considered least likely to have high medical costs, avoiding people who would once have been insured as part of a communitywide group.

"The insurance industry is killing itself softly," said Uwe E. Reinhardt, a health-care expert and professor of political economy at Princeton University. "I understand their business needs, but I would like them to get out of the game of picking the favorable risks and excluding the rest. They are getting a terrible reputation."

SOME INSURERS ARE ALARMED

Ms. Carroll of the Small Business Service Bureau said the restrictions were often unfair. "Even though they may hire part-timers, the owners and operators and permanent office staff are also being excluded," she said.

"And most diseases are not industry-specific."

Some insurance executives have also expressed alarm. "We are clearly concerned about accessibility, both as a company and as an industry," said John P. Cole, executive vice president of the Lincoln National Corporation, an insurer based in Fort Wayne, Ind. "What we have to do as an industry is get back in the insurance business, to look at small businesses and take on more risk than we have in the past."

Some insurance carriers have tried to avoid exclusions. Indeed, Blue Cross and Blue Shield associations in some states still accept all applicants, although their rates have also risen steeply and often include added charges for people in cities where health care is expensive, as well as for elderly people, who are more likely to submit medical claims.

The Small Business Service Bureau arranges coverage for pooled groups of its members with nonprofit Blue Cross and Blue Shield plans and health maintenance organizations that have fewer barriers to membership.

Insurance groups are also discussing special pools financed by the insurance industry that would accept high-risk people, spreading the costs of their care among all insurers. Small employers would still pay a premium, but would receive tax credit or government assistance.

HIGHER RATES FOR EVERYONE

At least 18 states have pools that receive little or no government help. Bob Griss, a policy analyst in Washington with the World Institute on Disability, an advocacy group for disabled people, said groups using the pools must still pay high premiums.

Under the current system, unpaid health costs not covered by insurance are transferred through higher rates to everyone who does have coverage. "We all end up paying more," said Dr. Stephen Crane, a health policy analyst at the Boston University School of Public Health.

Insurers voice frustration about efforts to insure small groups. Joseph Fazzino, a spokesman for the Hartford Group, said the company stopped selling group health insurance last year to most businesses with fewer than 50 employees. He said the exclusion list "may still apply to groups of 50 to 100 employees."

"We've found it is very difficult to adequately price small groups," he added. As for government-financed nonprofit agencies or municipalities, "those might be cases where the clients go out for bids on a yearly basis," he said.

Because such policies cannot be easily renewed, the handling expenses are high. "Some of the other cases have many part-time and transient employees," Mr. Fazzino said.

EXCLUDED FROM HEALTH INSURANCE

Insurance companies often deny small businesses health insurance because of the nature of the work, the rate of claims of the administrative costs.

Hazardous work: Mines, quarries, oil drillers and riggers, lumberyards, logging operations, farms, ranches, charter and unscheduled airlines, aviation and pilot-training schools, munitions plants, sanitation businesses, asbestos-related industries, pest-control services, scrap dealers.

Low-paying or seasonal work: Hotels, motels, restaurants, car washers, laundries, cleaners, entertainment and arts groups, beauty salons, barber shops, bowling alleys, pest-control services, service stations, convenience stores, farms, ranches, fishing enterprises, golf clubs, and resorts, camps.

Higher rate of claims: Doctors, dentists, nurses, chiropractors and other medical workers.

Higher administrative costs: Government-financed nonprofit organizations, municipalities.●

COMMENDATION FOR "WE THE PEOPLE" BICENTENNIAL PROGRAMS

● Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. President, as a new decade begins we are witnessing the springtime of democracy around the world. Thousands of people, once silenced by repressive regimes, are now speaking a common language of liberty, freedom, and justice for all.

We in the United States, founders of the world's most enduring constitutional democracy, can rejoice at the blossoming of democracy. We wish the people of these nations well and pledge our friendship and support as they start down the path toward establishing democratic government.

What better time to impress on our own young people as understanding of these cherished values—values first written down in the Declaration of Independence and our Constitution. Only by instilling in our youth an appreciation for the sacred fire of liberty can we hope to keep it burning bright for generations to come.

In that spirit, I am pleased to recognize a group of State and district coordinators who have demonstrated exemplary dedication to improving our students' civic education. The individuals are Mimi Bissonnette, Theresa Bryant, Eugene Cain, Ronald Cold, James Elliott, Charles Fleming, Connie Hankins, Dr. Gus Jimenez, Sheila Keller, Kathleen McCarron, Dr. James Moore, Randy Pachuta, Laurie Petter, Annette Boyd Pitts, Louie Roos, Clinton Rouse, Cynthia Ryan, Kathy Steiner, Warren Tracy, Dr. Theron Trimble, Margaret Ward, and H. Quinn Wiggins. These individuals coordinate the "We the People . . . Bicentennial Programs on the Constitution and Bill of Rights." These programs include the National Bicentennial Competition, its Noncompetitive Companion Program, Congress and the Constitution and the National Historical Pictorial Map Contest.

Through the dedicated and voluntary efforts of these individuals, thousands of upper elementary, middle, and high school students have studied the program's curriculum. This curriculum, incorporated in the "We the People . . ." text, introduces students to the philosophical ideas of our Founders, the historical background of the Philadelphia Convention and the issues and debates that shaped the writing of our Constitution. Students learn how our Government is organized and how it protects the rights and liberties of all citizens. Most importantly, students learn the responsibilities that accompany the rights of citizenship in the democracy.

Teaching those responsibilities is more important than ever. Presently, only one out of five eligible voters under age 30 exercises their right to vote. It is clear we must do all we can to change that apathy into activism.

These programs are helping do just that. I am pleased to express my admiration and appreciation to these coordinators for their contributions to the development of competent and responsible citizenship.●

PLENARY SESSION OF THE NATIONAL JEWISH COMMUNITY RELATIONS ADVISORY COUNCIL

● Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, the annual plenary session of the National Jewish Community Relations Advisory Council [NJCRAC] met recently in Phoenix, AZ. This council is the most representative body of American Jews. It includes delegates from 11 national Jewish organizations and 117 local Jewish community councils in 34 States and the District of Columbia.

The members of the Senate are familiar with NJCRAC, and many of my colleagues have participated in plenary functions in previous years, as did Senators DENNIS DECONCINI and CARL LEVIN this year.

I rise to commend to your attention two addresses that were delivered at the NJCRAC opening plenary session on Sunday evening, February 18, 1990. The first is a moving tribute to Andrei Sakharov given by the erudite executive vice chairman of NJCRAC, Albert D. Chernin. The second is a frank and spirited report on conditions in the Soviet Union presented by Oleg Derkovsky, First Secretary of the Embassy of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics. Secretary Dakovsky's remarks bear remarkable witness to the degree that Andrei Sakharov helped unleash the historic forces of change that are restructuring the Soviet Union. Both Mr. Chernin's magnificent remarks and the warm applause that greeted the remarks of a Soviet official at a major national Jewish event are effective tributes to Andrei Sakharov's rare vision and courage.

I ask that both addresses be printed in the RECORD.

The remarks follow:

ADDRESS OF OLEG DERKOVSKY, FIRST SECRETARY, EMBASSY OF THE UNION OF SOVIET SOCIALIST REPUBLICS TO THE UNITED STATES

Few would dispute today the notion that we are living in a rapidly changing world. Indeed, after a long period of time, when the world order based on confrontation between two social political systems, first and foremost between the USSR and the United States, was perceived as inevitable and the only possible state of international affairs.

Today's changes are regarded by many as something incredible, bordering on the miracle. These changes are warmly welcomed by the absolute majority of governments and peoples all over the world. They lessen the threat of a nuclear disaster, create a favorable atmosphere for moving toward a kinder and gentler world. (Applause.)

These changes are directly linked to the domestic processes in which the Soviet Union set forth five years ago a course aimed at revoluntionary restructuring of our society based on broad democratization, fundamental return of the economic mechanism and economic management, drastic overhaul of the political system. On the scale of values, we give unquestioned priority to universal human values. And—(Applause.)

We believe that these values must prevail over ideological considerations. We realize—(Applause.)

We realize that with all this diversity in terms of existing social and political systems, our world is still one single whole. This shrinking planet of ours, Earth, is our common heritage and property. It is essential, therefore, that as a human race, we rise above differences in traditional controversies for the sake of human survival. (Applause.)

We are different as far as our national cultural and ethnic traditions are concerned and shall remain different, each with one's own interests and one's own realities. But our objectives are common: Freedom, equality, and justice.

The ways and means of achieving these objectives as well as the forms and concrete shapes they may take in various countries might be different. There are many people in this country who have doubts regarding our ability to solve our economic problems. This is understandable because the state of the Soviet economy and some other developments in my country do give rise to concern. There is some overheating political activity, but that has been generated by the processes of renewal and democratization of public life. This does create problems, but in our situation, a slower pace would probably create even bigger problems.

There is a serious debate in the society, in the Soviet society, with regard to the best ways and means of achieving their objective of Perestroika. Radical opinion demands a faster pace of reforms. The conservative link makes warnings trying to slow down changes or simply to resist them. This is a fact of life now in the Soviet Union. Of course, there are pragmatists who are in between.

In short, a real political struggle is evolving in the Soviet Union on most crucial issues, how best to address the nationalities question, what kind of new arrangements should be made between republics in the Soviet Union, how to respond to demands of full independence proclaimed by certain nationalistic circles in Latvia, Estonia, Lithuania, Georgia, et cetera.

There are no easy answers to these questions, no magic formulas or yardsticks. The road to success is through civilized dialogue and determined movement forward in establishing institutions and making laws of a democratic society.

At this time, Perestroika is going through perhaps its most difficult period. It has turned out that the most complex revolution is a peaceful revolution, a change in the minds of the people. We have a concept of Perestroika. We are continuing a creative search for proper approaches to implement some of the individual elements. Despite all the difficulties, we keep moving steadily forward. We are convinced of our ultimate success.

One of the elements of the economic program of Perestroika is the integration of our country into the world economic system. Our economic ties with the United States could play no small role here. The strategic goal is truly large scale: Mutually advantageous cooperation and interaction of the Soviet and American economies. This would benefit both sides.

Unfortunately, what stands in the way are the remaining discriminatory barriers, whether the absence of most favored nation status or the outdated COCOM regulations.

The U.S. administration declared at Malta that it was ready to move toward normalization of trade and economic relations. We do hope that this readiness will be translated into concrete deeds. We are aware of the nature of discussions in American political quarters regarding the fate of Perestroika, whether it is in the United States' interest to see Perestroika succeed or fail.

There are also more philosophical observations being made to the effect that advances on the Soviet Union and Eastern Europe constitute the collapse of Communism and the ultimate triumph of capitalism. Some even believe that the end of history has come. We obviously disagree with such conclusions.

Yes, we have failed in our experiment with socialism in our attempts to put into life ideals and dreams of social justice as they had been perceived by founding fathers of socialism. Yet, the idea of socialism is not dead since ideas do not die.

I urge you to regard Perestroika as a fresh start to achieve the noble goals of freedom, democracy, moral integrity, material and cultural prosperity. (Applause.)

We are starting to create a society capable of developing and renovating itself, a society with dynamic and effective economy with a real—not just declared—power of people, oriented toward meeting the requirements of a truly free man, a society with its own effective system of checks and balances. I'm speaking about a system of government which would place above all else the needs and interests of a human being which would create conditions for realizing the unique potential and talents of each and every individual.

I'm sure you're informed about the recent plenary session of the Central Committee of the CPSU. By endorsing a new draft platform for the party, we have made a giant step toward a democratic socialism, a step along the way of transferring power from the party to democratically elected councils. The party itself is changing its role. It is determined to continue to fight for the leading role in the society by political means in competition with other social, political movements, not by monopolizing power and not by fixing such a monopoly in the constitution. (Applause.)

The above-mentioned platform promotes the idea of establishing a presidential system of government in the Soviet Union; that is, concentrated executive power in the hands of a president and his cabinet. The next important stage will be the XXVIII party congress, maybe June, July, which is empowered to adopt the platform I have spoken about.

It is worthy of note that the acceptance by western countries in the last 50 years of number of principles of socialism and, above all, the social protection of an individual is the reason why western civilization has found a way out of the deepest crisis into which it was plunged in the '30s.

Today we are being criticized for introducing capitalist market elements, allegedly undermining our state-owned enterprises and thus socialism.

Ironically, President Roosevelt was accused in the 1930s of "Sovietizing," America and of ruining free enterprise. Now it seems that we have exchanged roles. It is socialism that should show the ability to overcome the crisis on the basis of revolution and renovation of fundamental values.

As for the question on which of the two existing social systems will prove to be the best in giving people greater freedom and well-being, let us leave it for future generations to decide. Most probably the exemplary social structure of the third millennium will sensitize all positive experience accumulated by mankind.

A few words about Soviet-American relations:

There is every reason to assert that over the past years, U.S.-Soviet relations have been elevated to a qualitatively new level. A series of high-level meetings and contacts in Moscow and Wyoming ministerials and finally the shipboard summit at Malta each took us further away from confrontation and closer to cooperation. The most important result is the strong mutual perception that the threat of war has greatly diminished.

The so-called "enemy-image" which is being eroded. The cold war is basically behind us and every major prerequisite is there to effect a decisive turn in our relationship toward more cooperation, more interaction and true partnership as an integral part of the global process of normalization of international situation. (Applause.)

At Malta our leaders reached a broad agreement on a program of practical steps to further develop our relationship. A landmark event in this process will be President Gorbachev's visit to this country in late June of this year for a full-fledged Soviet-American summit. I think it will be no exaggeration to say that the year 1990 promises to be one of the most productive in terms of Soviet-American agreements in the key area of our relationship—security and arms control.

It is a fact of life that the Soviet Union and the United States are the two major and most powerful states in the Contemporary world. This does not confer them any special privileges but imposes very special responsibility. For we are the custodians of tremendous and terrifying power capable of destroying this civilization. This danger—and it did not cease to exist—makes irrelevant scholastic disputes on capitalism and socialism.

If, God forbid, a nuclear disaster were ever to break out, ashes for what we call capitalism would be undistinguishable from ashes for what we call socialism. Therefore, cooperation between us is not just one option. It is the only option. (Applause.)

The changes in our military posture and thinking are well-known. These changes are real ones, and not just hasbara. (Laughter.)

This is the only Hebrew word I know, and—(Laughter).

And these changes are being recognized as such in this country as well. In turn, we are encouraged that for the first time in the post-war history a serious discussion is under way in the United States about a need for a fundamental revision of the United States' military strategy and posture. (Applause.)

Just two years ago, we had the conclusion of the INF Treaty that actually eliminated a portion of our nuclear arsenals. At this point we're aiming at cutting our strategic inventories by half. So the trend is unmistakable: progressively deeper cuts, with each phase reinforcing stability and predictability of our strategic relationship.

Our military alliances will be evolving, too. We want to see the solution to be in the direction of reducing the military content and emphasizing the political orientation of those organizations.

This brings us to the monumentous changes which are taking place in the countries of Eastern Europe. Let me stress that as those countries are changing, everyone can see that people there are completely free to choose their own paths and their own methods of building new societies. Our respect for their choice means respect for full sovereignty of the countries of Eastern Europe unconstrained by ideology, respect for their independence.

Encouraging progress has been made in other issues of the U.S.-USSR overall agenda. We have added a new item to our agenda, the so-called global problems—environment, terrorism, drugs—and the first discussions have been encouraging. If we do not come to grips with environmental problems, we might one day begin competing not for political supremacy or spheres of influence, but for access to water, fresh air, and even a green lawn. (Applause.)

A few words about the nationalities problem in the Soviet Union. The Soviet leadership put the nationalist question high on the agenda of Perestroika. A special resolution on that score was adopted by the 19th Party conference in June 1988. The Soviet state was founded as a result of the will and inspirations of the multi-national family of peoples. On this banner is inscribed the right of nations to self-determination, revival and advancement of national cultures, accelerated progress of formerly backward national regions, and the elimination of strife between nations.

In this sphere our performance was also not up to the mark because of breaches of the rule of law during the personality cult period, and by the ideology and psychology of stagnation. Many acute questions that derived from the very development of nations and nationalities were swept under the rug. The negative phenomena that accumulated over the decades has been neglected and ignored for a long time and were not properly assessed; hence, the problems we are facing today. Perestroika in the nationalities question means that ethnic groups residing outside their national territories, or ethnic groups that have no such territories, should be granted the opportunities to fulfill their national cultural needs, especially in education, communication, folk arts. They should also have the opportunity to form national culture centers, to use the mass media, and to satisfy their religious requirements in this direction. (Applause.)

The most important principle of our multi-national state is the free development and equal use by all Soviet citizens of their mother tongues. Nationalities problems must be tackled in a calm spirit with a strong sense of responsibility. It is essential to create a social environment in which people of any nationality should feel at home in any part of our country.

September last a special party platform on the nationalities question was adopted. The major idea of this platform is to develop a contractual principle of the Soviet federation. We have in mind different forms of federal links, preservation of multi-faceted and diverse nature of life of nationalities with retaining the integrity and unity of the Soviet state. Our ideal is unity in diversity and multi-formity. Democratization created conditions for overcoming our inter-ethnic problems in a democratic way. But unfortunately, the paradox is that the national energy that has been given free rein by Perestroika is harmful to Perestroika, when it assumes radical extreme forms.

Alongside with positive developments, democratization brought about negative phenomenon—all sorts of extreme views, including racial bigotry. The problems of ethnic relations that engender separatism are very hard to solve.

It should be obvious that separatist trends are dangerous precisely because they can lead to the breakup and even distintegration of national entities themselves. And events in Armenia and Azerbaijan by chance speak for themselves. The nature of the difficulties we face today was explained by President Gorbachev when he spoke on February the 5th, only two weeks ago, in Moscow, at the Central Committee plenum, and I quote: "While making steps along the path of Perestroika we have realized that the crisis that hit the country is much deeper and much more dangerous than first was anticipated."

And that explains many phenomena we are witnessing today.

The problems and contradictions which have been accumulating during previous decades in the depths of the social fabric came to the fore. Unfortunately, we did not manage to avoid mistakes and miscalculations in the course of Perestroika itself, and this also complicates the situation which is being characterized by tensions and anxieties, elements of apathy and disappointment.

Let me address now an issue which I'm sure is of concern to you. I know that it is of concern to you. Leaders of your organization in contacts with us have indicated their serious concerns in connection with what they see as a resurgence of anti-Semitic trends in the Soviet Union spearheaded by such groups as Pamyat. They spoke about the necessity to apply in practical terms the anti-racist provisions of the Soviet constitution. I want you to know that the Prime Minister of the Soviet Union, Mr. Rishkov, 10 days ago, spoke from the rostrum of the party plenum in exactly the same terms. President Gorbachev, as the leader of a multi-national country, speaks publicly denouncing all sorts of racial bigotry.

Let me read now to you a brief document which I hope will shed sufficient light on the problem the way it is now and probably alleviate some of your concerns. I'm going to read to you a statement issued by the State Security Committee. Don't be surprised. You know—everybody knows this committee. This is KGB. But it sounds like State Security Committee. I don't know. (Applause.)

The USSR State Security committee distributed a statement on February the 9th pertaining to rumors about alleged pogroms against Jews, the Azerbaijanies and the Armenians.

"To give credibility to these rumors," the statement says, "those who spread them cite the nationalistically tainted programs of some informal associations as well as hooligan and provocative attacks by individual elements like the one that recently took place at the Central Writers House in Moscow. Within—" and that's very important from my point of view.

"Within its competence, especially that part of it which concerns protection of the constitutional rights of Soviet citizens, the USSR State Security Committee cannot ignore manifestations of nationalist extremism and takes measures to combat them as provided for by the law. (Applause.)

"As for the rumors about pogroms, there is no concrete evidence to support these claims. The only information that the State Security bodies have been receiving are rumors themselves, reports of them by the mass media and requests by individual citizens for explanation about one rumor or another. Nevertheless, the KGB is following the development of the situation and will take the necessary measures if tension escalates. The States Security Committee relies on assistance from the public and those who know concrete facts about illegal actions or intentions to commit them.

"In these conditions," the statement continues, "it is important for the mass media to cover such sensitive issues in a more balanced way and not to circulate unverified information."

As to the incident mentioned in this statement I have read to you, the Attorney General of Moscow region has ordered an investigation; and this investigation is underway. Press reports in the Soviet Union do not exclude the possibility of criminal charges against those who participated in this provocation.

Let me turn now to another issue, the broader issue of human rights.

In an effort to bring our own laws and regulations in the sphere of human rights in conformity with international practice, in particular, the Helsinki Accords and the Vienna Declaration, the Soviet Parliament on November the 13th, 1989, started to consider a draft law on exit from and entry to the USSR. The draft law says about the necessity to establish a well-founded time frame for secrecy, that citizens must be informed of before when they're applying for a job. The disputes that may arise can be settled in court. That is helping to remove the problem of the so-called Refuseniks.

The adoption of this law will create legal guarantees for ensuring the human right of leaving any country, including one's home, and returning to one's home country. At this time, virtually any citizen in the Soviet Union can obtain a foreign passport for five years for temporary travel or for permanent residence abroad. The duration of temporary stay abroad is determined by the person leaving the country at the time of applying for a visa.

The bill provides also that exit of a Soviet citizen for a permanent residence abroad is exercised on the basis of a document which confirms the permission by a respected foreign country to entry for this purpose. But this is not a limitation introduced on our own accord. The bill was approved in the first reading in the USSR Supreme Soviet by 368 votes against 10 votes with five abstentions. The bill must be completed in a short time which will be needed to take into account the suggestions made by the deputies.

I wish to inform you that during the meeting between Foreign Minister Shevardnadze and Secretary of State James Baker held in Moscow on February the 7th and 9th, a thorough and very positive discussion of human rights and human affair issues took place. In the context of this discussion, the Soviets side reiterated its intention to enact a new emigration law shortly. (Applause.)

We are also now actively deliberating on a major piece of legislation—a draft law on the freedom of conscience and religious organizations. The purpose of that law will be to provide legal guarantees for the rights of citizens to the freedom of conscience and an opportunity for believers to participate in civic activities and in the renewal of our society. The draft law builds upon international legal norms as well as the provisions of the Vienna Concluding Document. That document contains, inter alia, such provisions as the possibility to publicly express and disseminate religious beliefs as well as religious education. (Applause.)

With regard to the status of Soviet Jewry: Jews play a significant part in the political, social, and cultural life in the Soviet Union. Thus, during the recent elections, many of them were elected as members of the Congress of People's Deputies. Citizens of Jewish nationality feature prominently among high school and university students. Many of them are scientists and winners of various national prizes and awards.

It will be recalled that a certain number of Jews are leaving the Soviet Union to take up permanent residence abroad. But the majority of Soviet Jews have no intention to leave the country. Our principle is to create as best possibilities as possible for those who want to stay in the USSR and develop their culture, religious heritage and language. (Applause.)

For those who want to emigrate, no obstacles exist anymore. (Applause.)

But we do hope that as soon as we succeed with the changes we are having in mind, that the people who left the Soviet Union will be encouraged to come back. The fact is that an organized Jewish community is reviving in the Soviet Union. More and more Soviet Jews are studying Hebrew, learning about Jewish history, celebrating Jewish holidays, and returning to synagogues. They are already—there exists already more than a hundred of them in the Soviet Union.

In February 1989, a new Jewish cultural center was opened in Moscow named after Solomon Mikhoels, a renowned Russian Jewish theater direction who was a victim of Stalinist persecutions in 1948.

There are also a few other informal Jewish cultural centers and libraries in Moscow and other big cities—Leningrad, Kiev, Riga, Tallin and Minsk.

On February the 18th, 1989, the opening of the Soviet Union's first legal yeshiva took place. Eighty students, future rabbis have been enrolled in the first classes to be taught by five rabbis, three from Israel and two from the United States. The Soviet government will provide stipdends for the students. No obstacles exist for those who want to study Hebrew, as I have mentioned before. (Applause.)

Another piece of information: The first Kosher bakery producing matzo opened in Moscow in March 1989, as well as a Kosher restaurant. (Applause.)

These are concrete examples of change in times with respect to Soviet Jews, but I want to stress specifically that such changes are taking place for all other nationalities in the Soviet Union, including Russian people, who probably suffered more than others in terms of losing their national identity, religious and ethnic aspirations during the stagnation period.

Freedom and democracy are indivisible. Either we, the Soviet people—Russians, Jews, Ukranians, all—succeed, or we all fail. That is why success of Perestroika is in the interest of the people of the Soviet Union and the rest of the world. (Applause.)

Let me finish on this note. I probably unfortunately have no time to address the Middle East problem, which I am an expert of. I wish to thank you very much for your kind attention and for inviting me here to speak today.

Andrei Dmitriyevich Sakharov—In Memoriam

(Reflections of Albert D. Chernin, Executive Vice Chairman, NJCRAC)

In my trips to the Soviet Union over these past 25 years I was never privileged to have met Andrei Dmitriyevich Sakharov. Yet I felt I knew him as did so many of you who have struggled for the rights of Soviet Jews.

To those of us in the struggle he appeared as a giant. Yet we were told by those close to him that he did not have an imposing presence, a commanding personality. He was shy and unpretentious, reticent and soft-spoken, modest in gesture, manner and dress. He was not comfortable in center stage; he preferred to avoid the limelight.

He could have done so, enjoying the private, hidden, sheltered, privileged world that he had as a Soviet physicist of the stature of Oppenheimer and Teller. He could have remained in that elitist world where he had access to the pinnacle of power. All that would have been required of him was to compromise his principles and ideals, not uncommon in today's world.

Rare are men such as Sakharov and Raoul Wallenberg who deliberately chose the path of conscience, rather than the comfortable life which was theirs to enjoy. Their own lives did not require such as choice but they did so. They were aware and yet heedless of the consequences. That was their charisma; their power.

Condemned, harassed, ostracized, exiled, he suffered the last 20 years of his life as a pariah. It could not silence this quiet, gentleman. He was driven by a deep sense of compassion for the suffering of others and a sense of outrage at injustice against all the victims of the tyranny of the Brezhnev regime: jailed Armenian nationalists; dissenters in mental hospitals; nonconformist Baptists, and Solzhenitsyn even as he warned against Solzhenitsyn's vision of Holy Russia as "bearing the echoes of Stalinism."

His voice was loud and clear in behalf of Soviet Jews seeking to emigrate. He was arrested for participating in a demonstration over the murder of Israeli athletes at the Munich Olympics. With the Refuseniks he stood vigil at the courthouse when Scharansky was tried. Selfless, he understood why Jews, single-minded in seeking more modest goals, could not join in his advocacy of fundamental changes in the Soviet system.

Denounced as a traitor, he was a patriot whose dream was to humanize Russia. Long before glasnot, he warned, as President Gorbachev has recognized, that Russia suffered by the authoritarian controls that permeated the Soviet Union. Long ago he warned, as we now understand, of the dangers of "detente without democratization." Now Soviet leaders are heeding many of his warnings for the good of the Soviet people. Ultimately it could be for the good of all who desire freedom and a world at peace.

Like Moses, he was not destined to reach the Promised Land. And, like Moses, at least he was able in his final days to catch a glimpse of the Promised Land that the Soviet Union could still yet become.

We never knew him personally. We knew him only by the transcending universal ideals he represented as fixed stars in the skies. Those fixed stars are still there to guide the Soviet Union and to guide us. It is now for the Soviet Union to choose whether to follow those stars. And we too have a choice: whether we persevere in continuing the unending struggle to fulfill the dreams of Andrei Dmitriyevich Sakharov.●

BUDGET SCOREKEEPING REPORT

● Mr. SASSER. Mr. President, I hereby submit to the Senate the latest budget scorekeeping report for fiscal year 1990, prepared by the Congressional Budget Office in response to section 308(b) of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974, as amended.

This report was prepared consistent with standard scorekeeping conventions. This report also serves as the scorekeeping report for the purposes of section 311 of the Budget Act.

This report shows that current level spending is under the budget resolution by $3.5 billion in budget authority, and over the budget resolution by $4 billion in outlays. Current level is under the revenue floor by $5.2 billion.

The current estimate of the deficit for purposes of calculating the maximum deficit amount under section 311(a) of the Budget Act is $114.6 billion, $14.6 billion above the maximum deficit amount for 1990 of $100 billion.

The report follows:

Congressional Budget Office,
U.S. Congress,
Washington, DC, February 22, 1990.

Hon. Jim Sasser,
Chairman, Committee on the Budget, U.S. Senate, Washington, DC.

Dear Mr. Chairman: The attached report shows the effects of Congressional action on the budget for fiscal year 1990 and is current through February 21, 1990. The estimates of budget authority, outlays, and revenues are consistent with the technical and economic assumptions of the 1990 Concurrent Resolution on the Budget (H. Con. Res. 106). This report is submitted under Section 308(b) and in aid of Section 311 of the Congressional Budget Act, as amended, and meets the requirements for Senate scorekeeping of Section 5 of S.Con.Res. 32, the 1986 First Concurrent Resolution on the Budget.

Since my last report, dated February 5, 1990, there has been no action that affects the curent level of spending or revenues.

Sincerely,

Robert D. Reischauer,
Director.

FUNDING FOR TRIBALLY CONTROLLED COMMUNITY COLLEGES

● Mr. INOUYE. Mr. President, I am pleased to join my good friend and colleague, Senator MCCAIN, in introducing this important legislation to reauthorize the funding for tribally controlled community colleges.

I firmly believe that the tribal community colleges are among the most fruitful endeavors for which the Congress has ever offered its support. It is with no small commitment and pride that the tribal colleges have taken Indian education, an area of dire statistics in Indian country, and turned it into one of great achievement.

Those Indian students who attend tribal colleges are more likely to pursue and achieve an advanced degree in a State institution. Tribal colleges can now point to hundreds of success stories where they have provided an opportunity where there otherwise may not have been one. Their graduates are increasingly today's tribal government leaders, business leaders, educators, and role models.

By virtue of these successes, tribal colleges have assumed a special role for all native Americans. They serve as a bridge between American education and the American Indian. The tribal colleges bring the traditional American college classroom and education to the Indian people. Likewise, they serve to bring the rich traditions and cultures of Indian people into the classroom. With renewed vigor, the tribal colleges have led a renaissance of Indian culture and traditions.

Mr. President, I would like to emphasize what is otherwise often lost to debates regarding the great opportunities the tribal colleges provide for Indian students and their communities. The success of the tribal colleges not only benefits Indian students and their communities, but also enhances the lives of non-Indian students and our communities. As those tribal college graduates filter into the State institutions, they bring their unique perspectives and diversity of experience to the classroom, to our children, and into society. It is such diversity that makes this country a leader among nations. We should recognize that the native American has played and will continue to play no small role in that respect.

Mr. President, I am hopeful that we all will take note of the great importance of tribal colleges. In our modern world, with the ever increasing need for better education, the future of America's first citizens has come to depend largely on the success of their colleges. Likewise, we all stand to benefit greatly from our continued support of the tribally controlled colleges.●

EXECUTIVE SESSION

EXECUTIVE CALENDAR

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to executive session to consider the following nominations: Calendar items Nos. 604, 605, 606, and 607.

I further ask unanimous consent that the nominees be confirmed en bloc; that any statements appear in the RECORD as if read; that the motions to reconsider be laid upon the table, en bloc; that the President be immediately notified of the Senate's action; and that the Senate return to legislative session.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The nominations considered and confirmed en bloc are as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE

Scott Alan Sewell, of Maryland, to be U.S. marshal for the District of Maryland for the term of 4 years.

Thomas W. Corbett, Jr., of Pennsylvania, to be U.S. attorney for the Western District of Pennsylvania for the term of 4 years.

Jack N. Egnor, of Colorado, to be U.S. marshal for the District of Colorado for the term of 4 years.

Donald W. Tucker, of Arizona, to be U.S. marshal for the District of Arizona for the term of 4 years.

LEGISLATIVE SESSION

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, the Senate will return to legislative session.

REMOVAL OF INJUNCTION OF SECRECY—CONSULAR CONVENTION WITH THE REPUBLIC OF TUNISIA

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, as in executive session, I ask unanimous consent that the injunction of secrecy be removed from the Consular Convention with the Republic of Tunisia, Treaty Document No. 101-12, transmitted to the Senate February 23 by the President.

I also ask unanimous consent that the treaty be considered as having been read the first time; that it be referred, with accompanying papers, to the Committee on Foreign Relations and ordered to be printed; and that the President's message be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The message of the President is as follows:

To the Senate of the United States:

I am transmitting, for the Senate's advice and consent to ratification, the Consular Convention between the United States of America and the Republic of Tunisia signed at Tunis on May 12, 1988. I am also transmitting, for the information of the Senate, the report of the Department of State with respect to the convention.

The signing of this convention is a significant step in the process of enhancing and broadening the relationship between the United States and the Republic of Tunisia. Consular relations between the two countries currently are not addressed by a bilateral agreement. The convention establishes clear obligations with respect to matters such as notification of consular officers of the arrest and detention of the nationals of their countries and protection of the rights and interests of the nationals of their countries.

The people of the United States and Tunisia have a tradition of friendship and cooperation. I welcome the opportunity through this consular convention to promote further the good relations between the two countries. I recommend the Senate give early and favorable consideration to the convention and give its advice and consent to ratification.

GEORGE BUSH.

THE WHITE HOUSE, February 23, 1990.

THE CALENDAR

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the immediate consideration of Calendar Nos. 445, 446, 447, 448, 449, 450, 451, 452, 453, 454, 455, 456, 457, 458, and 459, en bloc; that the amendment, where appropriate, be agreed to; that the resolutions be deemed read a third time and passed; that the preambles be agreed to, en bloc; that the motion to reconsider the passage be laid upon the table; that the title amendment, where appropriate, be agreed to.

I further ask unanimous consent that the consideration of these items appear individually in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

NATIONAL FORMER PRISONERS OF WAR RECOGNITION DAY

The joint resolution (S.J. Res. 190) designating April 9, 1990 as "National Former Prisoners of War Recognition Day," was considered, order to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The preamble was agreed to.

The joint resolution, and the preamble, are as follows:

S.J. RES. 190

Whereas the United States has fought in many armed conflicts;

Whereas thousands of members of the Armed Forces of the United States who served in such wars were captured by the enemy and held as prisoners of war;

Whereas many such prisoners of war were subjected to brutal and inhumane treatment by their captors in violation of international codes and customs for the treatment of prisoners of war and died, or were disabled, as a result of such treatment;

Whereas in 1985, the United States Congress (in Public Law 99-145) directed the Department of Defense to issue a medal to former prisoners of war in recognition and commemoration of their great sacrifices in service to our Nation; and

Whereas these great sacrifices of former prisoners of war and their families deserve national recognition: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That April 9, 1990, is designated as "National Former Prisoners of War Recognition Day" in honor of the members of the Armed Forces of the United States who have been held as prisoners of war, and the President is authorized and requested to issue a proclamation calling upon the people of the United States to commemorate such day with appropriate ceremonies and activities.

BICENTENNIAL ANNIVERSARY OF THE LEGACY OF BENJAMIN FRANKLIN

The joint resolution (S.J. Res. 226) to designate the year 1990 as the "Bicentennial Anniversary of the Legacy of Benjamin Franklin," was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The preamble was agreed to.

The joint resolution, and the preamble, are as follows:

S.J. RES. 226

Whereas the year 1990 is the bicentennial of the year of the death of Benjamin Franklin;

Whereas the contributions of Benjamin Franklin to science, government, diplomacy, printing and publishing, business, philosophy, medicine, engineering, and philanthropy continue to influence profoundly the people of this Nation;

Whereas the hard work and commitment to public service of Benjamin Franklin embodied the spirit that guided this Nation to independence;

Whereas, during this lifetime, Benjamin Franklin established a worldwide reputation as a man of wit, wisdom, and dedication to liberty, and such worldwide reputation continues today; and

Whereas the legacy of achievement of Benjamin Franklin is unmatched in scope and importance: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the year 1990 is designated as the "Bicentennial Anniversary of the Legacy of Benjamin Franklin", and the President is authorized and requested to issue a proclamation calling on the people of the United States to observe such bicentennial year with appropriate ceremonies and celebrations.

DEAF AWARENESS WEEK

The joint resolution (S.J. Res. 227) to designate March 11 through March 17, 1990, as "Deaf Awareness Week," was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The preamble was agreed to.

The joint resolution and the preamble are as follows:

S.J. RES. 227

Whereas during the second week of March 1988, a revolutionary sequence of historic social events evolved on the campus of Gallaudet University, the only university in the Nation which teaches exclusively deaf and hard of hearing students;

Whereas the events which occurred at Gallaudet University in the Spring of 1988 had great significance to all Americans, especially those who are deaf or hard of hearing;

Whereas the week long social protest at Gallaudet University awakened the people of nations around the world to the fact that deaf and hard of hearing individuals are able to achieve at the same level as others and need to be recognized as individuals with unique abilities and qualities; and

Whereas the week long social protest at Gallaudet University served to educate and sensitize the American people concerning the hopes and dreams of the twenty-four million Americans who are deaf or hard of hearing: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That March 11 through March 17, 1990, is designated as "Deaf Awareness Week". The President is authorized and requested to issue a proclamation calling upon the people of the United States to observe this week by remembering the significance of the historic social movement, which began in March 1988 at Gallaudet University, through appropriate ceremonies and activities.

NATIONAL PREVENT-A-LITTER MONTH

The joint resolution (S.J. Res. 229) to designate April 1990 as "National Prevent-A-Litter Month," was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The preamble was agreed to.

The joint resolution, and the preamble, are as follows:

39-059 O-91-36 (Pt. 2)

S.J. RES. 229

Whereas the irresponsibility of some dog and cat owners in allowing uncontrolled breeding of their pets has created a pet overpopulation problem in the United States;

Whereas the pet overpopulation problem results in the destruction of milions of dogs and cats each year;

Whereas the pet overpopulation problem results in other cruelties to pets caused by neglect, such as abandonment, starvation, and injury;

Whereas the cruelties inflicted on pets result not only in lost animal lives but also in lost resources spent by thousands of communities to shelter neglected and displaced pets;

Whereas the pet overpopulation problem can be solved only by active promotion of pet owner responsibility programs that include spaying and neutering of pets, proper care and shelter of pets, and compliance with animal control regulations; and

Whereas the people of the United States should commit themselves to preventing the needless destruction of pets by practicing responsible pet ownership and by spaying and neutering pets as a means of combating the problem of pet overpopulation; Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That April 1990 is designated as "National Prevent-A-Litter Month", and the President of the United States is authorized and requested to issue a proclamation calling upon the people of the United States to observe the month with appropriate ceremonies and activities.

NATIONAL DRINKING WATER WEEK

The joint resolution (S.J. Res. 230) to designate the period commencing on May 6, 1990, and ending on May 12, 1990, as "National Drinking Water Week," was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The preamble was agreed to.

The joint resolution, and the preamble, are as follows:

S.J. RES. 230

Whereas water itself is God-given, and the drinking water that flows dependably through our household taps results from the dedication of the men and women who operate the public water systems of collection, storage, treatment, testing, and distribution that insures that drinking water is available, affordable, and of unquestionable quality;

Whereas the advances of health effects research and water analysis and treatment technologies, in conjunction with the Safe Drinking Water Act Amendments of 1986 (Public Law 99-339), could create major changes in the production and distribution of drinking water;

Whereas this substance, which the public uses with confidence in so many productive ways, is without doubt the single most important product in the world and a significant issue of the future;

Whereas the public expects high-quality drinking water to always be there when needed; and

Whereas the public continues to increase its demand for drinking water of unquestionable quality; Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the period commencing on May 6, 1990, and ending on May 12, 1990, is designated as "National Drinking Water Week", and the President is authorized and requested to issue a proclamation calling upon the people of the United States to observe such period with appropriate ceremonies, activities, and programs designed to enhance public awareness of drinking water issues and public recognition of the difference that drinking water makes to the health, safety, and quality of life we enjoy.

STATE-SUPPORTED HOMES FOR VETERANS WEEK

The joint resolution (S.J. Res. 231) to designate the week of June 10, 1990, through June 16, 1990, as "State-Supported Homes for Veterans Week," was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The preamble was agreed to.

The joint resolution, and the preamble, are as follows:

S.J. RES. 231

Whereas since 1864, 36 States have established a total of 58 State-supported homes for the veterans of this Nation;

Whereas such States and the Department of Veterans Affairs support such State-supported homes for veterans and such State-supported homes for veterans currently serve critical needs of the veterans of this Nation;

Whereas such State-supported homes for veterans shall continue to serve the veterans of this Nation and meet the future needs of such veterans when the number of aging veterans increases at an accelerated rate in this Nation;

Whereas such State-supported homes for veterans provide an important resource for the veterans of this Nation, and for the families of such veterans;

Whereas the staff of such State-supported homes for veterans contribute to an enhanced quality of life for the veterans of this Nation, and for the families of such veterans; and

Whereas there is a need for greater public awareness of the vital and significant contributions of State-supported homes for veterans to this Nation: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the week of June 10, 1990 through June 16, 1990, is designated as "State-Supported Homes for Veterans Week", and the President is authorized and requested to issue a proclamation calling upon the people of the United States to observe such day with appropriate ceremonies and activities.

BE KIND TO ANIMALS AND NATIONAL PET WEEK

The joint resolution (S.J. Res. 236) designating May 6 through 12, 1990, as "Be Kind to Animals and National Pet Week," was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The preamble was agreed to.

The joint resolution, and the preamble, are as follows:

S.J. RES. 236

Whereas 1990 marks the 75th anniversary of the American Humane Association's "Be Kind to Animals Week" and the 10th anniversary of "National Pet Week", sponsored by the American Veterinary Medical Association, the Auxiliary to the American Veterinary Medical Association, and the American Animal Hospital Association;

Whereas animals and pets give companionship and pleasure in daily living, share the homes of nearly 50,000,000 individuals or families in the United States, and provide special benefits to elderly persons and children;

Whereas the people of the United States have a firm commitment to promote responsible care of animals and pets and guard against cruel and irresponsible treatment;

Whereas teaching kindness and respect for all living animals through education in schools and communities is essential to the basic values of a humane and civilized society;

Whereas the people of the United States are grateful to the veterinary medical profession for providing preventive and emergency medical care and assistance to animals, spaying and neutering animals to combat overpopulation, and contributing to the education of animal owners; and

Whereas the people of the United States are indebted to animal protection organizations, State humane organizations, and local animal care and control agencies for promoting respect for animals and pets, educating children about humane attitudes, and caring for lost, unwanted, abused, and abandoned animals: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That May 6 through 12, 1990, is designated as "Be Kind to Animals and National Pet Week", and the President is authorized and requested to issue a proclamation calling upon the people of the United States to observe the week with appropriate ceremonies and activities.

GREEK INDEPENDENCE DAY

The joint resolution (S.J. Res. 243) to designate March 25, 1990, as "Greek Independence Day: A National Day of Celebration of Greek and American Democracy," was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The preamble was agreed to.

The joint resolution, and the preamble, are as follows:

S.J. RES. 243

Whereas the ancient Greeks developed the concept of democracy, in which the supreme power to govern was vested in the people;

Whereas the 1990 marks the 2,500th anniversary of the birth of democracy;

Whereas the Founding Fathers of the United States drew heavily upon the political and philosphical experience of ancient Greece in forming our representaive democracy;

Whereas March 25, 1990, marks the 169th anniversary of the begnning of the revolution that freed the Greek people from the Ottoman Empire;

Whereas democratic ideals have forged a close bond between our two nations and their peoples; and

Whereas it is proper and desirable to celebrate our ideals with the Greek people, and to reaffirm the democratic principles from which our two great nations sprang: Now therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That March 25, 1990, is designated as "Greek Independence Day: A National Day of Celebration of Greek and American Democracy", and the President is authorized and requested to issue a proclamation calling upon the people of the United States to observe that day with appropriate ceremonies and activities.

IDAHO CENTENNIAL DAY

The joint resolution (S.J. Res. 245) designating July 3, 1990, as "Idaho Centennial Day," was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The preamble was agreed to.

The joint resolution, and the preamble, are as follows:

S.J. RES. 245

Whereas at 10 a.m., on July 3, 1890, President Benjamin Harrison signed a proclamation declaring Idaho a State;

Whereas the State of Idaho is known as the Gem State;

Whereas the State of Idaho has become a national leader in agriculture, natural resource industries, technology, and manufacturing;

Whereas the people of Idaho have harvested the natural abundance to produce a wealth which has enabled the building of cities, educational institutions, an unhurried pace of life, and a rich culture, while maintaining the pristine ecology;

Whereas the beautiful mountains, rivers, lakes, trees, deserts, plains, and fields of the State of Idaho are appreciated and preserved, and the quality of life is unsurpassed; and

Whereas on July 3, 1990, the State of Idaho will begin a new century of statehood: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That July 3, 1990, is designated as "Idaho Centennial Day," and the President is authorized and requested to issue a proclamation acknowledging the economic, social, and historic contributions of the people of the State of Idaho to the United States during the past century.

NATIONAL RECYCLING MONTH

The joint resolution (S.J. Res. 250) designating April 1990 as "National Recycling Month," was considered, and ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The preamble was agreed to.

The joint resolution, and the preamble, are as follows:

S.J. RES. 250

Whereas the continued generation of enormous volumes of solid waste each year presents unacceptable threats to human health and the environment;

Whereas several regions of the United States are experiencing a severe shortage of disposal capacity for municipal solid waste;

Whereas as a result of the inability to find sites for new solid waste management facilities, many communities are managing waste in facilities that were not designed with the best available environmental controls;

Whereas the generation of hazardous waste and solid waste must be reduced and as much remaining waste as possible must be recycled to protect human health and the environment and to minimize treatment and disposal capacity problems;

Whereas a significant amount of waste can be diverted from disposal by the utilization of source separation, mechanical separation, and community-based recycling programs;

Whereas local governments should be an integral component of the decisionmaking process regarding the management of municipal solid waste;

Whereas developing a system of waste management that, to the greatest extent practicable, separates elements of the waste stream that require special management or that are in demand for reuse or recyling will enhance the economic feasibility and environmental safety of all management methods, including recycling, incineration, and land disposal;

Whereas source reduction and recycling represent and most environmentally sound means of managing municipal solid waste and can often be carried out with a lower cost than is incurred by other means;

Whereas recycling preserves limited landfill capacity and reduces the amount of solid waste intended for incineration;

Whereas recycling can save energy and avoid the pollution created from extracting resources from their natural environment;

Whereas the revenues recovered by recyling programs offset the costs of solid waste management;

Whereas a well-developed system of recycling scrap metals, paper, and glass already exists and is significantly reducing the quantity of solid waste entering landfills or incinerators;

Whereas the technology for recycling plastic is currently under development, and progress continues toward increasing potential markets;

Whereas many consumer products are designed without sufficient regard for safe and efficient recycling after disposal;

Whereas Federal, State, and local governments should promote the design of products that can be recycled safely and efficiently;

Whereas Federal, State, and local governments should enact legislative measures that will increase the amount of solid waste that is recycled;

Whereas Federal, State, and local governments should encourage the growth of incremental markets for materials recovered from recyclable goods;

Whereas Federal, State, and local governments should establish incentives for household separation of waste to encourage recycling;

Whereas the success of source reduction and recycling programs depends on the participation of an informed public; and

Whereas the people of the United States should be encouraged to participate in educational and legislation endeavors that promote waste separation methods, community-based recycling programs, and expanded utilization of recovered materials: Now, therefore be it

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That April 1990 is designated as "National Recycling Month", and the President of the United States is authorized and requested to issue a proclamation calling upon the people of the United States to observe the month with appropriate ceremonies and activities.

BALTIC FREEDOM DAY

The joint resolution (S.J. Res. 251) designating "Baltic Freedom Day," was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The preamble was agreed to.

The joint resolution, and the preamble, are as follows:

S.J. RES. 251

Whereas the people of the Baltic States of Estonia, Latvia, and Lithuania have cherished the principles of religious and political freedom and have recently held mass demonstrations calling for freedom and independence;

Whereas from 1918 to 1940, the Baltic States existed as independent, sovereign nations and as fully recognized members of the League of Nations;

Whereas 1990 marks the 50th anniversary of the invasion, seizure, and illegal incorporation of the Baltic States into the Soviet Union against the national will and the desire for independence and freedom of the Baltic people;

Whereas 1990 also marks the 50th anniversary of the continued policy of the United States of not recognizing the illegal forcible occupation of the Baltic States by the Soviet Union;

Whereas, due to Soviet and Nazi collusion, the Baltic States suffered a loss of one-third of their population by the end of World War II;

Whereas, under Soviet occupation, the native Baltic peoples have been deported from their homelands to forced labor and concentration camps in Siberia and elsewhere;

Whereas the people of the Baltic States have unique indigenous cultures, national traditions, and languages, which have been threatened by decades of russification;

Whereas the Soviet Union has introduced into the Baltic States ecologically unsound industries without proper safeguards, and the presence of those industries has critically endangered the environment and well-being of the Baltic people;

Whereas, as part of Soviet President Mikhail Gorbachev's campaign of openness, restructuring, and democratization, the Soviet leaders have officially acknowledged the illegality of the secret protocols to the 1939 Molotov-Ribbentrop Pact, which led to the Soviet military invasion of the Baltic States in 1940;

Whereas, in the spirit of openness and democratization, the Baltic peoples are affirming their right, upheld both by international law and by the Soviet Constitution, to restore full independence through parliamentary and peaceful means; and

Whereas the United States, as a member of the United Nations, has repeatedly upheld the right of nations to self-determination: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That—

(1) the Congress recognizes the continuing desire and right of the people of the Baltic States for freedom and independence;

(2) the Congress, in keeping with the policy of the United States to deny recognition of the Soviet occupation of the Baltic States, urges the Soviet Union to recognize the sovereignty of the Baltic States and to yield to the rightful demands of the Baltic peoples for independence from foreign domination and oppression, as guaranteed by Principle Eight of the Helsinki Accords, to which the Soviet Union is a signatory;

(3) June 14, 1990, the anniversary of the first mass deportation of the Baltic peoples from their homelands in 1941, is designated as "Baltic Freedom Day", as a symbol of the solidarity of the people of the United States with the aspirations of the captive Baltic people; and

(4) the President is authorized and requested to issue a proclamation calling upon the people of the United States to observe Baltic Freedom Day with appropriate ceremonies and activities, and to submit to the Congress within 60 days a statement articulating specific actions the United States Government is taking, in fulfillment of the intent of the nonrecognition principle to—

(A) support the peaceful restoration of the independence of the Baltic States; and

(B) to encourage Soviet support for a peaceful transition to independence and democracy in the Baltic States.

NATIONAL MINORITY CANCER AWARENESS WEEK

The joint resolution (S.J. Res. 252), designating the week of April 15, 1990, through April 21, 1990, as "National Minority Cancer Awareness Week," was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The preamble was agreed to.

The joint resolution, and the preamble, are as follows:

S.J. RES. 252

Whereas the month of April each year is designated as National Cancer Month for the purpose of promoting increased awareness of the causes, types, and treatments of cancer;

Whereas the National Cancer Institute has recognized that significant differences exist in the incidence of cancer and survival rates for cancer patients between minority and economically disadvantaged communities in the United States and the population in general;

Whereas increased awareness of the causes of cancer and available treatments will help reduce cancer rates among minorities and the economically disadvantaged through preventive measures and will improve survival rates for cancer patients through early diagnosis;

Whereas a comprehensive national approach is needed to increase awareness about cancer among minorities and economically disadvantaged persons, and to encourage health care professionals, researchers, and policy makers to develop solutions to the cancer-related problems unique to these communities; and

Whereas focusing public attention on cancer in minority and economically disadvantaged communities during one week so designated will have a positive impact on preventive health care and treatment in these communities. Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the week of April 15, 1990, through April 21, 1990, is designated as "National Minority Cancer Awareness Week", and the President is authorized and requested to issue a proclamation calling upon the people of the United States and all Federal, State, and local government officials to observe the week with appropriate programs and activities.

NATIONAL ARBOR DAY

The joint resolution (S.J. Res. 258) to authorize the President to proclaim the last Friday of April 1990 as "National Arbor Day," was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The preamble was agreed to.

The joint resolution, and the preamble, are as follows:

S.J. RES. 258

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the President is hereby authorized and requested to issue a proclamation designating the last Friday of April 1990 as "National Arbor Day" and calling upon the people of the United States to observe such a day with appropriate ceremonies and activities.

NATIONAL EMPLOYEE HEALTH AND FITNESS DAY

The joint resolution (S.J. Res. 245) designating "National Employee Health and Fitness Day," was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The preamble was agreed to.

The joint resolution, and the preamble, are as follows:

S.J. RES. 245

Whereas recent medical studies prove that regular exercise and good nutrition are basic requisites for good health;

Whereas a strong and healthy body influence not only an individual's outlook on life but also a person's mental attitude, daily experiences both on and off the job, and academic and social skills;

Whereas the National Association of Governors' Councils on Physical Fitness and Sports and the Association for Fitness in Business are presenting the second National Employee Health and Fitness Day (NEHFD) on Wednesday, May 16, 1990;

Whereas NEHFD is the largest event in the Nation's history to promote fitness at the worksite and the ultimate goal of NEHFD is to encourage employers to look seriously at initiating long-term fitness and recreation programs; and

Whereas employers throughout the Nation are being asked to join in National Employee Health and Fitness Day by allowing employees to participate in noncompetitive walking, jogging, cycling, and other activities designed to be fun and dramatize the importance of physical fitness at the same time: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the members of the U.S. Congress hereby designate Wednesday, May 16, 1990 as "National Employee Health and Fitness Day"; and be it further

Resolved, That all American employers and employees are encouraged to take an active role in practicing better health and fitness from this day forward.

JEWISH HERITAGE WEEK

The Senate proceeded to consider the joint resolution (S.J. Res. 241); to designate the week of April 29, 1990, through May 5, 1990, as "Jewish Heritage Week," which had been reported from the Committee on the Judiciary, with an amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The preamble was agreed to.

The joint resolution, as amended, and the preamble are as follows:

S.J. RES. 241

Whereas May 10, 1990, marks the forty-second anniversary of the founding of the State of Israel;

Whereas the months of April, May, and June contain events of major significance in the Jewish calendar, including Passover, the anniversary of the Warsaw Ghetto Uprising, Holocaust Memorial Day, and Jerusalem Day;

Whereas the Congress recognizes that an understanding of the heritage of all ethnic groups in this Nation contributes to the unity of this Nation; and

Whereas understanding among ethnic groups in this Nation may be fostered further through an appreciation of the culture, history, and traditions of the Jewish community and the contributions of Jewish people to this Nation: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the week of May 6, 1990 through May 13, 1990, is designated as "Jewish Heritage Week", and the President is authorized and requested to issue a proclamation calling upon the people of the United States, departments and agencies of State and local governments, and interested organizations to observe such week with appropriate ceremonies, activities, and programs.

The title was amended so as to read "Joint resolution to designate the week of May 6, 1990 through May 13, 1990, as "Jewish Heritage Week."

NATIONAL RAILROAD PASSENGER CORPORATION AUTHORIZATION

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I ask that the Chair lay before the Senate a message from the House of Representatives on H.R. 2364.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the following message from the House of Representatives:

Resolved, That the House disagree to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 2364) entitled "An Act to amend the Rail Passenger Service Act to authorize appropriations for the National Railroad Passenger Corporation, and for other purposes", and ask a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Ordered, That the following Members be the managers of the conference on the part of the House:

From the Committee on Energy and Commerce: Mr. Dingell, Mr. Thomas A. Luken,

Mr. Eckart, Mr. Slattery, Mr. Boucher, Mr. Lent, Mr. Whittaker, Mr. Tauke (except for section 4 of the House bill and section 4 of the Senate amendment), and Mr. Bliley (solely for section 4 of the House bill and section 4 of the Senate amendment).

Additional conferees from the Committee on the Judiciary (solely for section 4 of the House bill and section 4 of the Senate amendment): Mr. Brooks, Mr. Mazzoli, Mr. Edwards of California, Mr. Fish, and Mr. Moorhead.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I move the Senate insist on its amendment, agree to a conference with the House, and that the Chair be authorized to appoint conferees on the part of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion.

The motion was agreed to, and the Presiding Officer (Mr. KOHL) appointed Mr. HOLLINGS, Mr. EXON, Mr. BRYAN, Mr. ROBB, Mr. DANFORTH, Mr. PRESSLER, and Mr. KASTEN conferees on the part of the Senate.

MEASURE HELD AT THE DESK—S. RES. 249

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that Senate Resolution 249, submitted earlier today by Senator FORD, be held at the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

ORDER OF PROCEDURE

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, if the distinguished Republican leader has no further business, and if no other Senator is now seeking recognition, I ask unanimous consent that Senator SYMMS be permitted to speak in morning business for up to 10 minutes, and that at the conclusion of his remarks the Senate stand in recess under the order until 10:30 a.m. tomorrow.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it so ordered. The Chair recognizes Senator SYMMS.

Mr. SYMMS. Mr. President, I thank the majority leader for accommodating me to make some brief remarks.

THE POLICIES OF RONALD REAGAN

Mr. SYMMS. Mr. President, I happened to catch the remarks of the distinguished Republican leader just a few moments ago with reference to former President Reagan. I could not have said it better, Mr. President, than Senator DOLE. I think this Nation is seeing dividend after dividend after dividend being paid on the basic policies that Ronald Reagan brought back to this country when he was elected President in 1980. In a general sense, we have seen the caving in of the Iron Curtain countries. We have seen the real fruition of peace through strength.

Mr. President, when Time magazine named Mikhail Gorbachev Man of the Decade, I thought, boy, Time magazine suffers from selective perception, as so many of us do; we see what we want to see. It is easy for someone like me to criticize the media that may have a biased point of view or different point of view than I have, but I think in this case they really missed the target because, when Reagan was elected President in 1980, the Soviet Army was advancing into Afghanistan. They were reaching their tentacles across Africa. There were all kinds of things happening, and with the very simple fact that when President Reagan got into office, the Republicans took the Senate and we increased defense spending slightly, 1.5 percent of our GNP, Mr. President.

President Reagan would have liked to have done a little more. We were only able to get a 1.5 percent increase in the GNP for defense spending, and that fact alone brought the realization to those people in the Communist bloc countries that they could not match the United States.

When President Reagan first met with Soviet leaders, he informed them in his direct and polite, courteous way, "We are not going to lose the arms race. We are going to win the arms race. You can either admit to it now or do it later at a great deal of expense to your people. Why not start laying down some of our arms and learn to get along."

So what has happened is we have seen country after country after country throwing out oppressive Communist dictators, partly because of the policies of former President Reagan, partly because of the information age itself, high technology, the computer age, satellite TV, Radio Free Europe, et cetera, all of the information that is beamed into those countries. It is the old adage that if we had just started bombing the Communist countries with the Sears' catalog 30, 40 years ago, it would have been an offensive for the humanitarian aspects of capitalism, and we would have won this battle much sooner.

But nevertheless it was peace through strength that has won this election which took place in Nicaragua. I was thrilled to see the outcome of the election.

Senator DOLE made a comment earlier this morning that the problem with the election was that Daniel Ortega obviously used the same pollster that he had in New Hampshire. I think, although a cute quip, the fact of the matter is the Nicaraguan people when they get polled or asked a question, of course they are going to say they are for the dictator. What they did not anticipate is how they would vote in a private, secret ballot situation. They voted like people have voted throughout history. They vote with their feet. When there is no other way, they run and flee to freedom. If they get a chance through the ballot box, they will vote for freedom and against tyranny.

So I want to say congratulations to the people of Nicaragua for this election. We are going to now have to be standing by to be prepared to help them. But I also want to say congratulations to former President Reagan for his efforts, and then the follow-through that is taking place as a response to his leadership, to support those people who stand up for freedom, whether it be the mujahidin in Afghanistan, the Contras in Nicaragua, or freedom fighters one and all anywhere—when American stands for freedom, freedom will prevail.

MALCOLM FORBES

Mr. SYMMS. Mr. President, I note the passing of a great, unabashed, formidable person, Malcolm Forbes. He passed away this weekend. My deepest sympathy goes to his family.

But I think a real tribute to this man is so many of the so-called tycoons of America are oftentimes apologetic for some of the virtues of capitalism. Malcolm Forbes is one capitalist who was very proud of capitalism. He espoused the values, the humanitarian aspects of capitalism throughout his life. He had a great sense of humor. He was a very colorful individual. I am sure he will be missed by all of us in America.

I wish his family the best of success in the future in continuing the drumbeat for freedom, for capitalism, and for the humanitarian virtues that capitalism offers this country, which Malcolm Forbes, the colorful owner of the business magazine that bears his name and the unabashed salesman for capitalism did throughout his entire life.

I ask unanimous consent that an obituary from the Washington Times be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Washington Times, Feb. 26, 1990]

MALCOLM FORBES, CAPITALIST

NEW YORK.—Malcolm Forbes, 70, the colorful owner of the business magazine that bears his name and an unabashed salesman for capitalism, died of a heart attack Feb. 26 at his home in Far Hills, N.J.

Mr. Forbes, who returned Saturday morning from a trip to London, died in his sleep.

His frequent forays on Harley-Davidson motorcycles and hot-air balloons made him a symbol of capitalist machismo. Often seen with longtime friend Elizabeth Taylor, he appeared in newspaper celebrity columns as often as on their business pages.

Miss Taylor was his frequent companion since his 39-year marriage to Roberta Laidlaw Forbes ended in divorce in 1985.

Mr. Forbes spent a reported $2 million on his 70th birthday party in August. He was proclaimed an honorary citizen of Tangier as that Moroccan bash—which included seaside fireworks and nightlong dancing—drew to a close two days later.

The nearly 1,000 guests included some of the top names in business, industry, entertainment and the arts. They feasted on pigeon pie, lamb mechoui and chicken tadjine.

He made the first free flight over Beijing in a hot-air balloon and set six world ballooning records. He rode his Harleys in numerous charity events, and made the first motorcycle tour of China.

"Forbes was the Babe Ruth of business publishing," said George Steinbrenner, principal owner of the New York Yankees, "He made his mark through integrity, a toughness and wonderful sense of humor. We'll miss him."

Billionaire developer Donald Trump expressed shock at the death of his friend: "Malcolm was an extraordinarily positive force in America's business and social life. His loss takes excitement, creativity and genuine business leadership from every American businessman," Mr. Trump said.

BASQUES COOKING

Mr. SYMMS. Mr. President, I had brought to my attention that the November 26 issue of the New York Times magazine, featured a piece on Basque cooking.

Idaho Basques contribute significantly to the State's population. I was pleased to see the recipe for Freda Cenarrusa's braised lamb shanks. Not only is Mrs. Cenarrusa a fine chef, but she is the wife of our secretary of state, Peter Cenarrusa.

The State of Idaho is made up of a variety of peoples, including the Basques, who contribute significantly to Idaho's welfare. In all ways of life, the Basques are prevalent, whether it be commerce, politics, or cooking.

The Cenarrusas are exemplary of Idaho's well-being. Pete, a sheep rancher, divides his time between guiding his fellow citizens and growing one of Idaho's finest products: lamb.

We are made up in our State of a wide variety of people like so many States in this country. One of our populations that we in Idaho are so proud of is our Basque population.

Because I am proud of my State and of its citizens, Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the article and the recipes accompanying it in The New York Times magazine be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

BASQUE IN IT

(By Susan Herrmann Loomis)

As I was driving through Nevada recently, a highway billboard proclaimed "Winnemucca—If You Don't Visit, Who Will?" That pessimistic plea did not prepare us for the extraordinary Basque meal we had in a restaurant tucked off the main street of this small town in the northern part of the state.

Finding a Basque restaurant in such a lonely spot wasn't as surprising as it seems. There are Basques from California to Idaho, and they've created rich enclaves of their culture. The California gold rush enticed the Basques to the West, where they spread throughout neighboring states, eventually becoming sheepherders. They proved to be so skilled and dependable that when, in 1951, there was a shortage of shepherds, Congress passed an act allowing Basques to enter this country and claim permanent-resident status.

Few Basques herd sheep now. They've prospered, going on to other work. But the older generation of Basque males in the West got their start herding sheep. Most of them learned to cook during long summers in grazing lands. They prepared food they knew from home, rich in garlic, peppers, leeks and onions, olive oil, herbs and plenty of succulent lamb.

In Winnemucca, we followed our noses to the Martin Hotel, a weathered clapboard restaurant across from the railroad tracks. The aroma of garlic, onions and roasting lamb billowed out across the porch through screened windows. Years ago, the hotel was run by a Basque for shepherds who descended for the winter. They handed their paychecks to the innkeeper, who lodged and fed them until the money was gone.

At the family-style dinner, we passed bowls of chunky beef soup, crisp-roasted lamb, rib eye and several carafes of grapey red wine. It was easy to imagine the room, now filled with families, ranchers and the town volleyball team, crowded instead with the Basque shepherds digging into a meal that reminded them of home.

Many stories of the Basques in Idaho revolve around their dancing and food: lively soups and stews, a Basque pepper called chorizero, dried, slow-cooked lamb dishes and rustic desserts.

In Boise, Juanita Y. Hormaechea ushered us into her dining room, where the walls were covered with photographs of her family in the Basque country and maps of their villages. Juanita's husband, Rufino, was on the patio, assiduously watering rows of leeks and chorizero peppers. Mr. Hormaechea brought his pepper seeds from the Basque country to supply his friends and relatives.

Mrs. Hormaechea, a former teacher of Basque dances, is the self-appointed historian and cultural expert of the Boise Basque community. She and her husband are big promoters of Basque food. Mr. Hormaechea ran to the kitchen to pull out pepper sauce, a homemade roll, a bowl of last night's stew. He is especially passionate about a beef stew made with potatoes, dusky red pepper sauce and leeks, which, according to Basque legend, are so revered that they should be dug from the earth with a silver trowel. His wife prefers a potato and green bean soup wildly flavored with toasted garlic, and a chicken dish brightened with sweet peas. She insisted that I take her recipe for gypsy's arm cake, which is filled with cinnamon-scented pastry cream.

Mrs. Hormaechea led us to Pete T. Cenarrusa, Idaho's secretary of state, a sheep rancher and a tireless fan of what he considers the incomparable Basque character. Perhaps the best known Cenarrusa specialty is prepared by his nephew, Mike Cenarrusa, who manages a sheep ranch. Several times a year this portly man with porkchop sideburns cooks a leg of lamb with a shot of olive oil, onions and garlic for 14 hours, until the meat is so moist and tender that it falls from the bone. "He makes it for the cowboys," says Pete Cenarrusa. "And I'm convinced that it's the only reason we never have trouble finding a crew." Mrs. Cenarrusa's lamb shanks are a version of the 14-hour lamb. They cook long and slowly with onions and garlic to achieve juicy results.

FREDA CENARRUSA'S BRAISED LAMB SHANKS

4 lamb shanks, weighing 16 to 18 ounces each, trimmed of excess fat
Salt and freshly ground black pepper to taste
1 large onion, diced
3 cloves garlic, minced
½ cup hearty red wine
1 pound dry egg noodles
1 cup loosely packed parsley leaves for garnish
1 garlic clove for garnish.

1. Brown the lamb shanks in a Dutch oven or a large skillet over medium-high heat. Season generously with salt and pepper.

2. When the lamb shanks are browned, reduce the heat to medium. Add the onion and the garlic and work them down among the lamb shanks so they are on the bottom of the skillet. Cook, stirring as best you can by moving the lamb shanks around in the skillet, until the onions and garlic begin to turn golden, about five minutes. Pour in the wine and stir. When it begins to boil, reduce the heat to low, cover and cook until the cooking juices have thickened somewhat and the lamb shanks are tender enough to fall from the bone. Depending on the size and quality of the lamb shanks, this will take from three to four hours. If the cooking juices are browning too rapidly, add a half cup of water and continue cooking.

3. When the shanks are done, remove them from the cooking juices. Remove any meat from the bone and cut away any gristle you don't want to eat. If there are very large pieces of meat, cut them into bite-sized pieces. Keep them warm. Increase the heat under the pan to medium and reduce the cooking juices, stirring up any brown bits, until they are thickened, about five minutes. Season to taste and keep warm.

4. While the sauce is reducing, bring a large pot of salted water to a boil. Add the egg noodles, stir and cook until they are al dente, about 10 minutes. Drain.

5. Mince the fresh parsley and the garlic clove together.

6. To serve, divide the noodles among six warmed dinner plates or shallow soup bowls. Place equal amounts of lamb atop the noodles and pour the sauce over all. Garnish with the parsley and garlic and serve immediately.

Yield: Six servings.

BASQUE CHICKEN WITH PEAS

3 tablespoons olive oil
3½ pounds chicken pieces
Salt and freshly ground black pepper to taste
2 large bell peppers, cored and sliced into ¼-inch pieces
1 large onion, thinly sliced
4 ounces lean slab bacon, rind removed and cut into ¼-inch dice
1 leafy sprig of parsley, coarsely chopped
3 cloves of garlic, minced
2 pounds fresh or frozen sweet green peas.

1. Heat the olive oil in a large frying pan or skillet over medium-high heat. When the oil is hot, brown the chicken on both sides, seasoning generously with salt and pepper.

2. Remove the chicken from the pan and reserve. Reduce the heat to medium and add the peppers, onion, bacon, parsley and garlic to the pan. Cook, stirring, constantly, until the garlic and onion become translucent, about five minutes.

3. Return the chicken to the pan, cover and cook over medium-low heat, stirring occasionally, until the chicken is nearly cooked through and the vegetables are tender, about 30 minutes.

4. Add the peas, stir gently, cover and cook just until they are heated through, three to five minutes. (If using frozen peas, increase the cooking time slightly.) Season to taste.

5. To serve, transfer the chicken and vegetables, to a warmed serving platter and pour the cooking juices over all.

Yield: Four servings.

GYPSY'S ARM CAKE

The pastry cream:
5 egg yolks
6 tablespoons sugar
¼ cup all-purpose flour
Pinch of salt
1½ to 1¾ cups milk
1 cinnamon stick
The cake:
7 large eggs, at room temperature, separated
1 cup granulated sugar
1¼ cups cake flour
1 teaspoon baking powder
½ teaspoon salt
1 teaspoon vanilla
3 tablespoons confectioners' sugar
¼ teaspoon cinnamon.

1. To make the pastry cream, whisk the egg yolks with the sugar in a medium sized bowl until they are thick and lemon colored. Whisk in the flour and salt and reserve.

2. Place one-and-a-half cups of the milk and the cinnamon stick in a medium-sized saucepan over medium-high heat. Scald, remove from the heat, cover and let stand for 15 minutes.

3. Remove the cinnamon stick from the milk and discard. Return the milk to the scalding point over medium-high heat and gradually whisk it into the egg yolk and flour mixture. Return this mixture to the saucepan and cook, stirring constantly, until the mixture comes to a boil. Continue cooking for at least two minutes, until the pastry cream thins slightly and the flour taste has cooked out of it. Remove from the heat, transfer to a bowl, cover and cool.

4. Preheat the oven to 375 degrees.

5. Line a 17-by-11-by-1-inch jellyroll pan with parchment paper. Brush with oil or melted butter and dust with flour.

6. To prepare the cake, beat the egg yolks with three-quarters of the cup of sugar in the bowl of an electric mixer, using the whisk attachment, until the mixture is thick and lemon colored. Sift together the dry ingredients. Remove the whisk attachment and, using the mixer attachment, add the dry ingredients at low speed, mixing until just incorporated. Add the vanilla, mix quickly and thoroughly and reserve. The mixture will be quite thick.

7. In a separate bowl, whisk the egg whites with the pinch of salt until they form stiff points. Add the remaining sugar and whisk until the egg whites become glossy, an additional 30 seconds. Fold one quarter of the egg whites into the flour and egg yolk mixture, then fold the remaining egg whites in, working quickly.

8. Spread the cake mixture in the prepared pan and bake until the cake is golden and the top springs back when lightly pressed, 8 to 10 minutes.

9. While the cake is baking, sift one tablespoon of the confectioners' sugar on a clean tea towel.

10. Remove the cake from the oven and immediately turn it over on top of the sugar-dusted towel. Peel the parchment paper from the cake and, working from the long side, gently roll the cake in the towel. Cool for about 30 minutes.

11. When the cake has cooled, unroll it. Trim off the edges of the cake. If necessary, thin the pastry cream slightly with additional milk, to easy spreading consistency. Spread an even layer on the cake. Carefully re-roll the cake and place it seam-side down on a serving platter.

12. Mix together the remaining confectioners' sugar and the cinnamon and sift it over the top of the cake. Serve immediately.

Yield: Ten to 12 servings.

BASQUE POTATO AND GREEN BEAN SOUP WITH GARLIC

1½ pounds russet potatoes, peeled and cut into 2-inch cubes
1 tablespoon Kosher salt
6 cups water
1 pound green beans, trimmed, cut on the slant into 2-inch lengths
6 tablespoons olive oil
6 large cloves garlic, thinly sliced
Freshly ground black pepper.

1. Place the potatoes, one tablespoon of salt and the water in a large saucepan over medium-high heat, cover and bring to a boil. Cook until the potatoes are nearly soft through, about 15 minutes. Add the green beans and cook, uncovered, until they start to turn tender and lose their bright green color, about 15 minutes.

2. While the beans and potatoes are cooking, heat the olive oil in a small saucepan over medium heat. When the oil is hot but not smoking, add the sliced garlic and cook, stirring constantly, until it turns golden brown, about five to eight minutes. Remove from the heat and reserve.

3. When the beans and potatoes are cooked, add the garlic and olive oil to the soup and stir. Season to taste with salt and pepper, if desired, and serve immediately.

Yield: Six servings.

WHAT "PROFIT" MEANS TO ROTARIANS

Mr. SYMMS. Mr. President, in an editorial printed in the Idaho Press-Tribune, the Idaho columnist Ralph Smeed talks about the word "profit" and what it means to Rotarians. Over the years, the Rotarians have taken it upon themselves to contribute significantly to a vast number of charitable causes, and their motto has been, "He profits most who serves the best."

It seems clear that the conception of the word represents a spiritual meaning. However, at the last Rotary International Convention, members voted to drop the term "profit" from their motto as they felt it was offensive and injurious to some of the participating countries.

Mr. President, profit is not a bad word, especially when one considers its meaning as regarded by the Rotarians. I must agree with Mr. Smeed when he goes on to say that profit is the driving force of America; it is what we are all about. It is precisely the notion of profit which allows groups such as the Rotarians to be charitable.

In order to remind ourselves of what we are as a country, I ask unanimous consent, Mr. President, that the editorial, "Hey Rotarians! Profit Not a Dirty Word," appearing in the August 20, 1989, edition of the Idaho Press-Tribune, be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Idaho Press-Tribune, Aug. 20, 1989]

HEY ROTARIANS! PROFIT NOT A DIRTY WORD

(By Ralph Smeed)

Time was when God, motherhood, apple pie and the flag reigned supreme.

But now "God" has pretty well been legislated out of the classroom, formally at least. Motherhood has been relegated to the back seat (no pun) by the population control gang; apple pie got a kick in the groin by CBS-TV's hysteria-mongering program 60-minutes when they attacked the apple spray ALAR. And the flag? Well, you know, the hippies and a few malcontents have convinced the Supreme Court it's not very bad even to burn it.

Comes now Rotary International, the worldwide service club whose motto is (or has been) "He profits most who serves the best." A fine slogan, I always thought, during the quarter century or so I've been a member in good standing (at least standing good enough not to get kicked out—so far).

Rotary, of course, means different things to different people. But generally their members donate lots of money to all sorts of good causes, not the least of which is good fellowship. Yet the 160 or so countries, the citizens of which enjoy the blessings of these Rotary Clubs, are not exactly in complete agreement as to where this largesse comes from.

Take it from me, gentle reader, there is lots of it, too. Donations include, but are not limited to, money for sports and electronic scoreboards in such local event centers as Caldwell's O'Connor Field House to a worldwide crusade buying enough polio vaccine to eradicate the dreaded disease from every country's citizens.

A pretty impressive undertaking, I think you'll agree, and these are only a few of many worthwhile efforts Rotarians are up to every year all round the world. All these fine efforts to do good, and believe me, they are many and costly, are financed out of the club members' profit, hence the slogan of long years' high standing and understandable respect, if not reverence.

"He profits most . . ." then would seem destined to be chiseled, so to speak, in stone and forever. But, sad to say, it is not so. Even though most any fool could plainly see "profit" comes in many ways including, certainly, psychic profits. But we are here concerned more with the financial variety of profit inasmuch as the money is from whence cometh all. And it's all voluntary, too.

Let's hasten to add we don't want to put down the many hours of dedicated and hard work the members contribute to their clubs, but most of this is to make money (read, profit) with which to pay for their projects.

Comes now Dr. William Fomey a retired medical doctor of Boise who is district governor of this Rotary area. A nice man. He told us last week that Rotary International's convention at Seoul, Korea, voted to drop the word profit from their famous slogan because "to some of the countries the word was offensive." Well, poor babies. One assumes these were communist countries who objected; though I'm not 100 percent sure. But wherever they were, it is sad indeed to see America's principles taken so lightly.

Now then, Rotary is a nonprofit organization, but anyone who can count, and even many who cannot, know full well that nothing happens until somebody sells something. Furthermore, if they don't sell it at a profit, damn few if any of these fine charitable efforts, local and worldwide, can succeed.

Why then does the prejudice against profit persist? It's not exactly a new phenomenon, you know. Well, we might better have asked why the prejudice against the whole profit (and loss) system for that's what America is all about. It is the "steam" that drives the USA's engine of producing. Maybe our own convictions are weak, however.

The late, great R.G. LeTourneau, builder of huge machines that moved the face of the earth for the benefit of masses said, "Men can have what men produce. They cannot have what they don't produce." (Except, he should have added, by politics). Apparently the well-meaning Rotary "wheels" at Seoul had never heard of LeTourneau's wheels.

They could have consulted Robert Ringer, too, author of the best-selling Restoring the American Dream which was so enthusiastically endorsed by former Secretary of the Treasury William Simon. Ringer sums up the profit flap thusly:

"This was the ultimate in logic twisting. Profits, the thing that makes the whole American way of life possible—including "free" handouts through government functions—were being termed a "catastrophe." Perhaps Mr. Kahn (the government's chief inflation fighter) will be happy when Atlas finally shrugs and says, "You're right, profits are evil. I'm not going to waste my time earning them anymore. I quit."

After the profit seekers quit—then—where does Rotary International turn to raise money for their no doubt sincere do-good functions? At that point the ball game is over.

The U.S. Chamber of Commerce says that profit is NOT a dirty word, but I guess they haven't talked to enough Rotary Clubs lately.

RICHARD BROWN

Mr. SYMMS. Mr. President, I am saddened to say for the RECORD that Rich Brown, who was born and raised in southwestern Idaho, and who had a significant impact on the start of my political career back in the early 1970's in Idaho, recently passed away at a very young age, sooner than we expected.

Mr. President, the obituary of Richard Brown, a man who contributed significantly to this community, recently appeared in the Idaho Press-Tribune.

Rich was 62 years old. He was a thinker, and a really, very fine gentleman. He made a great deal of contribution to our community, and I regret his passing, and extend my sympathies to his wife, Barbara, and their family.

Richard Brown was born and raised in southwestern Idaho where he spent his adult life building a fleet of school buses, priding himself on the safety and dependability of his establishment. Others, namely his employees and the schoolchildren, were always his first priority. His dedication to the welfare of his community is further illustrated by his contributions to the Republican Party and the Nampa City Chamber of Commerce, his church, and lodge organizations.

In honor of this fine citizen, Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that Richard Brown's obituary be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

RICHARD BROWN

G. Richard "Rich" Brown, 62, of Nampa, died Tuesday, Dec. 5, 1989, at his home of natural causes. Funeral services will be held at 1 p.m. Friday, Dec. 8, at the First Christian Church, Nampa, with Pastor Kenneth B. Britt officiating. Burial will follow at Kohlerlawn Cemetery, Nampa, with Masonic Rites by Ashlar Lodge No. 29, AF & AM.

Richard was born on June 30, 1927, at Marsing, Idaho, the youngest of three children of Grundy and Ruby Baggerly Brown. He was raised and educated in Nampa and graduated from Nampa High School in 1945. He then attended Washington State University at Pullman, Wash. Richard joined the U.S. Army in 1946, and was honorably discharged at Fort Ord, Calif., in 1948. He married Barbara Jean Lessinger Sept. 15, 1948, in Nampa and three daughters were born to this union. Following his military service, Richard joined his father and brother in the livestock trucking business, G.M. Brown and Sons. In 1952 they purchased a fleet of 10 school buses from Howard Gibbs and founded the Brown Bus Co. In 1966 Richard bought out his father's and brother's shares. At the time of his semi-retirement in 1987, the company had grown to a fleet of 60 buses.

Richard pursued all of his business ventures with intensity and set high expectations for his associates and employees, especially "Mr. Brown's bus drivers." He was dedicated to making the Brown Bus Co. a first-class, dependable and safe operation. He made satisfying his customers—the school board, patrons and children—his highest priority.

Richard was active in the Republican Party, serving as national committeeman for Goldwater in 1964 and for several years as Canyon County chairman. He was also a very active member of the Nampa Chamber of Commerce, serving on its board for 16 years and as president in 1971. He received many special Chamber awards and was currently chairman of the transportation committee.

He was a member of the First Christian Church; Ashlar Lodge No. 29, AF & AM, Nampa; the Scottish Rite Bodies of Boise; El Korah Shrine Temple, Boise; Nampa Lodge No. 1389; BPOE; the Nampa Countrymen's Club; and a former member of the Nampa Rotary Club.

Survivors include his wife, Barbara Jean of Nampa; three daughters and their families, Peggy J. and Vaughn Heinrich and their sons, Jeremy and Benjamin, all of Caldwell; Anne L. and Duane Harris and their children, Matthew and Katie, all of Coeur d'Alene; Sharon E. and Frank Kyzer and their children, Joshua and Elizabeth, all of Nampa; a brother, Robert of Nampa; a sister, Norma Montgomery of Boise; and numerous nieces and nephews.

He was preceded in death by his father, mother and a grandson, David Kyzer.

Because of his years of dedicated service to the Nampa community, the family suggests memorials be made to the Nampa Civic Center, designated for the "Rich Brown Memorial Fund," in care of Nampa City Hall, 411 3rd St. S., Nampa 83651.

Friends may call until 9 p.m. today and from 9 to 11 a.m. Friday at Flahiff Funeral Chapel of Nampa.

EMILY RENO, ONE OF AMERICA'S 10 MOST CARING PEOPLE

Mr. SYMMS. Mr. President, an Idahoan was recently honored as one of America's "10 Most Caring People." Aside from the Governor and the mayor, she's the most known person in Boise. Emily Reno, at nearly 80 years of age, is a woman who reaches out to everyone. Her accomplishments are almost too many to be counted.

Known as the Lady in Blue for nearly 40 years, Mrs. Reno has been actively involved in anything having to do with volunteering from the Salvation Army to the Veterans Affairs Volunteer Services Advisory Council. Given the amount of effort she puts into the well-being of others, it is no surprise that she has been chosen as one of the most caring of us all.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the article about Emily Reno, appearing both in the December issue of the magazine Caring People and December 31, 1989, issue of New Frontier be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE ANGEL IN BLUE: EMILY RENO

Emily Reno is loved and known by everyone in Boise, Idaho, from the mayor to the loneliest shut-in," Senator Steve Symms said in nominating Reno for a caring award. "Those who know her, love her, and appreciate her. We're all proud to be part of her life."

For nearly forty years, Emily has been known as the "Lady in Blue." She was enrolled in the Salvation Army as a soldier in January of 1950. Over the years, she has served as home league treasurer, roll sergeant, welcome sergeant, War Cry sergeant, Sunday school teacher, and for 27 years, home league secretary.

"The Salvation Army helped instill love in me," says Reno. "Love is not just L-O-V-E, a four-letter word. Love is something you have to feel."

Reno's specialty is visiting shut-ins, nursing home's residents, and other lonely people. Although she is now nearly eighty years old, Reno drives her own car and makes her rounds. "I love to visit people," she says. "They all become personal friends. What I am doing shows what I believe. It's better than preaching," says Reno, who adds: "It also reminds me how thankful I should be that I'm a visitor and not the person being visited."

Reno's personal "war cry" has always been, "I'll do it," "it" referring to any job that needs doing. "You can always count on Emily to be in the kitchen, helping with cleanup," says Joy Brusmeyer, program director at the Salvation Army. "She genuinely cares for people, and that caring just spills over."

"I don't know what she's not into," says Bill Turner, director of voluntary services for the VA Medical Center in Boise. "Aside from the Governor and the Mayor, she's the most known person in Boise."

Each year during the Christmas holidays, Reno takes to her station, ringing the handbell at the familiar Salvation Army kettle. "We keep thinking she should reconsider, but out she goes. People will go out of their way to stop by and give to her kettle," Brusmeyer says. "Needless to say, she's our biggest fundraiser."

For the past 18 years, Reno has also raised money for the March of Dimes by participating in the annual WalkAmerica. She walks the entire 20-mile route each time. "The first year she asked me for a pledge," Turner says, "I considered her age, her 5'2" height and her slightly portly figure and made a rather generous pledge per mile. Several weeks later, she came back holding out her hand for over one hundred dollars."

When asked to what she owes her vitality, Reno explains: "I love life. I love people. I love the Lord."

She is usually the top fundraiser, reports Imogene Carico, director of the state-wide March of Dimes chapter. "One year she won a moped as a prize. She sold it and gave the money to a young couple she knew who were trying to move to Alaska," Carico recalls.

For three years, Reno participated in the Salvation Army's 10-mile Walk for Hunger. She has donated 9½ gallons of blood to the Red Cross over the years. She has also worked with the Cystic Fibrosis Foundation and was active in the Eagles Auxiliary lodge.

Reno seems to go wherever there is a need. She visits people in the VA hospital and the local jail. For the VA, she visits not only the medical center but also the Idaho State Veterans Home and community nursing homes. She runs errands, pays bills, and sits and chats with those who are in need of companionship. Reno also serves on the Veterans Affairs Volunteer Services Advisory Council.

When she first mentioned going to visit inmates of the jail, one of Reno's friends admonished her to be careful. "It's all right," she replied. "They'll be glad to see someone." Reno was right.

"She has a tremendous capacity to love and care for people," Turner says. "You can't get by without a hug." Everyone who knows Emily agrees.

"Her hug is her trademark," Brusmeyer says. "She reaches out and touches people and they respond." "If you took a poll, you couldn't find too many people in Boise who haven't been hugged by Emily," Carico adds. "When she says she needs a hug, you just give her one, coming and going."

A widow who now lives alone, Emily has raised five children. Three of them still live in the area and follow their mother's example, working with the rape crisis center, the Salvation Army, and the Cystic Fibrosis Foundation.

Each day, as she visits the sick, the elderly, and the homebound, Emily makes the dark days a little brighter for the shut-ins and those in the twilight of life. In words of Captain Daniel Starret, Boise Corps Officer, "She is a very special person. She gives her heart to God, her hand to man, and hugs for all."

Mr. SYMMS. Mr. President, on behalf of Senator KASTEN, I ask unanimous consent to add Pat Rich to the list of his staff granted access to the Senate floor during the consideration of the National Community Service Act of 1990.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. SYMMS. Mr. President, I yield the floor.

ORDERS FOR TOMORROW

RECESS UNTIL 10:30 A.M.; MORNING BUSINESS UNTIL 11 A.M.; RECESS FROM 12:30 P.M. TO 2:15 P.M.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that when the Senate completes its business today, it stand in recess until 10:30 a.m. tomorrow, Tuesday, February 27, and that following the time for the two leaders there be a period for morning business until 11 a.m., with Senators permitted to speak therein for up to 5 minutes each. I further ask unanimous consent that the Senate stand in recess from 12:30 p.m. until 2:15 p.m. in order to accommodate the party conference luncheons.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

PROGRAM

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, tomorrow at 11 the Senate will resume consideration of S. 1430, the national and community service bill. At 2:15 p.m. tomorrow, there will be 2 hours of debate on the motion to invoke cloture on the motion to proceed to Senate Joint Resolution 212, the Armenian resolution, with the time equally divided between Senators BYRD and DOLE. A vote on the cloture motion will occur at 4:15 p.m. Other votes are likely to occur during tomorrow's session.

RECESS UNTIL 10:30 A.M. TOMORROW

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, the Senate will stand in recess until 10:30 a.m., Tuesday, February 27.

There being no objection, the Senate, at 5:40 p.m., recessed until Tuesday, February 27, 1990, at 10:30 a.m.

NOMINATIONS

Executive nominations received by the Secretary of the Senate after the recess of the Senate on February 23, 1990, under authority of the order of the Senate of January 3, 1989:

EXTENSIONS OF REMARKS

FRENZEL-AUCOIN INTRODUCE MAJOR REVISION OF EXPORT CONTROL LAWS

HON. BILL FRENZEL

OF MINNESOTA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, February 26, 1990

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Speaker, today, Congressman AUCOIN and I have introduced H.R. 4101, a major revision of the Export Administration Act which is designed to modernize our export control policy. It is designed to respond to the sweeping changes occurring in Eastern Europe as well as to obtain the reform we have needed for years to move our policy closer to that of our European allies at Cocom. In my judgment, if we do not modernize our own system and cooperate more fully with our allies to restrict international controls to the highest technology items, Cocom could be disbanded, or ignored, at great cost to the security of the entire free world. If that happens, it is clear to me that our allies will significantly relax their own export control systems, while, if our system continues as it is, ours will continue to be more restrictive in response. That would send us farther back into the Dark Ages than we are now.

The Frenzel-AuCoin bill would place Commerce in charge of the entire licensing process, the control list and negotiations at Cocom. Interagency review would be at the discretion of Commerce. It would decontrol all licenses to Cocom and 5(k) countries, it would decontrol licenses to all other countries, except the U.S.S.R. and the P.R.C., at a revised green zone centered around a 750-PDR rate for computers. For the U.S.S.R. and the P.R.C. the current P.R.C. green zone would determine the line for decontrol. The bill would also establish only one control list with a process to remove unilateral controls and to index the list regularly. It requires that foreign availability determinations be made in 90 days with no opportunity for negotiations to maintain controls with our allies. It permits no extraterritorial application of U.S. laws through reexport controls, and only the foreign boycott law would include U.S. subsidiaries in other countries. Multiple licenses would be available to controlled countries for the first time, and all telecommunications equipment used in civilian applications would be decontrolled, allowing U.S. companies to compete for what will probably be a first priority of many Eastern European countries—to update their telecommunications systems. We have also given Commerce some guidelines to facilitate supercomputer sales. Short supply and the multilateral controls [Toshiba] have been abolished. The threshold for the proposed supercomputer definition has been raised, OMB review has been restricted, Commerce USTR and Treasury will be members of the National Security Council when export control disputes may be elevated to the President through the NSC. Commerce has been given added enforcement authority and DTSA will now serve under the Under Secretary of Defense for Acquisitions. Foreign policy controls, which need drastic reform as well, if not elimination, have not been touched in this bill other than to exclude U.S. subsidiaries abroad from their application. National Security controls should be the first priority for revision. Foreign policy should follow soon thereafter, however.

Some of the changes are substantive, but I do not believe that our redraft threatens our national security. In fact, it would strengthen it by improving Cocom enforcement and placing more emphasis on negotiating new control agreements with more countries. Authority would also be given to grant new benefits as countries become less of a security risk. This will encourage more, not less, cooperation.

Granting Commerce's sole authority throughout the bill is a means to strengthen our national security, not weaken it. So many resources are wasted today in turf battles resulting from unnecessary interagency review that should be redirected at the highest technology levels which could have a militarily critical application. Here is where we should direct our attention. I do not believe Commerce will act in a vacuum. It will request review by other agencies to protect itself. If licensing mistakes, or list review mistakes, are made, DOC alone is responsible. Now the blame is placed by pointing a finger at the next player at the table. That should not happen—there must be one central authority, not many. The agency responsible for licensing should also decide what is on the control list and also negotiate at Cocom.

Even though I believe there is sufficient enforcement authority today, the Frenzel-AuCoin bill would strengthen enforcement by giving Commerce enforcement authority abroad and at U.S. ports. With its elevated role on export control, Commerce must also have added authority in the enforcement arena.

There have been many positive export control bills introduced. Many of them would place pressure on Commerce to avoid errors, particularly those that would remove all export control authority from Commerce and establish a new agency to administer these laws. In my judgment, we should give Commerce a chance to prove itself before we move in this direction. We all know the problems associated with the establishment of new agencies, and most of us tread lightly into that area.

Mr. Speaker, a few years ago the National Academy of Science reported that unnecessary export controls caused the United States to lose $9 billion of sales per year. I am sure that would be far greater if we do not relax our laws to adapt to the changes taking place in Eastern Europe. I hope this bill will encourage the House to move aggressively to overhaul the current system. We cannot afford to make minor revisions in a time of major progress. The time to begin reform is now.

The section-by-section analysis of the bill follows:

FRENZEL-AUCOIN EXPORT CONTROL BILL

SECTION-BY-SECTION ANALYSIS

Section 1—Short Title and Table of Contents.

Section 2—General Provisions:

(a)—(a) Authority to control by Commerce and presumption of approval for exports to all countries defined.

(d)—License free zone for CoCom and 5(k) countries, [3(b) in this bill].

(e)—No license for replacement parts.

(f)—No re-export licenses.

(g)—No licenses on certain goods containing components subject to export controls within six months of enactment.

(h)—No controls on news or equipment related to broadcast of news or of the news itself.

(i)—No licenses for telecommunications equipment for civilian use.

(j)—No licenses to free world and controlled countries at revised PRC green zone at 750 PDR. USSR and PRC receive current green zone. Indexing system developed within six months of enactment.

(k)—No licenses for exhibited items if title held by exporter.

(l)—Effective date for (d) and (j) is December 31, 1990.

Section 3—Countries:

(a)—Controlled—Commerce, consulting with State, publishes list of controlled within three months of enactment.

(b)—Commerce negotiates with other countries to obtain CoCom-like control systems and CoCom treatment. May also provide additional benefits for other countries which are moving in our direction. Commerce may also reduce or eliminate treatment for any country not living up to its agreement with US. Would require that the current and future 3(b) agreements be published in the Federal Register.

Section 4—Commodity Control List:

(a)—Secretary establishes and maintains one control list of dual-use items. Consults with other agencies as necessary. List revisions published in Federal Register.

(b)—Quarterly review of list by Commerce. Thirty day comment period provided for each review in Federal Register. Determinations by 30 days after end of review period. CoCom proposals by US based on this process.

(c)—Indexing procedure for removal of list items established within six months.

(d)—Secretary also receives private sector requests for list revision and makes determination within 90 days. If agreed, implemented within 120 days and published in Register. Rejections also published along with explanation.

(e)—Secretary makes foreign availability determinations on own or upon receipt of petitions. Decision within 90 days. If decision that no foreign availability exists, explanation provided to petitioner.

(f)—Licenses.

(1)—Validated to single end user.

● This "bullet" symbol identifies statements or insertions which are not spoken by a Member of the Senate on the floor.

Matter set in this typeface indicates words inserted or appended, rather than spoken, by a Member of the House on the floor.

(2)—Multiple export licenses as follows:

(A)—Distribution licenses authorized to any destination. Secretary determines diversion prospects. Audits permitted. Secretary issues regulations facilitating granting of DL's to smaller companies.

(B)—Comprehensive operations license, establish within six months—to subsidiaries in all countries. Audits here also.

(C)—Project license, including multilaterally approved projects.

(D)—Service supply license—for spare parts.

(3)—General license.

(4)—Other licenses authorized.

(5)—Secretary determines reliability of applicants.

(6)—Licenses issued or denied within 60 days. If Secretary refers, does so within ten days. Reviewers respond in 20 days or deemed to have approved. Referred licenses issued within 45 days of receipt.

(7)—Regulations within six months to facilitate sales of high-end items, including setting of deadlines and development of model security plans. Each six month Secretary reports those licenses which have not been acted upon within four months along with reasons for delay.

(8)—Any review of the SNEC shall be requested by Commerce and must comply with regulations established under 4(f)(7).

(g)—Unilateral export controls expire within six months. If no foreign availability, may extend six months. May also extend six months if pursuing negotiations to achieve controls.

(h)—Supercomputer definition raised to 250 MFLOPs. To qualify for additional safeguards, the definition is raised to 600 MFLOPs for OECD countries and 250 for other free world. Indexing provided.

(i)—Secretary must consider exceptions to International Lists and support CoCom allies requests for exceptions if suitable civilian end users.

Section 5—Negotiations.

(a)—Secretary heads US delegation. List of objectives stated, including publication of the ICL's, improved enforcement, uniform interpretation, development of decontrol system, attempt to expand membership, direction to delete telecommunications products for civilian use from ICLs, negotiate an agreement on revised supercomputer definition consistent with Sec. 4 (h), and negotiate end to unanimity rule. Secretary includes private sector advisors for list review.

Section 6—Foreign Boycotts:

This language is identical to current law.

Section 7—Foreign Policy Controls:

This language is identical to current law.

Section 8—Administrative Procedure:

(b)—civil penalties—hearing before ALJ. Secretary reviews ALJ decision and decides within 30 days. No judicial review. ALJ has 1 year.

(c)—Secretary may issue temporary denial orders to prevent violations. 180 day limit with 180 day extension if justified. Renewal only after hearing.

(d)—annual report similar to current report.

(e)—Under Secretary and 2 Assistant Secretaries authorized.

(f)—regulations authorized.

(g)—guide must be published quarterly consisting of list of controlled items and how they are applied to countries, the CoCom International Lists, list of precedent-setting exports, list of those denied export privileges as well as those identified under the Trading with the Enemy Act.

(h)—Secretary can delegate to any government official.

(i)—TACs—authorized for 2 year periods. Use of TACs is elevated throughout the bill.

Section 9—Violations:

This language is similar to current law.

Section 10—Enforcement—similar to current law, except:

Commerce is given additional authority to conduct enforcement efforts abroad, at U.S. ports of entry and is granted the same enforcement authority as Customs.

Section 11—Definitions—normal definitions, except that definition of "U.S. person" which includes foreign subsidiaries only applies to boycott.

Section 12—Miscellaneous Provisions:

(b)—Sec. 38 of Arms Export Control Act is repealed.

(c)—OMB shall not conduct further agency review.

(d)—Commerce, Treasury and USTR serve on NSC.

(e)—No user fees on export license applications.

(f)—DTSA placed under Under Secretary of Defense for Acquisitions.

FRENZEL-AuCOIN INTRODUCE MAJOR REVISION OF EXPORT CONTROL LAWS

HON. LES AuCOIN

OF OREGON

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, February 26, 1990

Mr. AuCOIN. Mr. Speaker, in 1988, the Congress passed and the President signed into law omnibus trade legislation which, among other things, included a number of reforms designed to help streamline the U.S. export control system. For many years, I have been saying that your export licensing process was too cumbersome, too far reaching, and too anachronistic to keep pace with the march of technological innovation in this country. Ironically, the U.S. Government itself has put America's high technology industry at a competitive disadvantage, a fact documented by the National Academy of Sciences which found that U.S. industry loses approximately $9 billion a year in sales because of our burdersome export license process.

I was pleased that the Congress recognized this problem in 1988 and, although the reforms did not go as far as I would have liked, it was my hope that the reforms would help America's sunrise industry flex its competitive muscles in the international marketplace.

While the export licensing system works more efficiently that it did 5 years ago—thanks in great part to the Department of Commerce, the administration has not moved as quickly and aggressively as I had hoped in implementing the legislative changes we made. The fact is that the pace of innovation in the high technology field is still much greater than the speed with which the U.S. Government can respond.

Meanwhile, the dramatic events taking place in the Soviet Union and East Europe warrant a reexamination of the stringency of our export control system. That system, which was a product of the cold war, has become tighter and tighter during the Reagan years. Although it usually reached too far, there was always a good reason to be concerned about the Soviet military buildup and the risk of diversion. But times have clearly changed. The new political world that is emerging in those countries warrants a fresh examination of how much U.S. technology we need to keep locked up in our warehouses. Does the evil empire approach to export controls that has been championed for so long by a paranoid Department of Defense make any sense any more?

I think not.

It makes good economic and political sense for the United States to embark on a high technology Marshall plan vis a vis the new emerging democracies in East Europe. We should also allow our exporters to break into the new market for low level technology in the Soviet Union. At the same time, of course, we cannot forget our long relationships and the lucrative markets in the allied nations.

These emerging issues compel Congressman FRENZEL and me to call for dramatic action.

By September 30, 1990, the Congress will have to reauthorize the Export Administration Act. While some are saying that we should seek a mere 1-year extension of the act, I say that's a head in the sand approach that could spell disaster. For once, let's take the bull by the horns and truly help make one American industry competitive again.

The bill that we are introducing today is the product of many discussions with the U.S. high technology industry. It is by no means a perfect bill. Its main purpose is to begin the debate on where we will go from here.

Among other things, our bill would do the following:

Establish a license free zone for Cocom and 5-K nations, effective on December 31, 1990. This is a proposal that we put forward in 1987 and which the House of Representatives contained in its version of the 1988 omnibus trade bill. But our proposal was eventually watered down in conference. The final law required the administration designate certain countries for license free treatment if it was determined that they had adequate export control systems. Incredibly, no countries have been recommended for such treatment so far. This is outrageous. Over 80 percent of U.S. high technology exports go to these countries and the overwhelming majority of licenses are granted with no problem. Meanwhile, most Cocom members do not require export licenses of any kind of high technology exports to other Cocom members. This puts our high technology companies behind the eight ball in the competition with overseas products. If most Cocom licenses are approved anyway, why go through the exercise to begin with? And why tie up people at the Department of Commerce rubber stamping these licenses when they could be devoting more time to the examination of truly sensitive items?

Eliminate reexport controls. Incredibly, the United States still requires an exporter in a foreign country to get permission to reexport a U.S. product outside of Cocom. This is an insult to foreign nations that has generated incredible controversy over the years. To those who would raise the appropriate question of national security, remember that a shipment that goes to a Cocom country is still subject to controls imposed by Cocom. In other words, under our bill the United States exporter would be able to ship an item to France, and France would not have to get permission from our Department of Commerce to reexport the item. But France would still have to adhere to the export controls imposed by Cocom—and the United States sits on Cocom. Therefore, there would always be controls on sensitive items.

Establish a license free zone on low-level technologies for all free world and Eastern European countries. The U.S. exporters who wish to ship high technology items with a capacity of up to 750 PDR could ship them without a license. When it comes to East Europe, there are boundless opportunities for establishing joint ventures, increasing trade, extending credit, and so forth, and we must take advantage of this situation or else these governments could backslide. But we cannot be naive about the reforms in East Europe. We know how quickly the political world can change in these volatile countries. So, we are not advocating that we permit the license free export of all technologies. Those items of any military significance will still have to go through rigorous review, but clearly we are now in a safe enough position to allow the export of 15-year-old technologies and help these nations aggressively enter these new and exciting markets.

Allow the license free export of any high technology product with a capacity of up to 550 PDR to the Soviet Union. We cannot ignore President Gorbachev's new arms reductions initiatives, the improvement in human rights in the Soviet Union and, of course, the incredible changes in East Europe. Although the Soviet Union is not moving as fast as their former bloc countries toward market oriented societies, it makes sense to begin to tap, or create, the potential markets in the U.S.S.R. Releasing this level of technology poses no threat at all to our national security. At the same time, it could mean billions of dollars to U.S. exporters. If we stand by the sidelines, we are going to lose out on some potentially large markets that surely will be snatched up by our more aggressive competitors. Now is the time to launch a new kind of first strike weapon—American know-how.

Require the Department of Commerce to be responsible for the establishment of a single control list. The current lists of controlled items in this country has gotten way out of hand. It's time to put one agency in charge—and that agency should be Commerce. For years, U.S. industry has been confused by the unclear jurisdictional lines between Commerce's responsibility for dual use commodities and the State Department's munitions export control authority. In some cases, industry has been required to submit parallel license applications, subjecting them to additional burdens and delays. Current practice allows State to assume jurisdiction over a dual use product without consultation with Commerce or industry. We propose that Commerce be responsible for the construction of a single control list.

Eliminate DOD's role in export licensing. Defense still exerts an inordinate amount of influence on the export control process and they still maintain a very hard line view of the world. Last year, the General Accounting Office issued a report at my request which documented that in the vast majority of cases, Defense did not contribute any new knowledge to the process of determining if export of the product would be a threat to our national security. Our bill would transfer the Defense Technology Security Administration to the Under Secretary of Defense for Acquisition. The Department of Commerce, as the lead agency responsible for export controls, would at its option consult with Defense—and others—when it felt it needed the Defense Department's expertise.

Decontrol all telecommunications equipment for civilian use.

DRUG DETERRENCE LEGISLATION

HON. GERALD B.H. SOLOMON

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, February 26, 1990

Mr. SOLOMON. Mr. Speaker, today I am introducing legislation that would suspend Federal education benefits to any individual convicted of a controlled substance abuse.

It can definitely be a hard lesson, but one worth learning. Don't use drugs. Attitudes are changing, but we need to continue to make people think before they get involved with drugs. Casual drug users make up a large percentage of the drug epidemic and are one of the biggest reasons why we continue to see drug trafficking in the United States. Due to the backlog of drug-related cases in our courts, casual users face minimal sentencing, if any at all.

Under this legislation any individual who has been convicted of a Federal or State offense involving a controlled substance would no longer be eligible to receive Federal education benefits for the following amounts of time:

If convicted of an offense involving:

	Ineligibility period is:
Possession of a controlled substance:
1st offense	1 year.
2d offense	2 years.
3d offense	Indefinite.
Sale of a controlled substance:
1st offense	2 years.
2d offense	Indefinite.

These penalties would be nullified, if the individual successfully completes a rehabilitation program.

Suspending Federal education benefits is just one more way for us to show that we are not going to tolerate casual drug use any more and I would like for all my colleagues to join me by supporting this drug deterrence legislation.

TESTIMONY FROM "MAIN STREET NORTH"

HON. JAMES L. OBERSTAR

OF MINNESOTA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, February 26, 1990

Mr. OBERSTAR. Mr. Speaker, the following testimony on defense priorities was presented to me recently by several constituents in Duluth, MN.

I commend these remarks to my colleagues.

JANUARY 10, 1990.

Re: Main Street North.

JAMES L. OBERSTAR,
8th District, MN.

Congressman and Northlanders, I would like to briefly share with you a bit of the information I've gathered as I research viable Conversions from our current Military Economy.

First, it is necessary to recognize that our traditional definition of national security in military terms is an outmoded concept . . . real security is increasingly to be found in global cooperation.

Humanity's quest for the ultimate weapon has delivered the global community into an all-encompassing state of insecurity. The prime losers in maintaining a state of constant war prepation are civilians. The death toll in the 22 wars raging in the 80's (most far removed from western thinking) was 85% civilian. (Sivard, '88)

Economically, a permanent war economy results in: Deterioration of the nations' vital infrastructure; Retardation of civilian research & development; and Loss of competitiveness.

An estimated two thirds of the products civilian (fixed reproducable, tangible) wealth are now in dire need of reconstruction. These include: industrial plants and machinery, communications and transport systems, buildings, bridges, H20 systems, so on. (Melman, '86).

Policies relevant to society's future security needs must be re-oriented. Environmental degredation requires our "national" security to become an ongoing cooperation globally to manage Earth's resources. International H20 disputes, toxic clouds, soil erosion, and climate shifts have become our "security" concerns. Military means cannot reverse resource depletion or restore lost ecological balance.

As we enter this last decade of the 20th century, we must turn away from our history of military development toward a future which will leave something of our human heritage to the children of the 21st century. For example, the cost of the Stealth bomber program of 68,000,000 will cover 2/3 of the estimated cost of meeting U.S. clean water goals by the year 2000.

Congressman, I urge you to be stubborn and insistent in your efforts to turn the direction of our nation toward a sustainable future. Thank you.

TABLE 8.—TRADE-OFFS BETWEEN MILITARY AND SOCIAL OR ENVIRONMENTAL PRIORITIES

Military priority	Cost	Social/environmental priority
Trident II submarine and F–16 jet fighter programs.	$100,000,000,000	Estimated clean-up cost for the 3,000 worst hazardous waste dumps in the United States.
Stealth bomber program.....	68,000,000,000	Two-thirds of estimated costs to meet U.S. clean water goals by 2000.
Requested SDI Funding fiscal year 1988–92.	39,000,000,000	Disposal of highly radioactive waste in the United States (non-military).
2 Weeks of world military expenditure.	30,000,000,000	Annual cost of the proposed U.N. Water and Sanitation Decade.
German outlays for military procurement and R&D, FY 1985.	10,750,000,000	Estimated clean-up costs for West German sector of the North Sea.
Approx. 4 days of global military spending.	8,000,000,000	Action Plan over 5 years to save the world's tropical forests.
Development cost for Midgetman ICBM.	6,000,000,000	Annual cost to cut U.S. sulfur dioxide emissions by 8–12 million tons/year to combat acid rain.
Approx. 2 days of global military spending.	4,800,000,000	Annual cost of proposed U.N. Action Plan to halt Third World desertification over 20 years.
6 months of U.S. outlays for nuclear warheads, FY 1986.	4,000,000,000	U.S. government outlays for energy efficiency, FY 1980–87.
SDI research, FY 1987	3,700,000,000	Enough funds to build a solar power system serving a city of 200,000.
3 weeks of military spending of countries with literacy rates of 50 percent or less.	2,400,000,000	Additional UNESCO budget needs, over a decade, to eliminate illiteracy worldwide.
10 days of European Economic Community military spending.	2,000,000,000	Annual cost to clean up hazardous waste sites in 10 European Economic community countries by the year 2000.
1 Trident submarine.....	1,400,000,000	5-year child immunization program against 6 deadly diseases, preventing 1 million deaths a year.
3 B–1B bombers	680,000,000	U.S. government spending on renewable energy, FY 1983–85.
2 months of Ethiopian military spending.	50,000,000	Annual cost of proposed U.N. Antidesertification Plan for Ethiopia.
1 nuclear weapon test.....	12,000,000	Installation of 80,000 hand pumps to give Third World villages access to safe water.
1-hour operating cost, B–1B bomber.	21,000	Community-based maternal health care in 10 African villages to reduce maternal deaths by half in one decade.

A boy who entered high school decided that rather than concentrate on classes or spend time in constructive extra curricular activities, he would "dominate" his fellow students. He would be the strongest, most defensive, most offensive kid in class. He had brass knuckles, knife, and later even a gun to insure that. He did body building exercises so that he looked strong although he was not. He used drugs to help him forget that he didn't feel good about himself.

After gaduation his classmates got jobs, made community decisions, maintained healthy lifestyles. He was unemployed, hungry and felt powerless. He took more drugs and was easy prey for covert manipulations.

We as a country are like that boy. We will worry about being the most domineering, strongest country without improving from within. We need to: Produce goods and food to be self sustaining: solve social problems (drugs, education, employment, medicine).

For instance, as the food production moves away from the family farm, into the big food cartels the possibility of and enemy takeover of our food supply becomes greater.

Defense should mean solving internal problems, or we will have our own "D" day: Discontent, Drugs, Disease, Danger, Depression, and Destitution.

Thank you very much, Mr. Oberstar, for this opportunity!

Hon. JAMES OBERSTAR,
House of Representatives,
Washington, DC.

DEAR JIM: Since I am unable to attend your public meeting tonight I would like to take this opportunity to make a few comments with this letter.

First of all let me say that I am very happy to see world tension reduced to the point where this nation can shift some attention away from the military and start concentrating on its own needs. The list could be long, but I will condense it to what I consider to be of primary concern:

(1) Help for the homeless; (2) Health care for everyone; (3) Education; (4) City infrastructure: (A) streets, (B) side walks, (C) sewage disposal, (E) parks and recreation. (5) Drug treatment programs; and (6) Restoration of the "J.F.K." Youth Job Corp.

Thanks for your consideration. I appreciate your giving us an opportunity to express our opinion.

Yours truly,

WILLARD M. CLARK.

DULUTH, MN,
January, 10, 1990.

Hon. JAMES OBERSTAR,
Member of U.S. Congress, Room 213 Federal Building, 515 W. First St., Duluth, MN.

DEAR CONGRESSMAN: During years of the cold war, and especially of the Reagan and Bush administrations, federal appropriations for social services have been reduced in order that appropriations for armament could be increased. And now that Secretary Gorbachev is seeking lesser expenditures for armament, in order to have more Soviet funds for other purposes, it seems to me obvious that we should make a similar adjustment. Our failure to do so would weaken the support for him, and so increase the possibility that his right-wing opponents, who may want to continue the cold war, will be able to replace him. In order to reduce the potential for war, I think we should do everything we can to keep him, or possibly Yeltsin, in power.

As I understand military principles, a larger force is required for offense, than is required for defense; and therefore I consider it downright damaging for us to maintain larger numbers under arms, or larger investments in armaments, than does the U.S.S.R.

There is a tendency to try to find other uses for the military, and especially in trying to stop the flow of cocaine from Colombia and Peru. Social workers generally think they are more apt to succeed by working with potential drug users to reduce the demand. Former Secretary of State, George Schultz supported their position on WDSE-TV during the past week. The best analysis of the subject may be "Fighting Drugs With the Military" by Michael T. Klare, in The Nation for 1990 Jan. 1. He predicts that at best only slight reduction in the flow of cocaine could be secured from such a vast area and that the farmers who cannot make a decent living by growing any other crop, would eventually draw us into another Vietnam. Social workers recall that our effort at prohibiting sale of alcohol in the 1920s vastly increased our criminal element, and when we legalized its sale, the consumption decreased.

From an economic standpoint, we could by arms reduction, increase the forces producing things we consume and build housing for the homeless. The readjustment would be stressful for those in the military or in arms production; but they have been getting a lion's share of the income, and have had several years to see that readjustment was going to be needed. If they did not save to meet a readjustment cost, they have nobody to blame but themselves.

We have contracts with military personnel; but perhaps some would agree to change their contract for the purpose of delivering mail. We used to have two deliveries a day; and I can imagine that two instead of one would considerably speed business.

Thanks again for holding the meeting in Duluth. I think it was very worthwhile.

Respectfully,

ED KRAMER.

Representative OBERSTAR: I'm Mary Evans from Duluth.

This is a hearing on defense spending and I wish to question Congress' interpretation of defense. We don't have a War Department or an Attack Department. It is a Defense Department and the money is budgeted for defense, not attacks. The defense of our U.S. cities mean the population should be protected—protected against pollution, the environment (and here I'm talking of snow and rain or the homeless and insufficient food for the hungry) protection against nuclear waste, protection against crime and drugs and protection against attacks on the United States.

Why does the Energy Department make so many nuclear weapons for the Defense Department? Do we have two attack departments? Please take back to your committee that defense means a lot more than attack. If the Defense Department can't help us in the aforementioned defenses then the Defense Department money should go elsewhere.

Thank you.

OBERSTAR TOWN MEETING, JAN. 10, 1990

Congressman OBERSTAR: You were quoted in today's Duluth News-Tribune to the effect that the Budget Committee will with difficulty have to make a massive $64 billion cut in one year.

If the total annual defense budget could be cut in half as many in and out of government have already recommended, we could have a "peace dividend" of 150 billion. Pres. Bush suggests that expecting a peace dividend isn't being realistic.

Why wouldn't it be possible to cut the budget by $50 billion, reduce the federal deficit by $50 billion, and use the balance $50 billion of the peace dividend for people benefits such as: (1) National Health Care like Canada's; (2) Aid to education; (3) Roads and bridges and mass transit; (4) Waste disposal and pollution control; and (5) Caring for hungry, poor, and homeless.

Expanding on these for new priorities realizing that this is a land of plenty:

(1) About half (?) of our people have no hospitalization and medical insurance and can't afford to buy it; thus health deteriorates.

(2) Many test scores and opinion polls tell us that we can do a better job in education. The "Education President" needs to be pressured along with Congress into dedicating more money for educational programs that are aimed at improving instruction appropriate to the '90's and the 21st Cent., decrease crime and drug abuse, reducing the dropout rate which in turn would help reduce the crime and unemployment rates. A footnote to this point is that our jails and prisons are overflowing which tells me that some of our homes and schools aren't able to do enough alone to salvage large numbers of our youth.

(3) Continued building of roads and bridges and mass transit systems can be a trade-off for some of the no longer needed military related employment. (Consider the $200 million which was spent during the past several years bringing the freeway past the downtown area of Duluth.)

(4) Waste disposal and pollution control. We are burying ourselves in our own waste! Research money for better methods and enforceable laws to guarantee health protection are needed to control individual and corporate waste/air, water, and land pollution.

(5) Caring for the poor, hungry, and homeless. To a large extent I believe this is not a popular cause for expending tax dollars. But I find no excuse, however, in this land of plenty to have hundreds of hungry, freezing, homeless people when we seem to have tons of money for national defense and national security and bailing out the corrupt S&L speculators. Taking care of our fellow American needy, suffering people has to be priority related to national security.

OIL PRICE GOUGING

Last week when we got our new oil bill to find that the price had risen 30¢ per gallon since the previous billing, I called seven other oil companies to find that each of them had raised their price to $1.199 per gallon. The reasons they raised their price: "Our price is up; there's a shortage of fuel; we have to raise prices to keep up with our competition." I called the Superior Refinery which also said the same things, including "Cold weather demand; all dealers charge the same because of competition." What a joke! Where is the competition? I call this price fixing, and I know laws are supposed to prohibit this.

Sincerely

RAY MUSKAT.

TRIBUTE TO MARY ANN BANKS

HON. WILLIAM D. FORD

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, February 26, 1990

Mr. FORD of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to honor a very special person in my congressional district, Ms. Mary Ann Banks of Romulus, MI.

On Friday this week, Ms. Banks, the former mayor pro tem of Romulus, will be honored by the Romulus Chamber of Commerce as their 10th annual "Romulus Person of the Year."

Mary Ann Banks is a lifelong resident of Romulus, which is known to the rest of Michigan and the Nation principally as the home of the Detroit Metro Airport. I can say without fear of contradiction that no one has given more of herself to Romulus over the years than Mary Ann.

When she retired last year, Mary Ann had served for 12 years as mayor pro tem and chairperson of the Romulus City Council. Her official duties involved her in every aspect of community affairs—business development, public safety, education, and recreation.

Ms. Banks has been an outstanding public servant, not just as an elected official, but also as an employee of the Romulus school system. In addition to her duties as secretary for special services, Mary Ann enriched the lives of Romulus schoolchildren in a number of ways. She established the annual Student Government Day at Romulus City Hall, she has volunteered countless hours to help organize and run school fairs and PTA activities, and she has given generously of her time as a speaker in the schools, helping to make civics and government classes relevant and meaningful to hundreds of Romulus students.

I applaud the greater Romulus Chamber of Commerce for honoring Mary Ann Banks. She richly deserves the honor. Romulus is lucky to have benefited in so many ways from Mary Ann's talents, energy, civic pride, foresight, and her generous spirit.

TRIBUTE TO DAVID NORMAN

HON. JAMES A. TRAFICANT, JR.

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, February 26, 1990

Mr. TRAFICANT. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pay tribute to David Norman of my 17th Congressional District of Ohio, who is the statewide winner of the Veterans of Foreign Wars [VFW] "Why I Say No to Drugs" essay contest.

The VFW sponsored the contest for sixth, seventh, and eighth graders from all public, parochial, and private schools in Ohio. David is an eighth grader at Mineral Ridge Middle School and his winning essay is a personal account of what it is like living with parents who are addicted to drugs and alcohol.

I urge my fellow Members to read David's essay. I feel David's story needs to be told because it exemplifies the situation that many of our Nation's youth live with today.

WHY I SAY NO TO DRUGS

In this paper I am going to relate an authentic story of a very happy husband, wife, and son, and how drugs affected their lives. Things were great until the father began associating with the wrong people and started taking drugs regularly. Driving home from work one tragic night, after smoking marijuana and drinking a great deal of alcohol, he lost control of his car and killed himself and two other people. With his death he left behind a wife and an 18-month-old son.

The mother of this son had also been occasionally experimenting with pot. She eventually entered into a second marriage with a dope addict and they had a son, but one year later they were divorced. This was followed by another marriage to another dope addict, and another son was born. Throughout all these events, the oldest boy was being abused, beaten, and mistreated in many ways. As a 4-year-old he was placed in a closet and the door was locked. As a matter of fact, this closet served as his bedroom. He uncomfortably slept on a shelf while one younger brother slept on the floor below him.

After years of this abuse, the oldest boy finally ran away to live with grandparents who legally adopted him. The two younger boys, however, remained at home with the mother. Eventually the mother attempted suicide, and the father was imprisoned for drug-dealing. When all of this occurred, the mother gave away her two sons to strangers and then tried to kill herself again. Family and friends were hired to find the two boys. Concerned aunts and uncles sold property and personal items very dear to them in their efforts to discover the children. One was found 1,500 miles away, and the other just one block from his home. One of the boys was sent to live with his genuine father, while the other moved in with foster parents.

The boy who lived with his real father got a bad rap because, unfortunately, the father was a junkie. Again, the child suffered abuse and was eventually taken away to live with an aunt. The mother finally began to straighten out her life, and did gain custody of the boys again. As of this writing, the father has been released from jail, and the mother is attending school. Sounds good, huh? Well, they are still on drugs. They have not learned! They have ruined many lives, including those of three boys who will never be the same. The oldest one has undergone counseling for 9 years, still experiences horrible nightmares, and has been affected in many other ways.

I hate drugs because I am that oldest boy. Before becoming addicted to narcotics, a person should think of the many other people who love him, and if he truly loves them in return, he will say no to drugs. Not only can a person kill himself, but he can cause much harm to everyone around him. Believe me, I know!

Mr. Speaker, I would like to take this opportunity to commend David Norman on his prize-winning essay. His story brings to light the plight of children in America who are victims of parents and relatives who are chemically dependent. David deserves our admiration and respect for having the courage to tell his story. I am honored to represent this outstanding young man.

DOCTORS IN DISTRESS

HON. GREG LAUGHLIN

OF TEXAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, February 26, 1990

Mr. LAUGHLIN. Mr. Speaker, I would like to call to the attention of my colleagues the strain in the medical profession in rural America caused by overregulation, as mentioned in a series of articles appearing in the New York Times entitled, "Doctors in Distress." The over regulation of the medical profession has caused a professional malaise in the profession that has affected rural hospital closings and Medicare costs. These are some reasons why men and women have been applying to medical school in small numbers in recent years, and why we have more burned-out doctors in a profession that is changing very rapidly.

Mr. Speaker, two well noted doctors from my home district, Dr. Dennis Wagner and his brother Dr. Robert Wagner of Shiner, TX, expressed their discontent in a New York Times feature article—February 19 issue—when they said they spend 40 percent of their time on paperwork. The skyrocketing medical costs combined with the hospital crisis in rural America is one reason excellent doctors are leaving their professions and entering other fields. From 1975 to 1985, the number of rural doctors increased by 14.2 percent and great gains were made.

However, these gains must be looked at with a grain of salt when you consider that in a recent survey, 25 percent of rural doctors said they were dissatisfied with rural practice and were planning to leave within 5 years. Mr. Speaker, one possible solution now being considered by lawmakers would reimburse rural hospitals their fair share of medicare payments, and give more attention to the professional needs of doctors. If such proposals are implemented, it would help to solve a rural hospital crisis.

Clearly, the excessive paperwork, hospital closings and over regulation is developing into a crisis for the medical doctor in the heartland of America. Something must be done so that doctors who have dedicated their life to the medical profession, like the Wagners did, may practice medicine without excessive regulations and rules that threaten to stifle their abilities to provide the care needed in rural America.

ANNIVERSARY OF ESTONIAN INDEPENDENCE

HON. TOM CAMPBELL

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, February 26, 1990

Mr. CAMPBELL of California. Mr. Speaker, the Soviet Union's illegal annexation of the Republic of Estonia in 1940 stands in the annals of world history as one of the most shameful acts of international banditry ever perpetrated upon defenseless people. As the world's democracies watched, Hitler and Stalin divided Europe and set the stage for World War II. Estonia, Latvia, and Lithuania, along with other nations, suffered indescribably as the result of these criminal acts.

For almost five decades, the Estonians have been subjected to genocidal foreign occupation. With few meaningful options and limited resources, they have never ceased to resist and fight. Tens of thousands of unmarked graves in Siberia bear silent testimony to their suffering and steadfast desire for freedom. Those who were able to flee continued their struggle abroad, some fighting and dying on faraway battlefields. Their final resting places, from Finland to Arlington, VA, attest to their valor and willingness to fight wherever freedom was threatened.

On February 24, Estonians everywhere marked the 72d anniversary of Estonia's declaration of independence with renewed hope that past wrongs will be set right and that freedom will be theirs again. There can be no real peace or justice in the world until their Estonians, along with their Baltic neighbors and all other oppressed peoples in the world, are again masters of their own land and their own fate. On this anniversary, let us recommit ourselves to support them in their struggle for national survival and independence. This support should be unequivocal and based on the same ideals and principles that generations of Americans have fought and died for. The greatest tribute that we can pay to their sacrifices is to champion the rekindling of freedom wherever it has been extinguished. To do less would be to betray our own heritage.

Elagu Eesti (Long Live Estonia).

THE AIRBORNE SELF-PROTECTION JAMMER

HON. C. THOMAS McMILLEN

OF MARYLAND

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, February 26, 1990

Mr. McMILLEN of Maryland. Mr. Speaker, today I rise to discuss the Airborne Self-Protection Jammer [ASPJ]. As some of you may be aware, the Air Force has eliminated funding for the ASPJ in the President's fiscal year 1991 budget. They have taken this action despite a dozen years of consistent Congressional support for ASPJ. The Air Force has decided to cut this program because they have some questions regarding the test performance of ASPJ, and because they need to find some place to cut in their budget. But can the Air Force really afford to eliminate the ASPJ program. The Navy, which has also invested considerable amounts of research and development funds believes that the ASPJ is absolutely necessary. Furthermore, every indication is that the ASPJ will indeed meet all expectations.

ASPJ is planned for approximately 2,200 Navy and USAF AV-8B, F-14, F-16, and F/A-18 aircraft. In constant year dollars the acquisition cost of ASPJ to protect these aircraft is approximately $60 billion. The acquisition cost of ASPJ to protect these aircraft is about $2.5 billion when purchased in economical quantities. That is what I call a leverage item. ASPJ is the most thoroughly tested system in the history of jammer developments. There have been over 8,000 hours of ground tests and 500 hours of flight test in the F-16 and F-18 aircraft. Any deficiencies in ASPJ relate more to the inability to define and provide the proper operational test environment than the ability of ASPJ to perform. For example, the measure of effectiveness criteria was so flawed that the Defense Acquisition Board declared that it must be redone. Amazingly, the important capability of ASPJ to prevent missiles from being launched wasn't even evaluated.

ASPJ is ready and it performs. There are over 400 LANTIRN equipped F-16 aircraft and over 500 Navy F/A-18's that must have ASPJ today. The Air Force wonders if they can afford self protection. How can they not afford it? A 5-percent reduction in aircraft would provide sufficient offset for this critically needed protection. Where in the budget is the Air Force planning to provide protection for these high valued aircraft? Is there really a net cost benefit from other alternative systems considering planes and lives lost to a less effective system, not to mention the added cost and time needed to develop a replacement to ASPJ? The fact is, there are no other systems available that can do the job. Other existing systems have very limited threat capability and must be redesigned, combined, repackaged and retested in the F-16 aircraft. All of this for a system less capable than the one we already have—ASPJ, the very type of leveraged system we need at this time of budget stretching. Every $1M spent on ASPJ from this point forward will save us many millions more in saved aircraft or reduced force structure requirements. This is not the time to stop a very well-conceived program after over $1 billion of expenditures, just when the cost and force structure benefits are being realized. ASPJ is in low rate production right now. As I stated before the Navy strongly supports the program. Reasonable public policy indicates that this low rate production should be continued by the Navy and Air Force without costly interruptions until the Defense Acquisition Board makes their determination for full rate production. The Air Force must continue its final verification testing of the ASPJ in the F-16 aircraft this year and should restore its support of the ASPJ Program in 1991 budget. No other path makes sense.

UNITED STATES ASSISTANCE TO POLAND: INITIAL REPORT TO CONGRESS

HON. LEE H. HAMILTON

OF INDIANA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, February 26, 1990

Mr. HAMILTON. Mr. Speaker, on February 15, 1990, the Committee on Foreign Affairs received an initial report concerning United States agricultural and economic stabilization fund assistance to Poland under Public Law 101-179, the Support for East European Democracy [SEED] Act of 1989.

The report follows:

U.S. DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, DC, February 13, 1990.

Hon. DANTE B. FASCELL,
Chairman, Committee on Foreign Affairs, House of Representatives.

DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: The Department herewith transmits an initial report concerning assistance to Poland, as required by section 102(a) of Public Law 101-179, "The Support For East European Democracy (SEED) Act of 1989."

Sincerely,

JANET G. MULLINS,
Assistant Secretary, Legislative Affairs.

Enclosure: As stated.

POLISH STABILIZATION FUND

On January 2, 1990, a stabilization fund for Poland (the Fund) went into effect. Pledges totaling approximately $1 billion have been made. Of this amount the U.S. has contributed a grant of $199.14 million as authorized by Section 102(c) of PL grant of $199.14 million as authorized by Section 102(c) of PL 101-179—the SEED Act. Other contributors to date are listed in the attached fact sheet.

Under the terms of the agreement between Poland and the United States governing the provision of the U.S. grant, the authorities of the two countries will decide in the future on the purposes for which the U.S. grant will be used after the Fund has been terminated.

The Fund is designed to support the currency reform instituted by Poland on January 1, 1990. Under this reform the zloty was sharply devalued and an official rate of 9,500 zloties=$1 was established. Also, the Polish authorities enacted a law which provides for limited convertibility of the zloty, by enabling residents to obtain freely foreign exchange for importation of merchandise and selected services.

As of February 2, Poland has not drawn on the Fund. The currency reform so far appears successful and the parallel market rate for the zloty has appreciated.

BRIDGE LOAN

In further support of Poland's program to attack inflation and to implement necessary economic reforms, the U.S. also organized a bridge loan of $500 million for Poland. The U.S. contribution amounted to $200 million. Drawdowns and subsequent repayments under the bridge loan are linked to future disbursements to Poland by the IMF and IBRD. U.S. funds for the bridge loans are from the Exchange Stabilization Fund.

DEBT RELIEF

On January 12, U.S. officials met with other members of the "Paris Club" for informal discussions on rescheduling Polish debt to member countries. Negotiations with Polish authorities will begin during the week of February 12 and are expected to result in a major rescheduling of Polish debt on very generous terms. Informal discussions have also been held between the Paris Club and representatives of commerical banks aimed at achieving comparable treatment of the two sets of creditors. These discussions will continue in the very near future.

Initial steps taken by the United States and on Poland's requirement for agricultural assistance (Title VII, Section 701(a)(2)ff.).

As specifically regards to food aid and other agricultural assistance (as opposed to macroeconomic assistance), the following information is submitted to meet these reporting requirements.

Initial steps taken to provide food aid include Congressional direction to pledge not less than $125 million in FY 1990. To date, $120 million has been programmed to provide corn, pork bellies, vegetable oil, rice, and cotton to Poland. Our intention is to provide U.S. feedgrains as much needed inputs to support the Polish dairy, livestock and poultry sectors. In that vain, USDA intends to make available an additional $5 million in corn under existing authority. The Poles recently indicated the need for obtaining wheat over the coming months, which we are currently reviewing.

We are especially concerned that Western food aid not undercut domestic agriculture production. We are working with the Polish Government and other donors to find ways to bring more farmers' stock to urban markets.

In December 1989, Secretary Yeutter and his Polish counterpart signed a framework agreement aimed at providing administrative and technical assistance to Poland's agriculture. The cooperation includes activities that will enhance Poland's agricultural production, marketing, inspection, and research systems.

Ten separate working groups will be formed to cooperatively work on assessing Poland's requirements for additional agricultural assistance in FY 1990 and future years.

A USDA Extension Service team of seven persons will spend ten days in Poland in February assessing immediate agricultural needs. The team will be evaluating Poland's existing agricultural extension system along with its rural infrastructure.

As currently programmed commodities arrive and are distributed in Poland, and the working groups mentioned above begin to work with their Polish counterparts, USDA will be in an excellent position to evaluate its programs and assess future Polish needs. We anticipate being able to make available an assessment update, as required by the SEED Act by mid-summer.

Poland has also transmitted a request for considerable assistance in obtaining noncommodity farm inputs. Neither the Act nor other existing programs provide a U.S. Government mechanism for meeting such a request on an immediate basis. In response USDA has undertaken a considerable effort to publicize the need in the U.S. private sector and is working with various private groups to explore avenues of assistance.

FACT SHEET—POLAND: STABILIZATION FUND

Purpose.—The Fund will complement resources provided by International Monetary Fund [the IMF] and will be available to support policies aimed at liberalization of payments and transfers for current international transactions. The Fund will bolster the credibility of such policies by providing an additional line of reserves.

Amount.—At least US$1 billion.

Start-up date.—January 2, 1990.

Term.—The term of the Fund will be one year with the possibility of extension for a further period.

Contributions.—Grants and loans and credit lines will be provided in the following amounts from at least the following countries:

United States: US$200,000,000; Federal Republic of Germany: US$ equivalent 250,000,000; United Kingdom: US$100,000,000; Japan: US$ equivalent 150,000,000; France: US$ equivalent 100,000,000; Italy: US$100,000,000; Canada: US$25,000,000; Austria: US$20,000,000; Switzerland: US$30,000,000; Spain: US$14,000,000; Turkey: US$750,000; Portugal: US$2,500,000; Sweden: US$ equivalent 10,500,000.

Fund owner and stabilization borrower.—National Bank of Poland (NBP).

Depository.—The Fund is to be held in an account established at the Federal Reserve Bank of New York [FRBNY] in the name of NBP.

Executive committee.—An Operating committee of contributing countries will be established in Washington, D.C., comprising the Executive Directors of the IMF or other representatives of governments of such countries. The Committee will be responsible for overseeing the operation and termination of the Fund. The United States will be responsible for the Secretariat work of the Operating Committee.

Operation of the Fund.—The Fund will be used as a supplemental line of reserves for sales of foreign exchange by NBP to the Polish foreign exchange banks. Any drawdowns from the Fund will be matched by use of Polish foreign currency holdings. Similarly, NBP purchases of foreign exchange from Polish foreign exchange banks will be used in equal portions to reconstitute any drawdowns of Poland's foreign currency holdings and Fund resources.

General review.—The operation of the Fund will be reviewed by contributors in consultation with the Managing Director of the IMF and Poland before June 30, 1990.

A RESOLUTION REGARDING THE ISSUE OF TRANSYLVANIAN HUNGARIANS

HON. DONALD E. "BUZ" LUKENS

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, February 26, 1990

Mr. DONALD E. LUKENS. Mr. Speaker, during its 83 years of existence, the American Hungarian Federation has proudly and effectively represented the views of the 1.8 million Hungarian Americans in this country.

For several decades, the American Hungarian Federation has been at the forefront of the struggle for human and cultural rights as well as the right of self-determination for the 2.5 million Hungarians living in Transylvania, which is currently part of Romania.

Since the dreaded Ceausescu regime was overthrown by the revolution of the people, the federation has adopted a resolution regarding the issue of Transylvanian Hungarians drafted by the national president Rt. Rev. Tibor Domotor and Dr. Z. Michael Szaz, the chairman of the federation's international relations committee. Both Reverend Domotor and Dr. Szaz have dedicated many years of their lives to the fight for human rights and against the Communist dogma.

I insert this resolution into the RECORD.

A PETITION FROM THE AMERICAN HUNGARIAN FEDERATION ON BEHALF OF THE HUNGARIANS LIVING IN TRANSYLVANIA AND FOR A JUST AND LASTING PEACE IN EUROPE

The American Hungarian Federation was founded in 1906 and chartered by an act of the United States Congress in 1907 to serve as the umbrella organization and spokesman for the Hungarians living in the United States of America. On January 6, 1990 in Linden, New Jersey, the board of directors of the American Hungarian Federation passed the following resolutions.

1. That the U.S. Government initiate a call for an international conference under the terms of the 1975 Helsinki declaration to review the question of national boundaries in disputed areas of Europe.

2. That the right of self-determination, as annunciated in the famous 14 points of President Wilson, serve as the basis for all border revisions and be especially applied to the areas detached form Hungary by force at the end of World War I and World War II.

3. That the international conference ratify by treaty the new boundaries and guarantee them something the United States failed to do after World War I and II.

The seeds of World War III were planted in the unilateral peace treaties of World Wars I and II, and unless an international conference resolves by peaceful means the unjust and unstable boundaries of Hungary, Germany and the nationalities of Eastern Europe and the Balkans, the people in these areas will try to resolve the issues through force and bloodshed that will spread beyond their immediate geographic area and involve the United States and other nations in another world-wide tragedy.

Until such time as an international conference can complete the above requested action, we the board of directors of the American Hungarian Federation further request.

4. That the United States government demand form the present and future Romanian governments that they grant autonomy to the Hungarian population of Transylvania.

We should demand the immediate restoration of the Hungarian school system, including the Bolyai University, to its previous role as the preserver, protector and transmitter of Hungarian language and culture in Transylvania.

We should demand that bilingual equality between Hungarian and Romanian be established. That there be freedom to use either language in all public and private communication and that all Hungarian places and monuments be designated by their Hungarian names.

We should demand that the forced resettlement of Hungarians outside of Transylvania be terminated and those already forced to settle in other parts of Romania be allowed to return to their former areas within Transylvania.

We should demand that the Romanian government respect the basic human rights of all Hungarians in Transylvania to freedom of religion, speech and participation in the political process of their region and country.

We should demand that an international commission be established to monitor the compliance of the Romanian government in the above areas.

The year 1990 marks the 70th anniversary of the Treaty of Trianon, a treaty based on hatred, vindictiveness and obsolete military considerations. This treaty was reconfirmed by the Paris Peace Conference that saw the division of Europe into two ideological and economic systems.

Lincoln remarked a nation cannot live half-free and half slave. The revolutions sweeping central and eastern Europe starting in 1989 show that you can by force of arms suppress the flame of freedom, but you cannot extinguish it. The time has come for the U.S. Government to take a stand for freedom and self-determination of these people along just and ethical lines. Inaction on the part of the U.S. Government at this time will only insure that it will at a later point in time be caught up in a conflagration it could have at least tried to prevent.

TRIBUTE TO ELSIE MALLEY

HON. DAN SCHAEFER

OF COLORADO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, February 26, 1990

Mr. SCHAEFER. Mr. Speaker, today I rise to pay tribute to a very special lady who is celebrating her 100th birthday on March 6, 1990.

Elsie Malley, one of seven children, was born on a farm in Alma, KS. She has fond memories of her childhood there; everything from the swimming hole to cherished family Christmases.

At age 13, Elsie quit school to go to work cleaning houses, where she began a lifetime of sharing with others. Later, she became a nursemaid, and then a department store clerk in Topeka, KS.

Elsie moved to Colorado, and while caring for a woman friend, met and married Andrew in 1911. They settled in their home at 18th and Logan in Denver. However, Andrew passed away in 1929, and for 5 years after that, Elsie worked at the Federal Reserve Bank. She later married Henry, the owner of a meat market. They bought a ranch in the Smoky Hill area, and the running of the ranch fell into Elsie's hands as Henry spent most of his time in his native Germany. Henry passed away in 1966, and in 1967 she married Henry Malley and moved to Brodus, MT. Henry Malley died, leaving her with a nightclub in Brodus, which she sold and with the proceeds bought a much needed library there.

Elsie returned to Denver in 1971, and as the generous caring person she is, contributed greatly to a fundraising drive to build a senior center in Englewood, CO. Her generosity helped the dream come true, and the Malley Senior Center in Englewood opened in 1977. It has grown to be the largest in the State, with over 9,000 members.

I would like to commend Elsie M. Malley for her caring spirit of giving to others and to wish her great happiness on the occasion of her 100th birthday.

THE FAMILY TAX RELIEF AND SAVINGS PLAN

HON. BILL SCHUETTE

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, February 26, 1990

Mr. SCHUETTE. Mr. Speaker, today I am introducing three bills to reduce taxes and provide incentives to save for the lower and middle class American.

I call this package of bills "The Family Tax Relief and Savings Plan." The first bill provides for a cut in the capital gains rate, the second is a modified IRA plan to help families save for first time home purchases, child care, education, and medical expenses as well as retirement, and the third is a tax feature which would significantly increase the standard deduction for those families truly unable to save for the same purposes.

All three bills are geared toward economic expansion, saving for the future, and making more money available for investment in our great American economy. Historically, our Tax Code has been structured away from savings and toward consumption; consumption has become ingrained in our national psyche. My legislation will tilt the Code toward increased savings.

This change, of course, is necessary due to the recent erosion in the level of national savings. The United States finds itself in a critical situation. Our personal and national savings rates are simply too low to provide necesssary capital from within our own borders for the entrepreneurs who are the backbone of our national economic growth. Unless this problem is addressed soon, our future competitiveness and our ability to maintain our current standard of living could easily be seriously affected.

I urge my colleagues to join with me in promoting savings, investment, education, and improvement in the ability of the average American to provide housing, child care, education, and medical care for his or her family.

VIRGIN ISLANDS PAIR HIKES APPALACHIAN TRAIL

HON. RON de LUGO

OF THE VIRGIN ISLANDS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, February 26, 1990

Mr. DE LUGO. Mr. Speaker, It takes determination and stamina, not to mention a big heart and big thighs, to hike the length of the Appalachian Trail.

We have two young Virgin Islands residents who made the full-length, 2,000-mile trek on the Appalachian Trail and I want to bring their attention to the U.S. Congress. Sarah Glass and Brian Dierk joined an elite group that has completed this hike and I want to express the Virgin Islands' pride in their unique accomplishment.

Many people start the Appalachian Trail every spring, but only a few have the discipline and determination to carry on all summer and finish up as the fall colors begin to appear in Maine. Brian and Sarah have joined that elite group.

Brian and Sarah trained hard, hiking the beautiful steep mountains of St. Thomas in the Virgin Islands, to prepare for the Appalachian Trail. For months prior to the hike, they could be seen every day climbing our own mountains at all hours and in all weather. They showed great discipline and they achieved their goal.

I want to place this story from the Virgin Islands Daily News that recounts their achievement into the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, and express my congratulations to both of them.

2,000-MILE APPALACHIAN HIKE IS RARE FEAT FOR VIRGIN ISLAND PAIR

(By Isaac Causey)

Daily News Sportswriter

Would you walk 2,000 miles for nothing?

I wouldn't, but would you?

Well, Sarah Glass did. Earlier this year, Glass and her friend, Brian Dierk, both of St. Thomas, hiked on the Appalachian Trail from Georgia to Maine.

"I wouldn't recommend it to anyone," Glass said of the journey, which lasted from April 21 until Oct. 3. "It was a challenge we had. I guess everyone gets them."

But get this: According to Jean Cashin of the Appalachian Trail Committee, the group supervising the event, out of about 1,200 people a year entering the hike, less than 100 actually finish it. In the event's 46-year history, only about 1,800 people have finished the hike.

"It was hard and exciting," said Dierk, 25. "I think it was the challenge that made us do it."

Glass said that in order to get a badge, each person who completes the hike must write a letter describing the journey.

Can you imagine yourself climbing hills and mountains, while fighting the rain, wild animals and fatigue, just for a badge? Some challenge, indeed.

Well, Glass and Dierk did.

"About 90 percent of the people who drop out do it before they make it to Kentucky," Glass said. "When we were walking up the hill for the start of the hike, folks even starting dropping out then.

"After our first day hiking, in which we did 8.7 miles, I said, 'Oh my God, what have we gotten ourselves into now?' My feet were hurting and I wondered if we could make it."

Come on. Two thousand miles . . . It can't be that bad. I mean, it's only a 40-hour ride while driving 50 mph. Plus, Glass and Dierk had the luxury of sleeping on the hard ground and eating canned food for about five months. In addition, Glass and Dierk carried backpacks weighing 45 and 55 pounds, respectively.

"It was kind of neat," Glass, 27, admitted. "Strangers would come out to the trail and watch. Some would bring you sodas and candy bars. They were so supportive."

Plus, there is the great exhilaration of finishing. Doing what only a few have done. The few, the proud and the bold. The chosen 1,800.

"When we made it to the last mountain," Glass said. "I looked across the valleys and waters and it finally hit me that we might finish this thing. Everybody was jumping up and down, hugging and kissing each other. I thought: 'Get me to the closest McDonald's.'"

The craziest thing about traveling on the trail, Glass said, was meeting crazy people—for example, Crazy Man.

Crazy Man is the name given to a gentleman on the trail who fits the title. Glass said she never knew his real name, but called him 'Traveler' because he was making his seventh trip on the trail. Would you call him anything else?

How could someone train to conquer 2,000 miles of wilderness, hills and mountains seven times? In fact, how could anyone get in shape for such a one-time experience?

"There's nothing you can do to train for the mountains," she said. "We did a lot of walking around here. Both of us are pretty athletic. I play tennis and run a lot, but that doesn't matter on the mountains. I tell you, they take no prisoners."

THE DANGER OF "ICE"

HON. MEL LEVINE

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, February 26, 1990

Mr. LEVINE of California. Mr. Speaker, on November 20, 1989, I introduced H.R. 3766, legislation making the penalties for distribution of 50 grams of "ice," a new smokable form of speed, comparable to penalties for distribution of 50 grams of crack. Experts have predicted that ice will be the crack of the 1990's. My legislation seeks to stop the distribution of ice now, before dealers are able to addict a new generation of drug users.

Today, I would like to share with my colleagues excerpts from a February 8 article from Rolling Stone titled "The Ice Age." As the author states, "(a)n epidemic of ice in America promises to strain further the law enforcement, judicial, educational, and social resources already being spent in the Nation's war on drugs. Like heroin, coke, crack, PCP, and other drugs of choice in our time, ice threatens health, lives, families, and social fabric."

Ice abuse is especially known for causing schizophrenia and paranoia, resulting in episodes of extreme violence. As the article states, in Hawaii, where ice abuse is epidemic, weapons seizures are up 150 percent, law enforcement has confiscated submachine guns, assault rifles, hand grenades, rocket grenades, and booby traps.

Mr. Speaker, I commend the attached article to my colleagues, and urge their support of H.R. 3766:

THE ICE AGE

HONOLULU.—One night as he slept, special agents from the DEA entered Robert Li's bedroom and planted a tiny speaker in his brain. The device was top secret; it transmitted and received. It read his thoughts, broadcast voices, tracked him by satellite everywhere he went.

At work in the produce department, he'd notice now and then that certain shoppers would stop their carts and spy on him—men, women, teenagers. He could hear them talking. "He's spraying the lettuce now," they'd say.

At home he'd hear noises. He'd look out the window, but no one was there. Sometimes, if he looked quick enough, he could glimpse the edge of a shirt collar in the bushes, the bill of a baseball cap behind the fence. Once he saw a man with a walkie-talkie standing near his car. "I know what you're thinking," the man said into a handset. Li rushed outside. The man was gone.

After that, Li stayed in his room. The broadcasts got louder. He dug around in his ear with a paper clip, but he couldn't find anything. Neither could the doctor who patched him up three times. "Then I started thinking maybe things were planted in my walls, planted in my radio," Li says. "I took apart everything in my room you could think of. I'd spend hours—ten, twelve, fifteen straight hours—just taking something apart. Don't ask me what I was looking for. I mean, I knew what I was looking for. I was looking for a mike or something like that. But they could have easily put it in there, and you don't know what it is. You know how many parts a TV set has? I couldn't find anything, so I put it back together. I don't know if I'll get radiation now, but it works."

At the moment Li is sitting on his bed, propped on pillows against the wall, grinding his teeth. This is his parents' place, a modest wood-frame house on the windward side of the island of Oahu, in the state of Hawaii, nine or ten miles over the mountains from Waikiki. It's a small room, the scene of his boyhood, with wood paneling, a shelf full of model cars and spent disposable lighters. Li is twenty-eight, part Chinese, part Caucasian, part Hawaiian. He is dark and mop haired, with hooded eyes and a strong square chin.

Li reaches into his shirt pocket and pulls out a clear glass tube with a hollow ball at one end, a fluted mouthpiece at the other. At the top of the ball is a small hole; at the bottom, a little clump of crystals. The crystals are translucent, shiny, like sea salt or rock candy. Li covers the hole with his finger, teases the glass ball with a tight blue flame. In a few seconds the crystals melt, then bubble, then vaporize. Smoke swirls inside the ball, clean white smoke, wispy and warm like clouds. He sucks it through the tube, inhales deeply. There is no smell. It tastes to him like vanilla. Others say that it tastes like green apples or star fruit, or that it tastes the way plumaria smells. Li exhales, opens his eyes, smiles.

The first time Li smoked ice was six years ago. He wasn't a drug type; he didn't even smoke pakalolo, Hawaiian-grown pot. He was a drinker. His was a standard-issue American life. Since high school, weekends had been a case of beer, cruising the streets of Waikiki, gawking at tourists, stopping in at Masquerades or the Rock and Roll Clinic or maybe going in with three friends on one of the whores strolling the beachfront avenue of shopping malls. He would do cocaine once in a while, share a half a gram, not enough to get really high, just something to keep him awake a little longer, to take the wooze off the beer.

Then his buddy Ron asked Li if he wanted to try something new. They were on dinner break on the night shift at the grocery store. Each smoked about four hits. "It felt different," Li says. "I didn't know what to expect, and I didn't know the high, so I didn't know I was high. But I noticed I kept talking more. I was more friendly towards people. Usually I'm kind of quiet. It made me feel happy, you know. And it made you want to work more, and work harder and faster. I was stocking shelves. I was really stocking those shelves. Great rows. Perfect balance. I really concentrated. I hardly took any breaks."

For the next six months, Li and Ron would smoke crystals before work four or five times a week. A week's worth cost them only about thirty dollars apiece. They'd heat and smoke, and then the liquid would cool and recrystallize, stick to the bottom of the pipe. Ice is reusable—portable, too. The pipe stays always loaded and ready to go. They could carry it anywhere they went, and they did. Nobody could tell they were on drugs. They seemed garrulous and happy. They got their work done. They were model employees.

In a few months Li had his own pipe. You can buy one at any number of head shops or Korean liquor stores, but only if you ask for a "liquid-incense burner." If you say "pipe," they won't understand you. At work, Li started taking more breaks. Between breaks he'd think about the next break.

Even though the feelings of well-being and concentration and high energy Li got from smoking just a few hits could last six to eight hours, or even longer, taking hits off the pipe became his main preoccupation. Smoking was sensual: the flame, the bubbles, the swirl. It was something he just kept thinking about, something he wanted to do again and again. After a while, all he ever wanted to do was smoke or visit people who smoked. There weren't many of those around in 1983, but they found one another, and their number grew. In the beginning, ice makes you want to share.

Li would stay up three or four days at a time, then crash. It was hard to sleep at first. His mind would race and his heart would pump. Then, just as he'd start settling down, phasing out, a jolt would run through his body, and he'd be up again, wide awake. Finally, he'd sleep fifteen or twenty hours. Then he'd smoke some more, just to get out of bed.

More months passed. Li lost weight, about thirty pounds. His eyes sunk into the back of his head and his skin turned greenish yellow, but he looked okay to himself. He started calling in sick at work. He stayed in his room. "You'd start thinking about what's broken around the house, how to fix it," he says. "Sometimes you'd actually fix something. Most times you just think how to make things. Things just for drugs. A better pipe. Or trying to make something to hold the pipe in my car, so that it only took one hand to operate the lighter and the pipe."

Sometime during his second year of daily use, Li became convinced that the DEA had planted the speaker in his brain. "It's like whatever I'd be doing, the voices would tell me what I was doing," he says. "It would be your thoughts, but in somebody's else's voice. Or I'd think something, and then they'd say, 'Oh, I heard what you just thought.' They were playing with you. They were always teasing you. They. I always say they. Sometimes you think it's your friends. Sometimes you think it's undercovers. Then I thought at one point that maybe it was this special agency that helped you get off drugs. I thought maybe my parents paid these people to trip me out so bad that I'd stop."

Li was fired from his job. For the next two and a half years, he stayed home and smoked. When he thinks about that time, it's kind of like a movie he saw once, grainy and hazy, a shadow of memories. His parents knew what he was doing behind his closed door. He told them he was smoking ice, because he didn't want them to think he was smoking crack. All those commercials, you know? He didn't want them to worry. Since he'd worked for many years and always lived at home, he had quite a bit of savings. He spent that, and then he spent a $5000 credit line he'd opened to restore his old Mustang. He ran his credit cards to the limit with instant cash advances.

"I heard the voices every single damn day for over a year and a half," says Li. "Maybe two years, three. It was really bugging the shit out of me. The part that bugged me the most was that my thoughts were being read. Like I couldn't have a personal thought to myself. Your friends were reading your thoughts, so you couldn't think nothing about them. I'd have fights with my parents, and I'd say, 'You guys know what I'm thinking!' And they would tell me it was just the drugs. I would say, 'You know what's going on. You guys are playing this game with me. Just tell me how you're doing it, and I'll quit.'

"Some days I would think, 'Oh, all these voices are only in my mind. It's stupid to think they planted something in my head.' But some days your mind would think the worst things. My friends noticed I was weird. They said they liked me better when I was straight. I agreed with them. I knew it was true, but what could I say? I liked the drugs."

Six months ago, the voices got so bad that Li finally agreed to get help. He stopped smoking, got some medication from a clinic. The voices went away. He got a custodial job and thought about the last six years. It was like he'd missed part of his life. He stayed straight for a while. Then, he says, "you start thinking of the good times you had with your friends. You wish you could go through it again. You want to reminisce. It doesn't seem like bad memories. You can think of the hard times, but mostly it's only the good times you think of."

Li raised his pipe, heats the bowl. The smoke swirls; he takes another hit. "I only do it once in a while now," he says. "Like maybe only three or four days a week, but not every day. It feels great. It's like a new high. I get the voices, but it's not strong like it used to be. I guess I can cope with it better now.

Robert Li is one vision of a new era in drug abuse, the age of ice. A synthetic smokable reprise of crystal methamphetamine, ice is essentially the same drug as the pep pills and speed of yesteryear, the crank of motorcycle gangs and heartland dopers in America today. What's different is the form—whole crystals; the method of ingestion—smoking; and the purity—about ninety percent. Some incidence of ice has been reported in New Orleans, New York, the Pacific Northwest and Southern California, the traditional home of crystal-meth production. But the real problem, according to the National Institute on Drug Abuse (NIDA), is in Hawaii, where the drug has recently been declared "epidemic."

Manufactured with easily purchase medical ingredients, ice ranges in color from translucent to milky white to yellowish brown. Fifty dollars buys one-tenth of a gram on the street, in papers or glassine envelopes. Coke sells at fifty dollars for one-half gram. Shipments of ice have been intercepted coming into Hawaii from Taiwan, Hong Kong, Thailand, the Philippines and Korea, which law-enforcement officials say is the world's major producer. Ice is the fusion of two Asian traditions—smoking drugs and using amphetamines. It is called shabu by the Japanese, hiroppon by the Koreans, yaamaa by the Thais, batu by the Filipinos. At the moment, according to a law-enforcement source, there are two labs manufacturing ice in Honolulu.

The medical examiner's office here reports thirty-six deaths involving the drug since 1985, twelve of them in the first six months of 1989. The dead ranged in age from eighteen to sixty-six and represented all of Hawaii's major ethinic groups. Causes of death were determined to be heart disease, stroke, murder, toxic overdose, suicide and, in one case, autoerotic hanging.

The NIDA study shows that twenty-five percent of all babies of suspected drug users tested in Hawaii had traces of crystal meth in their bodies. One YMCA youth-outreach program reports that use of ice among its 500 teenage clients has skyrocketed. In 1986, YMCA officials say they know of no kids doing ice. In 1987, there were 50; in 1988, 250.

A police study of comparable nine-month periods in 1988 and 1989 shows ice arrests up from 203 to 451—most of them resulting from routine traffic stops. Total seizures of the drug doubled to almost ten pounds during those same periods. A task force consisting of Honolulu police, federal prosecutors and agents for the DEA, the IRS, the INS and U.S. Customs has arrested twenty-two major traffickers since 1987. All either have pleaded guilty or await trial.

On the rise also is violence related to ice, particularly among immigrant Filipino youth gangs, which have served as the major sales force since the drug was first marketed in quantity in the mid-Eighties. Weapons seizures are up 150 percent: Police and federal agents have confiscated submachine guns, fully automatic assault rifles, hand grenades, rocket grenades and booby traps.

Now, according to the NIDA study, "the stage may be set for . . . [smoking] to become a trend elsewhere on the continental U.S."

An epidemic of ice in America promises to strain further the law-enforcement, judicial, educational and social resources already being spent in the nation's war on drugs. Like heroin, coke, crack, PCP and other drugs of choice in our time, ice threatens health, lives, families and social fabric.

But compared with the consequences of the others, the threat of widespread ice use has a paricularly disturbing element. Put aside for a moment the fact that long-term use of crystal meth causes alterations in brain chemistry that result in the symptoms and delusions of paranoid schizophrenia. Think about this: Ice is not a drug that makes you high. It doesn't make you drunk like alcohol or stoned like pot. It doesn't give you a rush, take you on a trip or even bend reality. In the beginning, before the toxic effects build, the thing that ice does is make you feel bright, awake, happy. You feel good about yourself, no matter how bad things may be. You can work and produce on ice, be rewarded for you efforts. You don't mind getting up in the morning. You don't care anymore that your job is boring or that your boss is a schmuck. You see the goodness in others. You see your place in the universe and the golden possibilities of things to come. Just a few hits of ice and all is well; you can get on with the life you already own.

Local and federal officials have already begun to articulate the ice problem in the same terms as crack—as a part of the calculus of gangs and economics. They say that ice is more attractive because its effects last longer than crack's. They miss the point. Ice threatens a new population for a whole new set of reasons. Like soma, in Huxley's Brave New World, ice is a maintenance drug for the masses, a pacifier, a rectifier, a kind of readymade, chemical worldview. The people using ice in Hawaii are not, for the most part, the usual criminal elements, and they don't use ice for the usual criminal reasons. Housewives who do ice say they become modern models of Superwoman, finding energy to handle kids, job, husband and bedroom, and still have time for themselves. Adolescents say that ice makes them feel secure, well adjusted and better able to express their inner feelings. Truckers, accountants, store clerks, hotel and restaurant workers, data processors, mechanics—mainstream, middle-class Americans—are doing a highly dangerous drug, and they are doing it because it helps them overcome the malaise of daily earthbound existence, helps them acccept who they are.

Rick, a maintenance man, heard Samoan war drums, thought someone was out to kill him and turned himself over to the cops to avoid assassination. Connie, a messenger, thought her body was covered with bugs. She went so far as to call the health department and have her whole house fogged. Jack went outside several nights a week and rammed his truck into the trash cans in his driveway. Derek, a data programmer, had a DEA implant too, but he used his to contact famous men like Lee Iacocca for discussions about corporate management. Jasmine, the former manager of a fastfood restaurant, would spend hours cleaning her kitchen floor with a toothbrush. Tommie, a truck driver, heard voices from random speakers: The PA system at a used-car lot would taunt him. The radio in his truck would be off, but still it would call his name.

Ice affects people the way it does because of its similarity to a group of natural chemicals in the brain called sympathomimetic amines. These amines, which include norepinephrine, epinephrine and dopamine, function as neurotransmitters, the chemical facilitators of human reactions and feelings.

Amphetamines cause the release of these chemicals into the brain and body. The physical effects depend upon the user, the environment, the dose, the purity and the method of administration. With small doses, users experience increased blood pressure, slower heart rate and weaker heart contractions. With greater doses, heart rate and force of contractions accelerate. Other symptoms are dilated pupils, light sensitivity, blurred vision and dry mouth, as well as increased breathing rate and muscle tension.

Users also feel fidgety, anxious. They enjoy repeating simple tasks over and over, like stringing beads or playing darts. In the beginning, before reaching a toxic state, ice users feel euphoric and alert. They feel powerful, confident, uninhibited, impulsive, horny. Men experience easy and durable erections, and orgasms for both sexes are delayed and intense. Often, users think their performance on the job has improved, and sometimes their ability to carry out simple manual tasks may actually be greater. Usually, however, improvement is only in perception. You just think you're doing more.

After a time, the brain becomes flooded with dopamine, and the resulting imbalance is the same one seen in paranoid schizophrenics. In fact, researchers first began understanding schizophrenia when they applied the medical models developed through the study of "speed freaks" in the Sixties. Besides voices, hallucinations, bugs and paranoia, ice users also have less tolerance for frustration and stress, which often results in violence. Like schizophrenics, ice addicts can be treated with drugs like Thorazine and Haldol, though some patients continue to hear voices for as long as six months after quitting. As the acute symptoms of addiction set in, the intensity, efficiency and euphoria vanish. Users need larger and larger does just to get normal.

Smoking ice sends amphetamines quickly to the brain. Inhaled into the lungs, the drug is absorbed immediately into the bloodstream through millions of tiny vessels. The blood then flows into the left side of the heart, where it is pumped into the brain and then through the body. When injected, the drug travels from the vein through the body, to the right heart, to the lungs, to the left heart and then to the brain. This way, the drug takes longer to kick in, but users experience an intense rush. When smoked, there is little or no rush.

Ice may cause the arteries in the heart and brain to shrivel. Pulmonary edema, and excess of fluid in the lungs, has also been seen, as have strokes and cerebral hemorrhages. Early reports show that ice use by pregnant women causes decreased blood flow to the fetus, resulting in underdeveloped limbs, organs and brains. The long-term effects of ice are not known.

"Ice is the street name for methamphetamine, a man-made drug, one of a family of central-nervous-system stimulants called amphetamines. Some sources attribute the discovery of amphetamines to a German scientist in 1887; others to a Japanese in 1919. What is clear is that sometime around the turn of this century, pharmaceutical researchers figured out the chemical structure of the natural substance the brain manufactures to react to stress and synthesized it in the lab. Amphetamines are copies of the brain's natural stimulant.

It wasn't until 1932 that any practical use for amphetamines was discovered. That year, the drug company Smith, Kline and French marketed a Benzedrine inhaler for treatment of lung congestion, asthma, colds and hay fever. As people discovered the euphoriant effects of Benzedrine, the first abuse of the drug began. By breaking open the inhaler and pouring a soft drink over the drug-impregnated filter paper inside, users could extract the basic amphetamine. The manfacturer soon changed to a nasal shrinker that did not have a stimulative effect on the brain.

Over the next decade, depsite isolated instances of abuse, amphetamines became known as a kind of universal tonic. The drug industry developed a list of thirty-nine generally accepted uses for amphetamines, including treatment of schizophrenia; morphine, codeine and tobacco addiction; heart block; head injury; infantile cerebral palsy; radiation sickness; low blood pressure; seasickness; and persistant hiccups.

The drugs were promoted as nonaddictive, and amphetamine derivatives, such as methamphetamine, were developed in both oral and intravenous preparations. A warning was included with the drug, indicating that doses higher than recommended might cause restlessness and sleeplessness. Physicians at the time, according to the literature, were sure there were no significant side effects. In 1937, amphetamines were used in the treatment of hyperactive children, Parkinson's disease, depression and narcolepsy, an epileptic disorder that causes a person to fall asleep at inappropriate moments. When narcolepsy patients reported loss of appetite, it was discovered that amphetamines also worked as an anorexic, an appetite depressent for weight loss.

World War II saw heavy use of amphetamines by both sides. According to NIDA, 200 million amphetamine tablets were distributed to U.S. troops during the war to increase activity in battle and to stave off hunger and sleep. Likewise, the drug was used by the British and Germans, as well as the Japanese, who also distributed amphetamines to industrial workers at home to enhance output.

Consequently, large stores of the drug remained on hand after the war. Pharmaceutical companies in Japan mounted a publicity campaign to market the drug over the counter to the general public, suggesting that citizens needed the lift to get back into normal life. This led to the first documented epidemic of amphetamine abuse. In the late Forties, it was reported that Japan had 550,000 amphetamine addicts in a population of 88.5 million. Japan's first wave of abuse peaked in 1954, when the government cracked down on over-the-counter sales and 55,000 arrests were made. Amphetamine use, however, continued to spread throughout Asia.

Though a prescription was necessary in the United States, millions of units of amphetamines were still sold by drug companies to shady entrepreneurs in care of post office boxes. From there amphetamines found their way into diners, taverns, filling stations. Bennies or pep pills, as they came to be known, were used by college students athletes, truckers and housewives, in addition to thousands of veterans returning from the war with amphetamine habits.

The earliest incidence of intravenous abuse of amphetamines was found among American GIs stationed in Korea and Japan in the early Fifties. The soldiers learned to mix the drug—then called splash—with heroin and inject the combination. This came to be known as a speedball. In time, all amphetamines became known as speed.

In the early Sixties, doctors in San Francisco began prescribing amphetamine injections for treatment of heroin addiction. Widespread abuse followed as San Francisco pharmacies began selling injectable amphetamines without precriptions, or with crudely forged prescriptions or through bogus telephone orders from users posing as doctors. At the same time came the advent of the "scrip-writers," physicians who, for the six- or seven-dollar cost of an office visit, would write out prescriptions for drugs.

In 1962, federal, state and local law-enforcement agencies cracked down, and drug companies withdrew their liquid, injectable products from general distribution, though amphetamines remained available to hospitals. Soon illegal crystal meth labs cropped up in the Bay Area, capitalizing on the lucrative market abandoned by legitimate producers.

The height of speed abuse began with the Summer of Love, in 1967, when thousands of teenagers took off to Haight-Ashbury. That first year, pot and LSD were the drugs of choice for the masses of flower children; there was relatively little speed, and little violence, in the beginning. In time, however, the tenor of drug use in the Haight changed. As kids arrived in increasing numbers, the original flower children, who saw drugs as a path to love, peace and mind expansion, were overrun by the newcomers. The new kids were into anything they could get their hands on. The speed labs met the need.

In the last fifteen years, with the rise of cocaine and crack, amphetamines—under the name of crystal meth or crank—have found a quiet niche among motorcycle gangs, truckers and dopers in rural areas, where cocaine is less plentiful and too expensive, and where organized crime has no major stake. Produced in home labs by rogue chemists, the drug is synthesized by a simple process and has lately become even harder to detect due to new chemicals that smell less pungent.

After a lull of several years, crystal meth use seems to be on the rise in the U.S. seizures of labs producing crystal meth more than tripled between 1981 and 1987. Emergency-room reports of meth abuse increased 110 percent between 1985 and 1987. Meth-related deaths increased 78 percent between 1985 and 1986. Until recently, before the advent of ice, crystal meth was either snorted or shot.

Asians who live in crystal meth's "White Triangle"—the area circumscribed by Japan, Hong Kong and Thailand—have historically eschewed the use of needles. With their long tradition of smoking opium, heroin and marijuana, the Japanese, Chinese and Koreans have, over the last several decades, been smoking amphetamines as well.

With the law-enforcement heat on in Japan in the Sixties, Japanese criminal gangs, the yakuza, relocated their illegal amphetamine laboratories to South Korea and Taiwan, shipping the finished product back to Japan to feed the habits of tens of thousands, possibly hundreds of thousands, of addicts. Arrests in Japan for amphetamine trafficking and possession have held steady at about 20,000 a year for the last decade. In South Korea, arrests increased about 800 percent between 1984 and 1988. Recently, Korean authorities arrested twenty-three people involved in a major production ring. Drug-enforcement officials say that the lifting of foreign-travel restrictions by the Seoul government has led to a 72 percent increase in travel, providing an easy screen for drug couriers.

Ice made its first appearance in Hawaii during the late Seventies, as America's fiftieth state was taking on the increasingly Eastern complexion of a Pacific rim outpost. The man who popularized ice in Hawaii, according to law-enforcement officials, was a Filipino immigrant named Paciano "Sonny"

Guerrero. Arrested in March of last year with two pounds of ice, a DeLorean car, $30,000 in cash and jewelry and detailed records of his business dealings, Guerrero, 38, was sentenced to twenty-five years in prison without parole for the sale and distribution of ice.

Guerrero, a naturalized citizen, came to Hawaii from the Philippines in the Sixties, then worked as a warehouseman and mechanic for a tire dealership near Honolulu. He and a few friends began smoking and dealing small amounts of ice in the late Seventies and early Eighties. In 1984, Guerrero met Jackie Y. She and her boyfriend, Leonard T. Kang, had access to a big source of ice at home in Korea. Thus, Guerrero became the main ice connection in Hawaii.

"Sonny was a horrendous gambler," says one law-enforcement official. "Through his gambling—cockfighting and cards—he knew hundreds of people, mostly Filipinos who were either degenerate gamblers or car thieves, the criminal element." Under Guerrero, there emerged a group of lieutenants called the Seven Princes. Beginning in 1984, a well-structured organization was built, and Guerrero started moving pounds, kilos and multikilos through a network of dealers and runners that ran into the hundreds and supplied thousands.

"The organization was kind of strange in that they didn't really fit into the patterns you usually see," says the official. "Generally, some are groups of amateurs that get lucky, and the next thing they know, they're making millions. Then you have the organized-crime guys, and it's just a business. Sonny didn't fit into either category. On the one hand, they were very organized, had very clear-cut lines of communications and authority. They had beepers and code numbers, were very security-conscious. They divided things up into cells, so some people never knew who they were getting their drugs from. They were very efficient and very smart in some ways. But very stupid in others. For example, here you have a multimillion-dollar organization, and everybody involved, including the people making millions, were smoking themselves."

Guerrero, five foot six, 150 pounds, favored loud clothes and gaudy jewelry. When he was arrested, he was wearing around his neck a one-ounce gold Krugerrand surrounded by one-carat diamonds. Guerrero ran a stable of fighting chickens and gambled regularly at Sam See Gambling House, an illegal parlor in Kalihi, one of the Filipino ghettos of Oahu. He was known to drop $250,000 in an evening and laugh it off.

Guerrero also liked to travel to the mainland with an entourage. The group, usually four men and three women, would fly to Los Angeles and check into an expensive suite, equipped with four or five televisions. Then the women would be sent out to buy Nintendo games for all the TVs, and the men would smoke ice and play Nintendo all night long. The next day they'd leave the stuff in the room, fly to San Francisco and start all over again.

It is not known how much ice Guerrero moved during his career, but in the eighteen months before his arrest, his own minutely kept records show, he sold more than seventy-five kilos of the drug at gross receipts of $7.6 million.

Through contacts with the underworld, Guerrero assembled a sales force from the memberships of five Filipino gangs; the Hawaii Brothers, the Young Hawaii Brothers, the Cross Suns, the Wild Boys and the Young Terrible Kids. Ranging in age from fifteen to thirty, these gang members involved in drugs numbered about 300.

In certain ways, the Filipino gangs mirror the profile of gangs on the mainland. They are socially dispossessed young men, with litte education. They see ice not only as good tasting and countercultural but also as the key to economic and social gain. The Filipino gangs surfaced years ago in response to intense prejudice against Filipinos in Hawaii. In a land of immigrants, Filipinos are at the bottom of the racial pecking order. The butt of jokes and lampoonish stereotypes, they are known throughout the islands as the Puerto Ricans of the Pacific.

Filipinos were first brought to the territory in the 1900s as colonials contracted to work on sugar-cane and pineapple plantations. Today, with the decline of agriculture in the state, they work predominantly in the "new plantations," the tourist hotels and restaurants that account for the bulk of Hawaii's industry and income.

From 1970 to 1980, during which time martial law was imposed by Philippine president Ferdinand Marcos, the percentage of Filipinos in the Hawaiian population rose from nine to fifteen. In public schools, a good indicator of future demographics, thirty percent of the students today are Filipinos. Filipinos have twice the birthrate of any other ethnic group except Hawaiians, and their dropout rates are the highest. Filipinos also have the highest percentage of parents holding at least two jobs. In fact, it is not uncommon for each parent to work two jobs. Instant cash is what they're after. They want to bring their families over, to buy a house. Though the ghettos are not dirty or run-down, they are overcrowded, with landlords charging their countrymen $300 to $600 a month for one room in a house shared with several other Filipino families.

"Because the first wave of immigration was predominantly male," says Dean Alegado, a Philippines-born professor of ethnic studies at the University of Hawaii, "a lot of the stereotypes about Filipinos had to do with lack of women. They are also known for gambling, troublemaking, knives, gangs. They traveled in packs, spent money on expensive clothes and cars, lived in red-light districts like Chinatown."

Says one intermediate-school guidance counselor: "The parents work very hard to give their kids material things. They don't see their kids much, so they give them things. They figure they're in America now, and kids just have to have what they see on TV. All the kids have cars. Nice new cars. A lot of them are bought by the parents. The parents take the bus, the kids bring the cars to school. It's not unusual for a parent to get another job just to make the payments on a kid's car."

With the coming of Sonny Guerrero and ice, young Filipinos saw a new and exciting way to make money. Oddly, counselors and teachers first noticed amphetamine use among adolescent Filipino girls who may have been given the drug by older boyfriends. Soon, however, the boys followed. "One of the first things we noticed," says one youth counselor, "was that the stuff was incredibly expensive, so the people who were using were also selling. And all of a sudden these kids had access to money like they never saw before. Mostly they sell to their friends. We had one client who was netting like $500 a week for some pretty minimal dealing."

Adds the school guidance counselor: "These kids give the money they make back to their parents. I don't think the parents ask them where it's from. They can always pull the shades down over their eyes."

The kids also spend money on themselves, though not in the ostentatious ways of the mainland. The older ones have new cars, but they tend to be Nissans and Hondas and pickup trucks. They dress like Miami Vice, get their hair spiked in the front and leave it long in the back, sometimes tinting the ends with henna. They carry handguns in their belts or in tote bags. They turn up the Van Halen or Bon Jovi, but not too loud. Oahu may be a large island, but it is still a very small town.

From the Filipino community, use of the drug spread outward into the general population. "When you get down to the level of the guy who works at Sears, and he wants to sell a half a gram to make back his money and get his stash free, he's going to sell to anybody, whether the guy's white or Japanese or whatever," says a law-enforcement source. "The other ethnic groups just don't have their own source of supply."

Today—with Guerrero, a major Korean distributor and many leaders of the Hawaii Brothers in jail on drug and criminal charges—rival Filipino gangs are vying for control of Hawaii's ice trade. In the last six months there has been an outbreak of gang-related shootings. One boy was killed in a shootout at a high school. A twenty-three-year-old man was found on a deserted road, bound hand and foot and shot through the head. A sixty-four-year-old woman was killed in the crossfire of a drive-by shooting.

"The trend I'm looking at now," says an officer with the Honolulu police department's gang task force, "is that there's a void at the top of the organizations. We feel the ground rumbling. It's starting to look like the more crystal gets notoriety here, the more people start to use it, the more these gangs are going to realize, hey, this is a damn profitable drug.

"These guys are getting sophisticated," the officer continues. "They're going high-tech. Pagers, cellular phones, guys keeping track of their deals on personal computers. And when you take the general public out there, the users can be anybody. Although the angle is that, hey, these gang guys here are dealing it, you have a great demand out there, and it doesn't matter what ethnic group they are. The users come from all backgrounds. Eventually, they start selling too."

In the next few years, if the experts from NIDA and the DEA are correct, the mainland will be hearing a lot more about ice hallucinations and voices, ice bugs and paranoia, ice in the workplace and at home.

ALL WHO LOVE DEMOCRACY REJOICE

HON. BOB McEWEN

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, February 26, 1990

Mr. McEWEN. Mr. Speaker, the past 8 months have been unparalleled in providing a string of dramatic democratic uprisings in oppressive Communist countries, confirming the success of decades of dedicated American effort, and the complete failure and rejection of communism. In nearly all corners of the world this is a tremendously exciting time for supporters of peace, freedom, and democracy.

Today I rise to applaud the efforts of those who have labored for years to allow Nicaragua to join the rest of its Central American neighbors in the family of free and democratic nations. Despite every effort of the Sandinista dictators and their friends to the contrary, the forces of democracy would not submit to the type of tactics that held Eastern Europe hostage for the past 45 years.

Yesterday, the Sandinista regime that tried to steal every ounce of freedom, democracy, and human spirit out of the people of Nicaragua over the last decade, learned a lesson that continues to ring in the ears of Communist dictators the world over: Given the slimmest opportunity, the desire to breath free will lead to the demise of totalitarians.

Here from this place of freedom, to Violeta, Chamorro, the rest of the UNO candidates, parties, and supporters, and all of the Nicaraguans with the courage to defy the Sandinista threats and vote for UNO, demand our respect and commendation. We hope that this will cause another country to be free from the grips of Communist oppression—all who love democracy rejoice.

TECHNICAL REFERENCE DOCUMENT FOR THE DIGITAL AUDIO TAPE RECORDER ACT OF 1990

HON. HENRY A. WAXMAN

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, February 26, 1990

Mr. WAXMAN. Mr. Speaker, printed below is the Technical Reference Document for the Digital Audio Tape Recorder Act of 1990. This document contains the standards and specifications for the serial copy management system [SCMS] in DAT recorders recommended by the recording and consumer electronics industries and mandated by H.R. 4096, the Digital Audio Tape Recorder Act of 1990.

TECHNICAL REFERENCE DOCUMENT FOR THE DIGITAL AUDIO TAPE RECORDER ACT OF 1990

INTRODUCTION

This Technical Reference memorandum is provided to facilitate the implementation of legislation relating to digital audio tape ("DAT") recorders, known as the "Digital Audio Tape Recorder Act of 1990" ("the Act").

This Technical Reference memorandum adopts those standards proposed to the International Electrotechnical Commission ("IEC") in "IEC 958: Digital Audio Interface" and "IEC XXX Part 6: Serial copy management system for consumer audio use DAT recorders", that are necessary to implement the Serial Copy Management System under the Act. However, compliance with the standards and specifications set forth herein may require adherence to additional IEC standards and specifications with respect to digital audio signals and/or DAT recorders. Regardless of whether the standards and specifications set forth in this or any other document are subsequently adopted or amended by the IEC, the mandatory standards and specifications set forth herein, as they may be amended pursuant to an order of the Secretary of Commerce under Section 4(b) of the Act, shall be considered determinative for the purposes of United States law.

Two sets of standards and specifications are established by this memorandum. The first set governs the composition of digital audio signals being sent to or by a DAT recorder via a non-professional interface, referred to hereinafter as the "Digital Audio Interface Standard." The second set governs the recording and play-back functions of non-professional model DAT recorders, referred to hereinafter as the "Serial Copy Management System Standard" or the "SCMS Standard."

PART 1. DIGITAL AUDIO INTERFACE STANDARD

Many devices are capable of producing digital audio signals. For example, compact disc players, DAT recorders, analog-to-digital converters and electronic musical instruments currently can issue digital audio signals; future devices may include digital videocassette recorders and digital microphones, among others. To enable communication between these different types of devices and a DAT recorder, it is necessary and desirable to establish a common protocol or "interface" that mandates the location and significance of particular bits of information in the digital audio output signal of each device. Such a standard already has been established in the document IEC 958.

Under IEC 958, inaudible information, known as "Channel status data", accompanies a digital audio signal being sent to or by a DAT recorder. Like all digital data, channel status data consist of numerical information encoded as a series of zeros and ones. Each zero or one constitutes a "bit" of data in which both zero and one may impart information concerning the composition of the audio signal being sent to or by a DAT recorder. Bits represented in this memorandum as "X", rather than as zero or one, indicate that those bits may be either zero or one without affecting the standards set forth herein.

Channel status data bits are organized into units of information, known as "blocks," relating to both the left and right stereo audio channels. Each block contains 192 bits of information, numbered consecutively from 0 to 191. Most of these 192 bits currently are reserved for future use. Those channel status bits that are significant to the implementation of the Digital Audio Interface Standard and the Serial Copy Management System are included within channel status bits 0 through 15, as set forth in the remaining sections of this Part I.

A. Summary of Mandatory Digital Audio Interface Standard

According to IEC 958, there are two basic types of interfaces for digital audio signals that can be sent to or by a DAT recorder. A "professional interface" is a digital audio signal that contains particular types of channel status data for such DAT recorders as would be used by recording professionals as contemplated by the Act ("professional model" DAT recorders). A "non-professional interface" is a digital audio signal that contains different types of channel status data. The channel status data sent in a non-professional interface are incompatible with the channel status data in a professional interface. Hence, a non-professional DAT recorder cannot record digital audio signals sent in a professional interface. Whether a digital audio interface is professional or non-professional is indicated by the setting of Bit 0, know as the "Channel Status Block Flag", as set forth below.

This Digital Audio Interface Standard applies only to machines having a non-professional interface. To the extent that a professional model DAT machine also may have a non-professional interface, such a professional model DAT machine must send channel status data via its non-professional interface in accordance with the standards set forth herein. However, nothing in this Digital Audio Interface Standard shall be interpreted to prevent a professional model DAT recorder having a non-professional interface from permitting such channel status data bits to be set in accordance with the needs of a professional user.

This Digital Audio Interface Standard requires that all devices having a digital audio output capable of supplying a digital audio signal to a DAT recorder through a non-professional interface must implement five types of codes located between Channel Status Bits 0 and 15. Under the Digital Audio Interface Standard, Channel Status Bits 0 through 15 are supplied in a digital audio output signal, and are read by a DAT recorder. Those bits that are mandated under this Digital Audio Interface Standard are as follows:

1. Bit 0. Bit 0 (the "Channel Status Block Flag"), one of the "Control" bits, shall identify whether the channel status bits are for a professional or non-professional interface. Where Bit 0 is set as "1", the signal contains the channel status data required for a professional interface. Where Bit 0 is set as "0", the channel status data is suitable for a non-professional interface. The remaining bit assignments under this Digital Audio Interface Standard are mandated only with respect to a non-professional interface, i.e., where Bit 0 is set as "0".

2. Bit 1. Bit 1, another of the "Control" bits, shall identify whether the signal being sent to or by the DAT recorder is a digital audio or a digital data signal. Where Bit 1 is set as "0", the signal is a digital audio signal. Where Bit 1 is set as "1", the signal is a digital data signal.

3. Bit 2. Bit 2 (the "C" Bit), another of the "Control" bits, shall identify whether copyright protection is asserted for the work being sent via the digital audio input signal. Where the C Bit is set as "0", copyright protection has been asserted over the material being sent to the digital audio input of the DAT recorder. Where the C Bit is set as "1", either that material is not protected by copyright or no copyright protection has been asserted by the owner of that material. For Digital Receivers (Category Codes 001XXXXL and 0111XXXL), the C Bit shall be set as "0", except that these devices shall send the C Bit as "1" only where the cable operator or broadcaster specifically transmits information indicating that no copyright protection has been asserted over the material. Where a device combines more than one digital audio input signal into one digital audio output signal (e.g., in the case of a digital signal mixing device), and copyright protection has been asserted in the C Bit for at least one of the input signals, then the device must permit the assertion of copyright protection over the resulting digital audio output signal (i.e., set the C Bit as "0").

There is no existing legal requirement that a copyright owner must assert protection over its work (and, therefore, set the C Bit as "0"). However, except as provided herein with respect to Digital Receivers, a copyright owner may not set the C Bit as "0" for works that are not copyrighted or are in the public domain.

4. Bits 3-7. These bits are sent to and read by a DAT recorder, but specific bit settings for Bits 3-7 are not necessary for the implementation of the SCMS Standard set forth in Part II.

5. Bits 8-14. Bits 8-14 shall specify a "Category Code" that identifies the type of device that produces the digital audio signal sent to or by a DAT recorder. Using various combinations of zeros and ones, Bits 8-14 can define Category Codes for as many as 128 different devices that can provide digital audio signals to a DAT recorder. According to IEC 958, the first three to five Category Code bits (numbered Bits 8-10 through 8-12) describe general product groups, and the remaining Category Codes bits specify particular devices within each product group. IEC 958 has assigned particular Category Codes to existing and anticipated product groups and devices, and has reserved additional Category Codes for future devices.

The Category Code issued by each particular device must reflect the most specific code applicable to that device. There is one exception in the case of digital signal processing and mixing products, which receive digital audio signals from one or more sources and either process or combine them with other incoming digital audio signals. If all incoming signals are from an analog-to-digital converter having a Category Code "01100XXX", these devices should issue the Category Code of that analog-to-digital converter rather than of the digital signal processing or mixing device. This will permit two generations of copies from present-day analog recordings, which otherwise is permitted under the SCMS Standard.

The relevance of these Category Codes to the SCMS Standard is described below in Part II.

6. Bit 15. Bit 15 (the "L" Bit) shall indicate the "generation status" of the digital audio signals being sent to or by a DAT recorder. "Generation status" means whether the signal emanates from a source that has been produced or published by or with the authority of the owner of the material, such as commercially released pre-recorded compact discs or DAT tapes or a digital broadcast (referred to herein as "original"); or whether the signal emanates from a recording made from such "original" material. In the latter case, a recording made directly from an "original" source is known as a "first-generation" copy; a recording made from a first-generation copy is a "second-generation" copy; and so forth.

For most products, if the L Bit is set as "0", the source is a recording that is first-generation or higher. If the L Bit is set as "1", the source is "original." For digital audio output signals from a laser-optical product, however, the definitions of the L Bit are reversed (i.e., L Bit= "0" for "original" material and L Bit="1" for first-generation or higher recordings). For Digital Broadcast Receivers (Category Codes 001XXXXL and 0111XXXL), the L Bit always shall be set as "0"; except in the case of receivers for Electronic Audio Software Delivery, in which case such receivers shall send the L Bit as "1" only where the cable operator or broadcaster specifically transmits information indicating that the higher material should be treated as if it were first-generation or higher.

For devices that combine more than one digital audio input signal into one digital audio output signal (such as digital signal processors or mixers), the L Bit of the output signal must reflect the highest generation status of any input signal over which copyright protection has been asserted. Thus, where one or more of the constituent input signals is a first-generation or higher copy over which copyright protection is asserted, then the device must reflect in the L Bit of the digital audio output signal the generation status for a first-generation or higher copy. In all other cases, the device shall reflect in the L Bit that the output signal is original.

B. Mandatory Digital Audio Interface Standards

The following bit assignments for channel status data, as referenced in the provisions of IEC 958 ¶ 4.2.2 "Channel status data format for digital equipment for consumer use", shall be mandatory:

1. Bit 0-2 of the "CONTROL" Bits:

a. Bit 0 (the "Channel Status Block Flag")

Bit 0= "0"—Non-professional interface.

Bit 0= "1"—Professsional interface.

b. Bit 1.

Bit 1="0"—Digital audio signals.

Bit 1="1"—Non-audio (data) signals.

c. Bit 2 (the "C" Bit).

i. Case 1.

Bit 2="0"—Copyright protection asserted.

Bit 2="1"—No copyright protection asserted or not under copyright.

Exception to Case 1.

For Digital Receivers (Category Codes 001XXXXL and 0111XXXL), the C Bit shall indicate:

Bit 2="0"—Copyright information transmitted and protection asserted, or no copyright information transmitted.

Bit 2="1"—Copyright information transmitted and no copyright protection asserted.

ii. Case 2.

Where a single digital audio output signal results from the combination of more than one digital audio input signal:

Bit 2="0"—Copyright protection asserted over at least one of the constituent digital audio input signals.

Bit 2="1"—For all of the consistent digital audio input signals, no copyright protection asserted or not under copyright.

2. Bits 3-7:

Specific bit settings for Bits 3-7 are not necessary for the implementation of the SCMS Standard set forth in Part II.

3. CATEGORY CODE Bits 8-15:

a. Bits 8-15.

The Category Codes that follow are established for particular product groups. Where Bit 15 is represented by "L" rather than a zero or on, Bit 15 (the "L" Bit) can be either a zero or one without affecting the Category Code. Where Bit 15 is represented by "X" rather than a zero or one, the device is not capable of issuing status information concerning the L Bit.

00000000—General. This category applies to products that are capable of sending channel status data but are not programmed to send such data in accordance with the specifications set forth in this Memorandum, because the products were manufactured before the implementation of this Digital Audio Interface Standard and the Serial Copy Management System Standard. This General Category Code shall not be used for products manufactured after the effective date of the Act.

0000001L—Experimental products not for commercial sale.

100XXXXL—Laser-optical products, such as compact disc players (including recordable and erasable compact disc players) and videodisc players with digital audio outputs.

010XXXXL—Digital-to-digital ("D/D") converters and signal processing products.

110XXXXL—Magnetic tape of disc based products, such as DAT players and recorders.

001XXXXL and 0111XXXL—Digital reception of digitally-encoded audio signals with or without video signals, including Digital Cable or Digital Broadcast Receivers.

101XXXXL—Musical instruments, microphones and other sources that create original digital audio signals.

01100XXX—Analog-to-digital ("A/D") converters for analog signals without status information concerning the C Bit and L Bit ("Present A/D converters").

01101XXL—A/C converters for analog signals which include status information concerning the C Bit and the L Bit ("Future A/D converters").

0001XXXL—Solid memory based products.

Particular devices within each product group defined above shall be assigned specific Category Codes in accordance with IEC 958. Manufacturers of any device that is capable of supplying a digital audio input to a DAT recorder must use the most specific Category Code applicable to that particular device. However, digital signal processing or digital signal mixing products in Category Code product group "010XXXXL" should issue the Category Code for Present A/D converters where all the input signals have the Category Code for a Present A/D converter.

b. Bit 15 (the "L" Bit):

The L Bit shall be used to identify the generation status of the digital audio signal as emanating from an "original" work or from a first-generation or higher recording.

1. Case 1.

For all Category Code (except as explicitly set forth below), the L Bit shall indicate:

Bit 15="0"—First-generation or higher recording.

Bit 15="1"—"Original" work, such as a commercially released pre-recorded DAT tape.

a. Exception (a) to Case 1.

The reverse situation is valid for laser optical products (100XXXXL). For this Category Code the L Bit shall indicate:

Bit 15= "1"—First-generation or higher recording

Bit 15= "0"—"Original" recording, such as a commercially released pre-recorded compact disc

b. Exception (b) to Case 1.

For Digital Receivers (Category Codes 001XXXXL and 0111XXXL), Bit 15 always shall be set as "0"; except for receivers for Electronic Audio Software Delivery, for which the L Bit shall indicate:

Bit 15= "0"—Generation status information transmitted as original status material or no generation status information transmitted

Bit 15= "1"—Generation status information transmitted as for non-original material

c. Exception (c) to Case 1.

The L Bit has no meaning for A/D converters for analog signals that do not include status information concerning the C Bit and the L Bit (i.e., A/D converters in Category Code 01100XXX).

2. Case 2.

Where a single digital audio output signal results from the combination of more than one digital audio input signal:

Bit 15= "0"—One or more of those constituent digital audio input signals over which copyright protection has been asserted is first-generation or higher.

Bit 15= "1"—All other cases.

II. SERIAL COPY MANAGEMENT SYSTEM FOR "NON-PROFESSIONAL MODEL" DAT RECORDERS

The Serial Copy Management System Standard applies only to digital audio tape recorders that are not professional model DAT recorders as defined under the Act.

The general intention of the SCMS Standard is to prevent non-professional model DAT recorders from making second-generation or higher digital recordings of "original" digital audio input signals over which copyright protection has been asserted via the channel status bits. The SCMS Standard does not prevent the making of a first-generation recording of such "original" digital audio signals. As future technologies permit, the SCMS Standard will limit the digital recording by a DAT recorder of analog audio signals over which copyright protection has been asserted to the making of only a first-generation digital copy. However, because present technology does not identify whether analog audio signals are protected by copyright, the SCMS Standard will not prevent the making of a first and second-generation digital copy of such signals. The SCMS Standard will not restrict digital recording of material over which copyright protection has not been asserted via the channel status bits of the digital audio input signal.

A. Summary of Mandatory Serial Copy Management System Standard

To implement the Serial Copy Management System, the SCMS Standard requires that a DAT machine must play-back and/or record specific inaudible data in a particular location on a digital audio tape. According to the IEC documents "IEC XXX Part 1: Digital Audio Tape Cassette System (DAT) Dimensions and Characteristics" and "Part 6: Serial copy management system for consumer audio use DAT recorders," that particular location on the digital audio tape consists of two bits known as "subcode ID6 in the main ID in the main data area" ("ID6").

1. SCMS Operation When Playing a DAT Tape

With respect to the play-back function, a DAT machine that is connected to another DAT recorder can provide digital audio output signals via a non-professional interface. In that circumstance, the DAT play-back machine functions as a digital audio interface device that must provide channel status data conforming to the Digital Audio Interface Standard set forth above in Part I. The SCMS Standard requires that when a digital audio tape is played back, the DAT play-back machine reads the information from ID6 on the tape and then sends the corresponding channel status data (concerning Bit 2 "the C Bit" and Bit 15 "the L Bit"), along with the Category Code for a DAT machine, in its digital audio output signal. The channel status data to be sent in response to the various settings of ID6 are as follows:

1. Where ID6 is set as "00", copyright protection has not been asserted over the material under the SCMS Standard. In response to ID6, the digital audio signal output of the DAT will provide the C Bit set as "1" and the L Bit set as "0".

2. Where ID6 is set as "10", copyright protection has been asserted over the material under the SCMS Standard and the recording is not "original". In response to ID6, the digital audio output signal of the DAT will provide the C Bit set as "0" and the L Bit set as "0".

3. Where ID6 is set as "11", copyright protection has been asserted over the material under the SCMS standard and the recording is "original". In response to ID6, the digital audio output signal of the DAT will provide the C Bit set as "0" and the L Bit set as "1".

2. SCMS Operation When Recording on DAT Tape

With respect to the recording function, the SCMS Standard governs the circumstances and manner in which a DAT recorder may record a digital audio input signal. A DAT recorder implementing the SCMS Standard must be capable of acknowledging the presence or absence of specific channel status information being sent to the DAT recorder via its digital audio input. The DAT recorder than responds to that channel status information by either preventing or permitting the recording of that digital audio input signal. If recording is permitted, the DAT machine records specific codes in ID6 on the tape, so that when the tape is played back, the DAT machine will issue the correct channel status data in its digital audio output signal. The settings of ID6 to be recorded in response to particular channel status bit information are as follows:

1. Where the C Bit of the digital audio input signal is set as "0" (copyright protection asserted), the DAT recorder shall not record the input, except in three circumstances: (a) where the input is original material (i.e., where the digital audio input signal comes from one of the products on the "Category Code White List" set forth below in section C); (b) where the digital audio input signal contains an undefined Category Code (in which case only one generation of recording is permitted); or, (c) where the digital audio input signal comes from a product with a defined Category Code but the product currently is not capable of transmitting information regarding copyright protection (in which case, two generations of copying are possible). In circumstances (a) and (b) above, the DAT recorder will record "10" in ID6 to prevent further copying. In circumstance (c) above, the DAT recorder will record "11" in ID6 for the first-generation copy.

2. Where the C Bit of the digital audio input signal is set as "1" (no copyright protection asserted or not copyrighted), the DAT recorder will record "00" in ID6, and unlimited generations of copying will be permitted.

3. Where the C Bit of the digital audio input signal fluctuates between "0" and "1" at a rate of between 4–10 Hz, the signal is coming from a recordable or erasable compact disc that is not an "original" and that contains material over which copyright protection has been asserted. The DAT recorder shall not record in this circumstance.

4. The condition "01" in ID6 has been assigned no meaning within the SCMS Standard. Therefore, to prevent circumvention of the SCMS Standard, the DAT recorder shall not record "01"in ID6 on the tape.

B. Mandatory Standards for the Serial Copy Management System

Mandatory Standards for Digital Audio Output Signals

a. Category Code Bit 15 (the "L" Bit).

All "non-professional model" DAT recorders shall provide the Category Code "1100000L" in the channel status bits of the digital audio output signal. The status of the L Bit of the Category Code shall be provided in the digital audio output signal of the DAT recorder as follows, in accordance with the status of ID6:

When ID6 is "00", the digital audio output signal shall indicate in the L Bit of the Category Code that the output source is either a first-generation on higher DAT tape recorded from an "original" source, or an "original" commercially released prerecorded DAT tape of material over which copyright protection is not being asserted under the SCMS standard. In either of these cases, the L Bit shall be set as "0", and the complete Category Code would be "11000000".

When ID6 is "10", the digital audio output signal shall indicate in the L Bit of the Category Code that the output source is a first-generation or higher DAT tape recorded from an "original" source (i.e., L Bit="0"). The complete Category Code in this case would be "11000000".

When ID6 is "11", the digital audio output signal shall indicate in the L Bit of the Category Code that the output source is an "original" source, such as a commercially released prerecorded DAT tape (i.e., L Bit="1"). The complete Category Code in this case would be "11000001".

b. Bit 2 (the "C" Bit).

All non-professional model DAT recorders shall provide an output code in the C Bit in the channel status bits of a digital audio output signal. The C Bit shall be applied in the digital audio output signal as follows, in accordance with the status of ID6:

When ID6 is "00", the C Bit shall be set as "1".

When ID6 is "10" or "11", the C Bit shall be set as "0".

2. Mandatory Standards for Recording Functions

The SCMS Standard with respect to recording functions performed by a non-professional model DAT recorder receiving digital audio input signals shall be implemented as follows:

1. Digital audio input signals in which the C Bit is set as "0" shall not be recorded, except for the cases specified below in paragraphs 2, 4 and 5.

2. A DAT recorder may record a digital audio input signal in which the C Bit is set as "0", where the Category Code of the signal is listed in the "Category Code White List" set forth below. The DAT recorder shall record "10" in ID6 on the tape in this case.

3. For digital audio input signals in which the C Bit is set as "1", the DAT recorder shall record "00" in ID6 on the tape except for those cases specified below in paragraphs 4 and 5.

4. For digital audio input signals that contain Category Code information that is not defined in this memorandum, the DAT recorder shall record "10" in ID6, regardless of the status of the C Bit or the L bit.

5. For digital audio input signals originating from an A/D converter with the Category Code "01100XXL", or from other sources such as from A/D converters with the Category Code for "General" ("00000000"), the DAT recorder shall record "11" in ID6, regardless of the status of the C Bit or the L Bit. This requirement shall be applied to digital input signals that do not contain source information of the original signal before digitization, e.g., an A/D converter that does not deliver source information.

6. For digital input signals originating from an A/D converter with the Category Code "01101XXL", which can deliver original source information concerning the C Bit and L Bit even if the source is in analog format, the requirement stated above in paragraph 5 shall not be applied. The "Category Code White List" set forth below includes this Category Code.

7. A digital audio tape of "original" generation status over which copyright protection has been asserted shall contain "11" in ID6. A digital audio tape of "original" generation status over which no copyright protection has been asserted shall contain "00" in ID6.

8. A DAT recorder shall not record digital audio input signals where the C Bit alternates between "0" and "1" at a frequency of between 4 and 10 Hz and the Category Code is for a Compact disc digital audio signal ("10000000"), as in the case of digital audio input signals from recordable or erasable compact discs that are not "original" and that contain material over which copyright protection has been asserted.

9. A non-professional model DAT recorder shall not record digital audio input signals sent from a professional interface, i.e., where channel status Bit 0 is set as "1".

10. The condition "01" in ID6 is not to be used.

11. Category codes and the C Bit included in the channel status information of digital audio input signals being sent to or by a DAT recorder shall not be deleted or modified and shall be monitored continuously and acted upon accordingly.

C. "CATEGORY CODE WHITE LIST"

100XXXX0—Laser optical product.

010XXXX1—Digital-to-digital converter and signal processing devices.

110XXXX1—Magnetic tape and disc based product.

001XXXX0—Digital reception of digitally encoded audio and signals with or without video signals, such as 0111XXX0—Digital Cable and Digital Broadcast Receivers.

101XXXX1—Musical instruments.

01101XX1—Future A/D converter (with status information concerning the C Bit and L Bit).

0001XXX1—Solid state memory based product.

00000011—Experimental products not for commercial sale.

PART III. APPLICATION OF THE DIGITAL AUDIO INTERFACE AND SCMS STANDARDS

The following charts apply and correlate those codes that are mandated by the Digital Audio Interface Standards SCMS Standard under the Act, in those situations contemplated by these standards. The columns in each of these charts identify the following information:

The "Signal Source" column describes the type of product sending the digital audio signal to a DAT recorder.

The three columns under the heading "Digital Audio Input Signal" identify the correct channel status information in the C Bit, Category Code Bits 8-14 and the L Bit, respectively, which correspond to each product. The "Digital Audio Input Signal" described below is the signal being sent to the DAT recorder.

The next three columns under the heading "DAT Recorder Response" identify the response of the DAT recorder to the corresponding digital audio input signal. The column "ID6" specifies the code that the DAT recorder will record on the tape in ID6 in response to the digital audio input signal. The last two columns set forth the correct channel status information in the C Bit and L Bit that are sent in the digital audio output signal of a DAT recorder in response to the setting of ID6.

Each of the appropriate codes is set forth in the cases described below:

CASE 1.—WHERE COPYRIGHT PROTECTION HAS BEEN ASSERTED OVER THE DIGITAL AUDIO INPUT, AND THE SOURCE OF THE INPUT IS "ORIGINAL" MATERIAL

[Only first-generation recording permitted]

Signal source	Digital audio input signal			DAT recorder response

SENATE COMMITTEE MEETINGS

Title IV of Senate Resolution 4, agreed to by the Senate on February 4, 1977, calls for establishment of a system for a computerized schedule of all meetings and hearings of Senate committees, subcommittees, joint committees, and committees of conference. This title requires all such committees to notify the Office of the Senate Daily Digest—designated by the Rules Committee—of the time, place, and purpose of the meetings, when scheduled, and any cancellations or changes in the meetings as they occur.

As an additional procedure along with the computerization of this information, the Office of the Senate Daily Digest will prepare this information for printing in the Extensions of Remarks section of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD on Monday and Wednesday of each week.

Any changes in committee scheduling will be indicated by placement of an asterisk to the left of the name of the unit conducting such meetings.

Meetings scheduled for Tuesday, February 27, 1990, may be found in the Daily Digest of today's RECORD.

MEETINGS SCHEDULED

FEBRUARY 28

9:00 a.m.
Armed Services
To continue hearings on S. 2171, to authorize appropriations for fiscal year 1991 for military functions of the Department of Defense and to prescribe military personnel levels for fiscal year 1991.
SD-106

Labor and Human Resources
Business meeting, to consider S. 15, Emergency Services and Trauma Care Improvement Act, S. 1511, Older Worker's Benefit Protection Act, S. 722, Food Safety Amendments, S. 685, Employee Pension Protection Act, S. 1883, Tobacco Product Education and Health Protection Act, the proposed National Atmospheric Nuclear Testing Completion Act, and pending nominations.
SD-430

Select on Indian Affairs
To hold hearings on proposed budget estimates for fiscal year 1991 for Indian programs.
SR-485

9:30 a.m.
Agriculture, Nutrition, and Forestry
To hold hearings on the nomination of Gary C. Byrne, of California, to be Administrator of the Rural Electrification Administration, Department of Agriculture.
SR-332

Budget
To resume hearings in preparation for reporting the first concurrent resolution on the fiscal year 1991 budget.
SD-608

Commerce, Science, and Transportation
Consumer Subcommittee
To hold hearings on S. 114, a bill to declare activities of manufacturers or distributors of soft drinks which induce retailers to purchase soft drink syrup solely from such entities to be unfair acts or practices for purposes of the Federal Trade Commission Act.
SR-253

Energy and Natural Resources
Business meeting, to consider pending calendar business.
SD-366

10:00 a.m.
Banking, Housing, and Urban Affairs
To hold oversight hearings to review the Office of Technology Assessment's report, "Making Things Better: Competing in Manufacturing."
SD-538

Commerce, Science, and Transportation
To hold hearings on the nominations of Eugene Wong, of Missouri, and William D. Phillips, of California, both to be Associate Directors of the Office of Science and Technology Policy, Executive Office of the President.
SR-232A

Finance
To hold hearings on proposed legislation for deficit reduction and spending initiatives contained in the President's fiscal year 1991 budget.
SD-215

Foreign Relations
To hold hearings to review the Andean Drug Summit.
SD-419

Governmental Affairs
Business meeting, to consider S. 2006, to establish the Department of the Environment and to provide for a global environmental policy of the United States, the nomination of Allan V. Burman, of Virginia, to be Administrator for Federal Procurement Policy, and other pending calendar business.
SD-342

Judiciary
Constitution Subcommittee
To hold hearings on S.J. Res. 48, proposing an amendment to the U.S. Constitution relative to contributions and expenditures intended to affect Congressional and Presidential elections.
SD-226

1:00 p.m.
Appropriations
Agriculture and Related Agencies Subcommittee
To hold hearings on proposing budget estimates for fiscal year 1991 for the Department of Agriculture.
SD-138

Foreign Relations
East Asian and Pacific Affairs Subcommittee
To hold hearings on prospects for peace in Cambodia.
SD-419

2:00 p.m.
Appropriations
Labor, Health and Human Services, Education Subcommittee
To hold hearings on proposing budget estimates for fiscal year 1991 for the Physician Payment Review Commission, the Corporation for Public Broadcasting, the National Commission on Libraries, the U.S. Institute of Peace, the National Commission on AIDS, the Prospective Payment Assessment Commission, the National Commission to Prevent Infant Mortality, and the Soldiers' and Airmens' Home.
SD-192

Select on Intelligence
To hold closed hearings on intelligence matters.
SH-219

3:30 p.m.
Agriculture, Nutrition, and Forestry
To hold hearings on the nomination of La Verne G. Ausman, of Wisconsin, to be Administrator of the Farmers Home Administration, Department of Agriculture.
SR-332

Foreign Relations
To hold hearings on the nomination of Robert W. Farrand, of Virginia, to be Ambassador to Papua New Guinea, and to serve concurrently as Ambassador to Solomon Islands, and to the Republic of Vanuatu.
SD-419

MARCH 1

9:00 a.m.
Appropriations
Defense Subcommittee
To hold closed hearings on proposed budget estimates for fiscal year 1991 for defense programs, focusing on the unified commands.
SD-192

Environment and Public Works
Water Resources, Transportation, and Infrastructure Subcommittee
To hold hearings on the Corps of Engineers water projects.
SD-406

Labor and Human Resources
To resume hearings on S. 2104, to revise the Civil Rights Act of 1964 (P.L. 88-352) to restore and strengthen civil rights laws that ban discrimination in employment.
SD-430

9:30 a.m.
Agriculture, Nutrition, and Forestry
Conservation and Forestry Subcommittee
To hold hearings on proposed legislation to strengthen and improve U.S. agricultural programs, focusing on forestry issues.
SR-332

Commerce, Science, and Transportation
Surface Transportation Subcommittee
To hold hearings on S. 1751 and S. 1904, bills to safeguard the integrity of food shipments.
SR-253

Governmental Affairs
Oversight of Government Management Subcommittee
To hold hearings to examine the federal role in promoting and using special alternative incarceration, focusing on boot camps.
SD-342

Rules and Administration
To resume hearings on S. 1655, S. 1727, and other related measures on campaign finance reform.
SR-301

10:00 a.m.
Appropriations
Foreign Operations Subcommittee
To hold hearings on proposing budget estimates for fiscal year 1991 for foreign assistance, focusing on refugee programs.
SD-124

Appropriations
Transportation Subcommittee
To hold hearings to review the proposed budget for fiscal year 1991 for the Department of Transportation.
SD-138

Armed Services
To continue hearings on S. 2171, to authorize appropriations for fiscal year 1991 for military functions of the Department of Defense and to prescribe military personnel levels for fiscal year 1991.
SD-192

Banking, Housing, and Urban Affairs
To hold hearings on proposals authorizing funds for the Defense Production Act of 1950, including S. 1379, Defense Production Act Amendments of 1989.
SD-538

Energy and Natural Resources
Business meeting, to consider pending calendar business.
SD-366

Judiciary
To hold hearings on the nomination of Robert W. Sweet, Jr., of Virginia, to be Administrator of the Office of Juvenile Justice and Delinquency Prevention, Department of Justice.
SD-226

Joint Economic
To hold hearings on proposals to improve Federal economic statistics.
SD-106

1:30 p.m.
Banking, Housing, and Urban Affairs
Consumer and Regulatory Affairs Subcommittee
To hold hearings to review the Expedited Funds Availability Act of 1988 (P.L. 100-86).
SD-538

2:00 p.m.
Agriculture, Nutrition, and Forestry
Agricultural Production and Stabilization of Prices Subcommittee
To hold hearings on proposed legislation to strengthen and improve U.S. agricultural programs, focusing on the cotton industry.
SR-332

Appropriations
Treasury, Postal Service, General Government Subcommittee
To hold hearings on proposed budget estimates for fiscal year 1991 for the Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms, and the Federal Law Enforcement Training Center, both of the Department of the Treasury.
SD-116

Foreign Relations
European Affairs Subcommittee
To hold hearings to examine economic transformation in Eastern Europe.
SD-419

Labor and Human Resources
Children, Family, Drugs, and Alcoholism Subcommittee
To hold hearings on proposed legislation authorizing funds for the Headstart educational program.
SD-430

Select on Intelligence
To hold closed hearings on intelligence matters.
SH-219

2:30 p.m.
Judiciary
Courts and Administrative Practice Subcommittee
Business meeting, to mark-up S. 590, to prohibit injunctive relief or an award of damages against a judicial officer for action taken in a judicial capacity, S. 591 and S. 592, to revise the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure with respect to the examination of prospective jurors, and S. 982, to restore legal rights of individuals who were exposed to radiation in connection with the U.S. Atomic Weapons Testing Program.
SD-226

MARCH 2

9:30 a.m.
Banking, Housing, and Urban Affairs
To hold hearings on the issues surrounding the collapse of Drexel Burnham Lambert, Inc.
SD-538

Commerce, Science, and Transportation
Aviation Subcommittee
To hold hearings on handicapped access issues.
SR-253

Energy and Natural Resources
To hold oversight hearings on the implementation of the Department of Energy's civilian nuclear waste program.
SD-366

10:00 a.m.
Agriculture, Nutrition, and Forestry
Agricultural Production and Stabilization of Prices Subcommittee
To hold hearings on proposed legislation to strengthen and improve U.S. agricultural programs, focusing on the wool and honey industries.
SR-332

Appropriations
VA, HUD, and Independent Agencies Subcommittee
To hold hearings on proposed budget estimates for fiscal year 1991 for the Consumer Product Safety Commission, the Consumer Information Center, and the Office of Consumer Affairs.
S-126, Capitol

Labor and Human Resources
Education, Arts, and Humanities Subcommittee
To resume hearings on S. 1675 and S. 1676, bills to provide financial assistance to strengthen the recruitment and training of teachers in the United States and to provide a range of incentives for teachers to continue in the profession.
SD-430

1:00 p.m.
Appropriations
Agriculture and Related Agencies Subcommittee
To hold hearings on proposed budget estimates for fiscal year 1991 for the Department of Agriculture, focusing on Agricultural Research Service, Cooperative State Research Service, and Extension Service.
SD-138

MARCH 5

9:30 a.m.
Agriculture, Nutrition, and Forestry
Agricultural Production and Stabilization of Prices Subcommittee
To hold hearings on proposed legislation to strengthen and improve U.S. agricultural programs, focusing on the rice industry.
SR-332

Rules and Administration
To resume hearings on S. 1655, S. 1727, and other related measures on campaign finance reform.
SR-301

10:00 a.m.
Finance
International Trade Subcommittee
To resume hearings to assess progress on the United States-Japan Structural Impediments Initiative (SII).
SD-215

2:00 p.m.
Agriculture, Nutrition, and Forestry
Agricultural Credit Subcommittee
To resume hearings on proposed legislation to strengthen and improve U.S. agricultural programs, focusing on agricultural credit.
SR-332

MARCH 6

9:00 a.m.
Appropriations
Defense Subcommittee
To hold closed hearings on proposed budget estimates for fiscal year 1991 for defense programs, focusing on the unified commands.
SD-192

Veterans' Affairs
To hold joint hearings with the House Committee on Veterans' Affairs to review legislative recommendations of the Veterans of Foreign Wars.
SH-216

9:30 a.m.
Appropriations
Commerce, Justice, State, and Judiciary Subcommittee
To hold hearings on proposed budget estimates for fiscal year 1991 for the Arms Control and Disarmament Agency, and the Securities Exchange Commission.
S-146, Capitol

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES—Tuesday, February 27, 1990

The House met at 12 noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James David Ford, D.D., offered the following prayer:

We are grateful, O God, for all Your good gifts that brighten each day and give direction and purpose and fulfillment to life.

For the gifts of reconciliation and understanding, we give You thanks. For the gifts of family and friends and colleagues, we offer our praise. For the gifts of faith, hope, and love, we honor Your name.

At this special time in the life of many nations our hearts are filled with joy that peoples who have known fear or humiliation of the spirit are experiencing the liberties and freedoms that are Your promise to all Your creation.

We are grateful, O loving God, that these freedoms are growing, that families are being reunited, that respect between peoples can flourish, that believers can pray and worship openly as their hearts may lead.

May Your good blessings, O God, continue to be with Your people, and may we, in response to Your abiding love, ever seek to do justice, love mercy, and walk humbly with You. Amen.

THE JOURNAL

The SPEAKER. The Chair has examined the Journal of the last day's proceedings and announces to the House his approval thereof.

Pursuant to clause 1, rule I, the Journal stands approved.

RESIGNATION AS MEMBER OF THE COMMITTEE ON EDUCATION AND LABOR

The Speaker laid before the House the following resignation as a member of the Committee on Education and Labor:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, DC, February 27, 1990.

Hon. THOMAS S. FOLEY,
Chairman, Democratic Steering and Policy Committee, Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: Pursuant to the rules of the House governing Democratic and Republican ratios on committees of the House, I respectfully submit my resignation to the House Committee on Education and Labor.

Thank you for the opportunity to have served in a temporary capacity on that very important committee. I especially am happy to have served under the leadership of retiring Chairman Augustus F. Hawkins and am proud that one of my newest colleagues will have the opportunity to do the same for the remainder of the 101st Congress.

Your attention to this matter is greatly appreciated.

Sincerely,

KWEISI MFUME,
Member of Congress.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the resignation is accepted.

There was no objection.

REMARKS OF HON. BRUCE F. VENTO
WASHINGTON: MAN AND CAPITAL

Thank you very much, Regional Director Stanton. I am very pleased to be here today at the Washington Monument, with my colleagues Representatives Lagomarsino and Payne, with Directors Ridenour and Hartzog, with the Washington Monument Society, and, especially, with the men and women of the National Park Service charged with the preservation and interpretation of the Washington Monument and of so many other key sites in our nation's history.

In this city of monuments that stand as silent sentinels reminding us of our past, events such as this morning help us remember the ideals that these monuments symbolize. These memorials reflect our dedication to democracy. Today, in our actions, we live that dedication. For it is George Washington's dedication to freedom and democracy that we so respect, and it is his spirit we recognize today.

Two hundred years ago, the city of Washington, D.C. we know today as the nation's capital was fields, forest and swamp. The United States of America was a very young nation—only nine years before the British had surrendered at Yorktown, only seven years before the treaty of Paris ended the American Revolution, only the year before the Constitution had become the law of the land and while the Congress decided in 1790 to move the Capital to this area, it did not relocate from Philadelphia for another ten years.

Here, on the banks of the Potomac River, our fragile young nation decided to build a capital city where no city stood. Instead of moving to already established areas, it was decided to build a capital and a city. The ports of Georgetown and Alexandria were nearby, but fields and trees stood where we stand today. The Capital we see today was based on the vision of a new capital, for a new nation. It was the first time a national capital was established by law and designed from scratch. At the time, it was even perhaps presumptuous of us to build such a city. Washington was to be the seat of government, a national city.

The Capital that evolved here reflects a vision of our first President, George Washington. He wanted it at this location, near his beloved Mount Vernon. And he wanted a new city for a new nation and a capital: "Magnificent to grace a great nation."

Never mind that we were a poor struggling nation at the time; Washington firmly believed that we would grow into the expansiveness of the Capital City the greatness he envisioned.

George Washington born down the river on a plantation near the Potomac River. Washington, the surveyor, who had helped explore Virginia, who had fought to claim this land, chose this site on the banks of the Potomac River and enlisted Pierre L'Enfant to design this new national city. After years and years of temporary capitals during the American Revolution—sometimes just a step ahead of hostile British troops—President Washington, longed for a permanent capital. And while various other locations have been proposed during the past 200 years, the Capital has remained here—even after the British burned our Capitol Building and White House. Since its early history, this nation has grown in ways George Washington could never have foreseen. But the Capital remains in Washington, D.C.

In the early days of this republic George Washington was nearly defied. Few figures in our past have been the target of so much mythology. Washington provided us with instant history and, we earnestly wanted to believe, instant respect. This city named after him was designed to do the same—provide a fitting home to a brave if raw nation. For many years, it was a collection of public buildings barely linked by residences. For many years, the unpaved avenues wide enough for parades but excessively broad in those horse and buggy days gave Washington, D.C. the name "city of magnificent intentions". Some of those intentions—George Washington's intentions—were only realized in this century.

A century ago, the Potomac River lapped near where we stand today, and a canal more resembling an open sewer flowed only a block away. While the river was certainly a key part of George Washington's vision, I doubt the canal-sewer was. His vision for the capital—just as his vision for the nation—was expansive and hopeful. And while he was not the demigod some have claimed, he was indeed a great leader with a good vision for both our Capital City and nation. From the vantage of two centuries, that vision has served us well. Today, we can look at the nation's capital, and at this nation and see beyond our problems to the vision Washington left us. We can only thank him and many others who contributed their vision, and their labor to make our nation and our Capital what it has become today some two hundred years later.

Today we see the vision of George Washington, and of the country he founded reflected in the courage and vision of Lech Walesa and Vaclav Havel and all the people who have joined them in their fight for freedom. Washington's spirit helped inspire their quest for freedom and democracy—a quest that continues and must continue. So as we stand here at the Washington Monument, let us remember the man who inspired it but even more George Washington's vision and the power of the democratic spirit in our lives today. The memorials remind us of the democratic spirit but we must be the ones to live that democratic spirit. Thank you.

REMARKS OF CONGRESSMAN L.F. PAYNE, JR., AT THE WASHINGTON MONUMENT ON GEORGE WASHINGTON'S BIRTHDAY, FEBRUARY 22, 1990

(To Honor the Father of our Country) Friends, it's privilege for me to be here today to help honor the father of our country, a great revolutionary hero, and the man Benjamin Franklin said was "one of the greatest captains of the age." George Washington was the first and certainly one of the greatest presidents of our country. Since the days when the beloved General Washington led his war-weary Continentals down from New York to attack British forces and soundly defeat them at Yorktown, Virginia—a grateful nation has been honoring this noble American, who is even bigger than his legend.

(A Virginian Born) How fitting it is that we meet this morning at the Washington Monument in the city of Washington, D.C. on the day George Washington was born in 1732. He is every American's all-American. We from Virginia feel particularly proud of our countryman who was born on a farm in the northern neck of Virginia. As a youth, George Washington was good at math and became a surveyor. In that capacity he crisscrossed the state surveying vast tracts of land, including parts of Alexandria we now call Olde Town.

(I Have Heard the Bullets Whistle) From early on, George Washington suffered and overcame hardship and defeat. His father died when he was a boy. He suffered from malaria, small pox, dysentery and pleurisy—all killers in his day, and all before he was 30 years old. At 23 he was a full Colonel in the Virginia militia. He lost battles and nearly lost his life. Twice his horse was shot out from under him and on one occasion four shots actually pierced his jacket. He was a brave man who believed in fate, and a greater hand guiding his destiny. "I have heard the bullets whistle," he said, "and believe me, there is something charming in the sound."

(Unanimously Elected President) He was named Commander in Chief of the Revolutionary Armies at age 41. He truly cared about his men and they stuck by him during the hardest times. He was an exceptional administrator and skilled businessman. He had the patience and gifts to organize and inspire a rag-tag American army which he led to victory over better trained and so-called superior forces. The office of President of the United States was created with George Washington in mind. He was unanimously elected to two terms as President, and left this nation a legacy that we still enjoy.

(His Legacy to Us Today) As president, George Washington set himself above factions and parties. He saw the need and drew people's confidence to a strong federal government and cooperating yet separate roles for Congress and the Executive branch. He put this young nation on sound financial footing by retiring the national debt. He set up a central national bank and established a permanent national defense. He left office with a thriving national economy and the people's high respect for the Constitution with its new Bill of Rights.

(A Strong Foundation) "Many things which appear of little importance at the beginning," said President Washington, "may have great and durable consequences having been established at the commencement of a new government." He laid a strong foundation for us all and set the high example of the selfless public servant. "Let the reins of government be braced and held with a steady hand," he insisted, "and every violation of the Constitution be reprehended."

(The Cornerstone of the Capitol) After Congress selected the banks of the Potomac to become the new seat of national government, George Washington selected the site. He oversaw plans for the construction of this city and its government buildings. In September, 1773, he laid the cornerstone of the Capitol building that would seat its first Congress in 1880, a few weeks after George Washington died at age 67, at his country home in nearby Mount Vernon. But this town had already been named in his honor—while he was still alive. And inside many of us today George Washington is yet alive—as his example continues to inspire us.

(The World Mourned) In his will, George Washington left his estate to his wife Martha; his crabtree walking stick, given to him by Ben Franklin, to his brother Charles; and the steel pistols taken from the British during the Revolution, to his old friend Lafayette. He was mourned and eulogized around the world. "Never have I beheld so superb a man," said Lafayette. "He gave to the Western world independence and freedom," said John Marshall. "A life without stain, a fame without flaw," wrote William Thackery.

Please allow me now to call on the words of fellow Virginian, Henry "Light-Horse Harry" Lee who in 1799 said of George Washington, "To the memory of the Man, first in war, first in peace and first in the hearts of his countrymen." Thank you.

REMARKS OF HON. ROBERT J. LAGOMARSINO

Honored guests, ladies and gentlemen, boys and girls, as we were coming over here, I was struck by the thought that the battle for freedom and democracy—two words we often associate with George Washington—never really ends.

Two centuries ago, we were a young Nation, struggling to survive and to put into practice those principles of freedom and democracy enshrined in the Constitution and the Declaration of Independence, few people in Europe thought we would succeed.

Succeed we did, of course—though not without considerable sacrifice and the loss of many lives—that other great American President, Abraham Lincoln, whose memory is enshrined at the far end of the Reflecting Pool struggled years later to hold together the Nation General Washington had helped create. Two presidents, 2 different centuries, but engaged in the same struggle for freedom and democracy.

In this century, we have been called upon more than once to defend those ideals, and I have little doubt we will be called to do so again in the next.

What sparked my chain of thought were the remarks of another President—not an American but a European—delivered just 24 hours ago in the U.S. Capitol, within sight of where we are standing.

In his speech to a joint session of the United States Congress, Vaclav Havel, playwright and newly installed President of Czechoslovakia, spoke eloquently of how the example of our own Nation had inspired his countrymen in their struggle for freedom and democracy.

A struggle they did not take lightly * * *. Only last October he was imprisoned once again for such thoughts. His words echoed those of Lech Walesa, another prisoner of conscience, whose address to Congress last fall stirred many hearts.

These tributes to our first President remind us of the need for constant vigilance to preserve the freedom and democracy which he won for us, even the British, whose generals he defeated in the Revolutionary War, admired the man, and today, ships of all nations, when they pass by his home above the Potomac fire a salute to his memory.

So the sounds of tribute, and of battle, echo down through the ages. From Yorktown to Gettysburg, from Verdun to Prague, and they all seem to converge, somehow on this spot * * * here, by this monument to the Father of our Nation and the man who showed the way to so many others * * * George Washington: soldier, patriot, President, may his memory always stand as a monument to freedom throughout the world.

AUTHORIZING TAKING OF OFFICIAL PICTURES OF THE HOUSE FOR "WE THE PEOPLE" AND "THE CAPITOL"

CONFERENCE REPORT ON H.R. 2742, LIBRARY SERVICES AND CONSTRUCTION ACT AMENDMENTS OF 1990

Mr. WILLIAMS submitted the following conference report and statement on the bill (H.R. 2742) to extend and amend the Library Services and Construction Act, and for other purposes:

CONFERENCE REPORT (H. REPT. 101-407)

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 2742) to extend and amend the Library Services and Construction Act, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate and agree to the same with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment insert the following:

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE; REFERENCES.

(a) SHORT TITLE.—This Act may be cited as the "Library Services and Construction Act Amendments of 1990".

(b) REFERENCES.—References in this Act to "the Act" are references to the Library Services and Construction Act (20 U.S.C. 351 et seq.).

SEC. 2. DEFINITIONS.

Section 3 of the Act is amended—

(1) in paragraph (2)—

(A) by striking "and initial equipment" and inserting "and for the purchase, lease, and installation of equipment";

(B) by striking "to conserve energy" and inserting "to ensure safe working environments and to conserve energy"; and

(C) by striking "includes machinery" and inserting "includes information and building technologies, video and telecommunications equipment, machinery"; and

(2) by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraphs:

"(17) The term 'handicapped individual' means an individual who is physically or mentally impaired, visually impaired, or hearing impaired.

"(18) The term 'network' means any local, statewide, regional, interstate, or international cooperative association of library entities which provide for the systematic and effective coordination of the resources of school, public, academic, and special libraries and information centers for improved supplementary services for the clientele served by each type of library entity.".

SEC. 3. AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.

(a) AMENDMENT.—Section 4(a) of the Act is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 4. (a) There are authorized to be appropriated—

"(1) for the purpose of making grants as provided in title I, $100,000,000 for fiscal year 1990 and such sums as may be necessary for each of the 4 succeeding fiscal years;

"(2) for the purpose of making grants as provided in title II, $55,000,000 for fiscal year 1990 and such sums as may be necessary for each of the 4 succeeding fiscal years;

"(3) for the purpose of making grants as provided in title III, $35,000,000 for fiscal year 1990 and such sums as may be necessary for each of the 4 succeeding fiscal years;

"(5) for the purpose of making grants as provided in title VI, $10,000,000 for fiscal year 1990 and such sums as may be necessary for each of the 4 succeeding fiscal years;

"(6) for the purpose of activities as provided in title VII, $500,000 for fiscal year 1990 and such sums as may be necessary for each of the 4 succeeding fiscal years; and

"(7) for the purpose of making grants as provided in title VIII, $6,000,000 for fiscal year 1990 and such sums as may be necessary for each of the 4 succeeding fiscal years, except that no amounts are authorized to be appropriated under this paragraph for any fiscal year unless the total amount appropriated pursuant to paragraphs (1), (2), and (3) for such fiscal year equals or exceeds sum of the total amount appropriated pursuant to such paragraphs for the preceding fiscal year, plus 4 percent of such total amount.

There shall be available for the purpose of making grants under title IV for each of the fiscal years 1990, 1991, 1992, 1993, and 1994, 1.5 percent of the amount appropriated pursuant to each of paragraphs (1), (2), and (3) for each such fiscal year. There shall be available for the purpose of making grants under section 5(d) for such fiscal years 0.5 percent of the amount appropriated pursuant to each of such paragraphs for each such fiscal year.".

(b) CARRYOVER OF FUNDS.—Section 4(b) of the Act is amended by striking "and for the next succeeding fiscal year" and inserting "and is authorized to remain available until expended".

SEC. 4. ALLOCATIONS.

(a) AMENDMENT.—Section 5(c) of the Act is amended to read as follows:

"(c)(1) From one-half of the sums available pursuant to the second sentence of section 4(a) for any fiscal year, the Secretary shall allot an equal amount to each Indian tribe that submits an approved application under section 403.

"(2) From the remaining one-half of the sums available pursuant to such second sentence, the Secretary shall make allocations to Indian tribes that (A) are receiving an allocation under paragraph (1) of this subsection for such fiscal year; and (B) have submitted approved applications under section 404.

"(3) In making allocations under paragraph (2)—

"(A) no funds shall be allocated to an Indian tribe unless such funds will be administered by a librarian; and

"(B) the Secretary shall take into account the needs of Indian tribes for such allocations to carry out the activities described in section 402(b).

"(4) In making allocations under this subsection, the Secretary shall take such actions as may be necessary to prevent an allocation from being received to serve the same population by any 2 or more of the following entities (as defined in or established pursuant to the Alaskan Native Claims Settlement Act): an Alaskan native village, a regional corporation, or a village corporation.".

(b) CONFORMING AMENDMENT.—Section 6(g)(2) of the Act is amended by inserting after "section 5(c)(2)" the following: "in the same fiscal year in which it has received an allocation under section 5(c)(1)".

SEC. 5. ANTIDISCRIMINATION PROVISION.

Section 6(b) of the Act is amended by—

(1) striking "and" at the end of paragraph (3);

(2) redesignating paragraph (4) as paragraph (5); and

(3) inserting the following new paragraph (4) after paragraph (3):

"(4) provide assurances that libraries within the State that receive funds under this Act shall not discriminate on the basis of race, religion, age, gender, national origin, or handicapping condition in providing space for public meetings; and".

SEC. 6. RESOURCE SHARING COORDINATION.

Section 6 of the Act is amended—

(1) in subsection (d)(1), by striking "and construction" and inserting ", construction, and interlibrary cooperation and resource sharing"; and

(2) by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(h) The Secretary shall coordinate programs under titles V and VI of this Act with the programs assisted by titles I, II, and III of this Act, and shall provide to the head of the State library administrative agency the opportunity to comment on any application for a grant under title V or VI of this Act prior to the awarding of the grant, in order to assure that such grants from the Secretary are for purposes consistent with the long-range program required under subsection (d) of this section.".

SEC. 7. MAINTENANCE OF EFFORT.

(a) GENERAL REQUIREMENT.—Section 7(a) of the Act is amended by striking paragraphs (1) and (2) and inserting the following:

"(1) there will be available from State and local sources for expenditure under the programs, during the fiscal year for which the allotment is made, an amount that equals or exceeds the amount required to provide the State percentage as required by subsection (b); and

"(2)(A) there will be available for expenditure for State aid to public libraries and library systems, during the fiscal year for which the allotment is made, an aggregate amount equal to 90 percent of the amount actually expended for such purposes in the second preceding fiscal year; and

"(B) there will be available for expenditure, during the fiscal year for which the allotment is made, for the State library administrative agency, or for the part thereof charged by State law with the extension and development of public library services throughout the State, an aggregate amount equal to 90 percent of the amount actually expended for such purpose in the second preceding fiscal year.

The Secretary may, in accordance with regulations, waive the requirements of paragraph (2) of this subsection, if the Secretary determines that the application of such paragraph would be unjust or unreasonable in the light of exceptional extenuating circumstances.".

(b) INSTITUTIONAL LIBRARY SERVICES.—The last sentence of section 103 is amended by inserting before the period at the end thereof the following: "and to the extent that the Secretary determines that the populations served by such expenditures has declined".

SEC. 8. EDUCATION RESEARCH LIBRARY.

(a) AMENDMENT.—The Library Services and Construction Act is further amended by inserting after section 8 the following new section:

"EDUCATION RESEARCH LIBRARY

"SEC. 9. None of the activities or functions of the Department of Education Research Library which are utilized, directly or indirectly, by the Secretary in carrying out this Act and which were not performed by contractors as of July 26, 1989, shall be contracted out or otherwise transferred from the Federal Government before September 30, 1991, unless such transfer is expressly authorized by statute, or unless the value of all work performed under the contract and related contracts in each fiscal year does not exceed $50,000.".

(b) STUDY REQUIRED.—The Comptroller General shall conduct a study of the Department of Education Research Library. The Comptroller General shall prepare and submit a report on the study required by this section by no later than January 30, 1991, together with such recommendations and any statutory changes required to carry out such recommendations, as the Comptroller deems necessary. Such study shall include—

(1) an assessment of the historic and scholastic value and significance of the library's collection to educators, education researchers, historians, and others;

(2) a review of the feasibility and merits of expanding public access to and use of the library's collections and alternative means by which such access could be promoted; and

(3) an evaluation of the quality and effectiveness of services provided by the library to Department personnel and recommendations for improving such services.

SEC. 9. INTERGENERATIONAL LIBRARY SERVICES.

Section 101 of the Act is amended—

(1) by redesignating paragraphs (5) and (6) as paragraphs (9) and (10), respectively; and

(2) by inserting after paragraph (4) the following new paragraph:

"(5) for assisting libraries in developing intergenerational library programs that will match older adult volunteers with libraries interested in developing after school literacy and reading skills programs for unsupervised school children during afterschool hours;".

SEC. 10. CHILDCARE LIBRARY OUTREACH.

Section 101 of the Act is further amended by inserting after paragraph (5) the following new paragraph:

"(6) for assisting libraries in providing mobile library services and programs to child-care providers or child-care centers which are licensed or certified by the State, or otherwise meet the requirements of State law;".

SEC. 11. LIBRARY LITERACY CENTERS.

Section 101 of the Act is further amended by inserting after paragraph (6) the following new paragraph:

"(7) to establish and support model library literacy centers, coordinated by the State library administrative agency with other interested State agencies and nonprofit organizations to reduce the number of functionally illiterate individuals and to help them reach full employment;".

SEC. 12. DRUG ABUSE PREVENTION.

Section 101 of the Act is further amended by inserting after paragraph (7) the following new paragraph:

"(8) for assisting libraries in providing and displaying educational materials, and conducting community-wide programs, aimed at preventing and eliminating drug abuse, in cooperation with local education agencies or other agencies or organizations, if appropriate;".

SEC. 13. USE OF TITLE I FUNDS.

Section 102(a) of the Act is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new sentence: "In carrying out its program to accomplish the purposes of this title, a State may make subgrants to library systems or networks which include libraries other than public libraries, if the purpose of the subgrant is to improve services for public library patrons.".

SEC. 14. RATABLE REDUCTIONS OF MAJOR URBAN RESOURCE LIBRARIES.

Section 102(c) of the Act is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"(3) No State shall, in carrying out the provisions of paragraph (2) of this subsection, reduce the amount paid to any major urban resource library below the amount that such library received in the fiscal year preceding the fiscal year for which the determination is made under such paragraph (2), except that such amount may be ratably reduced to the extent that (A) the total Federal allocations to the State under section 5 for purposes of this title for the applicable fiscal year are reduced, or (B) the 1990 Census shows the population of the city served by such library has decreased.".

SEC. 15. STATE ANNUAL PROGRAM.

Section 103 of the Act is amended—

(1) in paragraph (3), by striking "and institutionalized individuals";

(2) in paragraph (4), by striking everything following "elderly" the first place it appears and inserting a semicolon; and

(3) by striking paragraph (5) and inserting the following:

"(5) describe the uses of funds to make library services and programs more accessible to handicapped individuals.".

SEC. 16. TECHNOLOGY ENHANCEMENT.

(a) DEFINITION.—Section 3 of the Act is further amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"(19) The term 'technology enhancement' means the acquisition, installation, maintenance, or replacement, of substantial technological equipment (including library bibliographic automation equipment) necessary to provide access to information in electronic and other formats made possible by new information and communications technologies.".

(b) USE OF TITLE I FUNDS.—Section 101 of the Act is further amended—

(1) by striking "and" at the end of paragraph (9) (as redesignated by section 7(1));

(2) by striking the period at the end of paragraph (10) (as redesignated by section 7(1)) and inserting "; and"; and

(3) by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"(11) for assisting public libraries in making effective use of technology to improve library and information services.".

(c) USE OF TITLE II FUNDS.—Title II of the Act is amended—

(1) by inserting "AND TECHNOLOGY ENHANCEMENT" after "CONSTRUCTION" in the heading of such title;

(2) by inserting "AND LIBRARY AND INFORMATION TECHNOLOGY ENHANCEMENT" after "CONSTRUCTION" in the head of section 201;

(3) by inserting "and technology enhancement" after "construction" each place it appears in sections 201, 202(a), 202(b), 203(1), 203(2), and 203(3);

(4) by striking "section 3(2)" in section 202(a) and inserting "sections 3(2) and 3(19), respectively"; and

(5) by inserting "AND TECHNOLOGY ENHANCEMENT" after "CONSTRUCTION" in the heading of section 203.

(d) USE OF TITLE III FUNDS.—Section 302(a) of the Act is amended—

(1) by striking "and" at the end of clause (1); and

(2) by inserting before the period at the end of clause (2) the following: "; and (3) developing the technological capacity of libraries for interlibrary cooperation and resource sharing".

SEC. 17. PRESERVATION OBJECTIVES IN CONSTRUCTION.

Section 203 of the Act is amended—

(1) by striking the period at the end of paragraph (4) and inserting "; and"; and

(2) by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"(5) follow policies and procedures in the construction of public libraries that will promote the preservation of library and information resources to be utilized in the facilities.".

SEC. 18. RESOURCE SHARING.

(a) ATTAINMENT OF COMPLIANCE WITH RESOURCE SHARING PLANS.—Sections 301 and 304(a) of the Act are each amended by striking "eventual" and inserting "attaining".

(b) SCHOOL LIBRARY RESOURCES.—Section 304 of the Act is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(e) Public and school libraries which cooperate to make school library resources available to the public during periods when school is not in session may be reimbursed for such expenses.".

SEC. 19. PRESERVATION COOPERATION.

Title III of the Act is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new section:

"PRESERVATION PROGRAMS

"SEC. 305. (a) The long-range program and annual program of each State under this title may—

"(1) include a statewide preservation cooperation plan that complies with this section; and

"(2) identify the preservation objectives to be achieved during the period covered by the long-range plans required by section 6.

"(b) A statewide preservation cooperation plan complies with this section if—

"(1) such plan specifies the methods by which the State library administrative agency will work with libraries, archives, historical societies, scholarly organizations, and other agencies, within or outside the State, in planning, education and training, coordinating, outreach and public information, and service programs to ensure that endangered library and information resources are preserved systematically; and

"(2) such preservation plan is developed in consultation with such parties and agencies as the State archives, historical societies, libraries, scholarly organizations, and other interested parties.

"(c) A State which has a statewide preservation cooperation plan that complies with this section may use funds under this title to carry out such plan.

"(d) The State library administrative agency may contract part or all of the preservation program under this section to other agencies or institutions.".

SEC. 20. MAXIMUM GRANTS UNDER TITLE V.

Section 501(c) of the Act is amended by striking "$15,000." and inserting "$35,000, except that—

"(1) not more than 30 percent of the funds available for grants under this title in any fiscal year may be used to make grants in amounts between $35,000 and $125,000; and

"(2) no recipient may receive more than one grant under this title for any fiscal year.".

SEC. 21. LIBRARY LITERACY GRANTS.

Section 601(e) of the Act is amended by striking "$25,000" and inserting "$35,000".

SEC. 22. EVALUATION AND ASSESSMENT.

(a) AMENDMENT.—The Act is further amended by adding at the end thereof the following new title:

"TITLE VII—EVALUATION AND ASSESSMENT

"PROGRAM AUTHORITY

"SEC. 701. The Secretary is authorized to carry out a program for the purpose of evaluation and assessment (directly or by grants or contracts) of programs authorized under this Act.".

(b) CONFORMING AMENDMENT.—Section 5(a) of the Act is amended by striking out paragraph (5).

SEC. 23. FAMILY LEARNING CENTER PROGRAMS.

(a) AMENDMENT.—The Library Services and Construction Act is amended by adding at the end the following:

"TITLE VIII—LIBRARY LEARNING CENTER PROGRAMS

"PART A—FAMILY LEARNING CENTERS

"STATEMENT OF PURPOSE

"SEC. 801. It is the purpose of this part to expand and improve opportunities for lifetime learning and the involvement of the Nation's families as partners in their children's education by providing comprehensive, family-oriented library services through Family Learning Centers.

"GRANTS FOR FAMILY LEARNING CENTERS

"SEC. 802. The Secretary shall carry out a program of making grants from sums appropriated pursuant to paragraph (7) of section 4(a) to local public libraries for the purposes of supporting family learning centers.

"USE OF FUNDS

"SEC. 803. (a) Funds made available to a grantee under this part shall be used to initiate, expand, or improve public library services to families.

"(b) Not less than 25 percent of the funds made available under this part shall be used for the acquisition of resources and materials in print and electronic formats—

"(1) which are intended for use by and with adults, including materials in such areas as child care, child development, nutrition, parenting skills, and job and career information; and

"(2) which are intended for use by and with children and adolescents.

"(c) Not less than 10 percent of the funds made available to a grantee under this part shall be used for—

"(1) the acquisition or leasing of computer hardware for use by library patrons, including services necessary for the operation, installation, and maintenance of such equipment; and

"(2) the acquisition of computer software and complementary explanatory material for use by library patrons.

"APPLICATION

"SEC. 804. (a) Any local public library which wishes to receive a grant under this part shall submit an application to the Secretary at such time, in such form, and containing such information as the Secretary determines is necessary to evaluate the quality of the applicant's proposal and the applicant's ability to carry it out.

"(b) Each such application shall—

"(1) describe the manner in which the funds will be used to initiate, expand, or improve library services to families;

"(2) provide assurances that the library will be open on weekday evenings, Saturdays, and some Sundays and legal public holidays to enable families in which both parents work outside the home to utilize the library's services;

"(3) demonstrate that the library has or will have sufficient qualified staff with specialized training in providing library services to children, adolescents, and adults;

"(4) provide for the establishment of an advisory committee consisting of parents, teachers, local school administrators, librarians, library administrators, library trustees, local elected officials, and business leaders, at least one-third of whom are parents who regularly use the services of the library;

"(5) provide for the establishment of a family library loan program through which families may borrow sets of books for extended periods, and other innovative programs and policies designed to encourage greater use of the library by families;

"(6) provide for a job and career information program to provide information and assistance to parents and others who are unemployed or seeking a new job;

"(7) describe, if appropriate, any special services and outreach activities which will be offered to meet the needs of—

"(A) adolescent parents;

"(B) single-parent families;

"(C) families in which both parents are employed outside the home;

"(D) parents and children with limited English language proficiency; and

"(E) educationally disadvantaged adults and their children;

"(8) describe the methods by which the library will publicize and promote the services of the Center in cooperation with the local media, schools, businesses, social service agencies, and other appropriate entities; and

"(9) provide assurances that the funds provided will be used to supplement and not supplant funds otherwise available for the purposes of this part.

"SELECTION OF FAMILY LEARNING CENTERS

"SEC. 805. (a) The Secretary shall select family learning centers on a competitive basis from among the local public libraries submitting applications under section 804. In making such selection, the Secretary shall give priority to applications which—

"(1) promise to serve a significant number of families on a regular basis; and

"(2) offer innovative approaches to improving library services for families and approaches which show promise for replication and dissemination.

"(b) In making grants under this title, the Secretary shall assure that there is an equitable distribution of grants among the States and between urban and rural communities.

"(c) No grant made under this title for any fiscal year shall exceed $200,000.

"AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS

"SEC. 806. There are authorized to be appropriated $3,000,000 for fiscal year 1990 and such sums as may be necessary for each succeeding fiscal year to carry out the provisions of this part.

"PART B—LIBRARY LITERACY CENTERS

"STATEMENT OF PURPOSE

"SEC. 811. The purposes of this part are to—

"(1) establish model library literacy centers throughout the country to serve as resource centers for the dissemination of literacy materials and equipment to local public libraries in order to help overcome the high incidence of adults with limited literacy skills in the United States;

"(2) help adults with limited literacy skills reach full employment through nonthreatening learning experiences in their local public library or in their own home; and

"(3) offer innovative approaches to improving library literacy services to adults and approaches which show promise for replication and dissemination.

"GRANTS TO STATES FOR LIBRARY LITERACY CENTERS

"SEC. 812. (a) The Secretary shall carry out a program of making grants on a competitive basis to States which have an approved basic State plan under section 6 of this Act and an approved application under section 813 of this Act.

"(b)(1) The total grant amount awarded to each State shall not exceed—

"(A) $350,000 in the first fiscal year in which a State receives a grant under this part; and

"(B) $100,000 in the second and third fiscal years in which a State receives a grant under this part.

"(2) Funds received in the first fiscal year in which a State receives a grant under this part shall remain available until expended. Funds received in the second and third fiscal year in which a State receives a grant under this part shall be available only for the fiscal year for which funds are received.

"(3) Funds received in the second and third fiscal years in which a State receives a grant under this part shall be matched, on a dollar for dollar basis, from non-Federal sources.

"STATE APPLICATION

"SEC. 813. (a) Funds appropriated pursuant to section 818 shall be available for grants to States for the purpose of supporting not more than 1 library literacy center in each State to coordinate the State-wide distribution of library literacy materials and equipment on a loan basis to local public libraries within the State.

"(b) Any State wishing to receive a grant shall, through it's State library administrative agency, in conjunction with the advisory committee established under section 816, submit an application to the Secretary at such time, in such form, and containing such information and assurances as the Secretary may reasonably require. No application may be approved by the Secretary unless it contains assurances that the State will—

"(1) designate the State library administrative agency, or select a local public library through a competitive process, to serve as a library literacy center in accordance with the provisions of this part;

"(2) provide assurances that the library literacy center will—

"(A) select local public libraries to participate in a literacy materials and equipment loan program,

"(B) select at least 25 percent of the local libraries that participate in the literacy materials and equipment loan program from rural areas;

"(C) give priority in the selection of local public libraries to participate in the literacy materials and equipment loan program to public libraries within the State which serve those in greatest need;

"(D) coordinate the distribution of equipment and materials;

"(E) provide training to local public library personnel;

"(3) describe how the results of the grant program will be evaluated and disseminated;

"(4) set forth the potential of the grant program for achieving replicability and for serving as a model program; and

"(5) distribute 100 percent of the amounts received pursuant to this part to the library literacy center as designated or selected under section 817.

"(c) The Secretary shall give priority to applicants whose applications comply with the provisions of this part and describe programs and services to be delivered in States which have—

"(1) the highest concentrations of adults who do not have a secondary education or its equivalent,

"(2)(A) few community or financial resources to establish the program described under this part without federal assistance, or

"(B) low per capita income, or high concentrations of unemployment or underemployment.

"USE OF FUNDS

"SEC. 814. (a) Funds made available under this part shall be used by the library literacy centers to establish coordination centers to make literacy materials and equipment available to local public libraries on a loan basis to initiate, expand, or improve public library literacy services and programs. Such services and programs may include—

"(1) the acquisition of literacy education equipment including, but not limited to, video recorders and television monitors;

"(2) the acquisition of print materials, audio tapes and video tapes designed to train adults with limited literacy skills, including materials and tapes prepared by public television;

"(3) the acquisition of library resource materials for literacy instruction purposes;

"(4) the acquisition of literacy training materials including but not limited to General Education Development (GED) print materials and video tapes; and

"(5) staffing for coordination and training of local library personnel on literacy services.

"(b) Each library literacy center receiving a grant under this part may use no more than 25 percent of such funds for the acquisition of literacy education computers and computer software.

"LOCAL APPLICATION

"SEC. 815. (a) Any local public library desiring to participate in programs and services conducted pursuant to this part shall submit an application to the State or the library literacy center as selected by the State under Section 817 at such time, in such form, and containing such information as the State or the library literacy center determines is necessary to evaluate the quality of the local public library's proposal and the local public library's ability to carry out such proposal.

"(b) Each such application shall—

"(1) describe the manner in which the equipment and materials will be used to initiate, expand, or improve local library literacy services;

"(2) demonstrate that the library has or will have sufficient qualified staff and volunteers with specialized training in providing library literacy services to adults;

"(3) provide for the establishment of—

"(A) a library literacy loan program through which adults with limited literacy skills or individuals helping illiterate adults to learn to read may borrow books, video tapes, and other learning materials,

"(B) other innovative programs and policies designed to encourage greater use of the library by adults with limited literacy skills or individuals helping illiterate adults learn to read;

"(4) provide assurances that coordination will take place with literacy organizations and community-based organizations providing literacy services;

"(5) provide job and career information to adults with limited literacy skills who are unemployed or seeking a new job;

"(6) provide information or referrals to other adult education opportunities in the community;

"(7) describe, if appropriate, any special services and outreach activities which will be offered to meet the needs of adults with limited literacy skills;

"(8) describe the methods by which the library will publicize and promote the services of the library in cooperation with the local media, schools, businesses, social service agencies, and other appropriate entities; and

"(9) provide assurances that the materials, equipment and training provided will be used to supplement and not supplant materials, equipment and training otherwise available for the purposes of this part.

"ADVISORY COMMITTEE

"SEC. 816. Each State receiving a grant under this part shall establish an advisory committee to assist in coordinating the services and programs assisted under this part. Such committee shall consist of, but not be limited to, representatives of—

"(1) the Governor's office;

"(2) the State library administrative agency;

"(3) the State Advisory Counsel on Libraries;

"(4) the State department of education;

"(5) the State employment office; and

"(6) public television.

"(7) adult literacy community organizations.

"SELECTION OF LITERACY LEARNING CENTERS

"SEC. 817. Each State receiving a grant under this part shall designate the State library administrative agency as the library literacy center or shall select a library literacy center on a competitive basis from among the local public libraries submitting applications under section 815. In making such selection, the State shall give priority to applications which—

"(1) demonstrate the greatest ability to carry out the requirements of section 813 and to serve other local libraries; and

"(2) offer innovative approaches to improving library literacy services to adults and approaches which show promise for replication and dissemination.

"AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS

"SEC. 818. There are authorized to be appropriated $3,000,000 for fiscal year 1991 and such sums as may be necessary for each fiscal year thereafter to carry out the provisions of this part.".

(b) CONFORMING AMENDMENTS.—Section 3 of the Act is amended by adding at the end thereof the following:

"(20) The term 'educationally disadvantaged adult' has the meaning given that term in section 312(3)(A) of the Adult Education Act of 1988 (20 U.S.C. 2101a).

"(21) The term 'adult with limited literacy skills' means an adult whose minimal skills in reading, writing, or computation or in performing basic arithmetical computations preclude the individual from functioning in society without assistance from others.".

SEC. 24. TECHNICAL AMENDMENT.

Title I of the Act is amended—

(1) by inserting "PUBLIC" before "LIBRARY" in the heading of such title; and

(2) by inserting "PUBLIC" before "LIBRARY" in the heading of section 101.

SEC. 25. EFFECTIVE DATE.

The amendments made by this Act shall take effect on October 1, 1990.

And the Senate agree to the same.

JOINT EXPLANATORY STATEMENT OF THE COMMITTEE OF CONFERENCE

The managers on the part of the House and the Senate at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 2742) to extend and amend the Library Services and Construction Act, and for other purposes, submit the following joint statement to the House and Senate in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon by the managers and recommended in the accompanying conference report:

The Senate amendment struck out all of the House bill after the enacting clause and inserted a substitute text.

The House recedes from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate with an amendment which is a substitute for the House bill and the Senate amendment. The differences between the House bill, the Senate amendment, and the substitute agreed to in conference are noted below, except for clerical corrections, conforming changes made necessary by agreements reached by the conferees, and minor drafting and clarifying changes.

1. The House bill, but not the Senate amendment, broadens the definition of "network" to specifically include networks that permit the participation of "international" entities. The Senate recedes.

2. The House bill, but not the Senate amendment, contains a provision that prohibits the contracting out of the Department of Education's Research Library through September 30, 1990 and requires a General Accounting Office study of the contracting out issue to be completed by January 1, 1991. The Senate recedes.

3. The House bill, but not the Senate amendment, contains a provision that permits libraries to participate in drug abuse prevention programs as an allowable activity under Title I. The Senate recedes.

4. The House bill and the amendment differ with respect to Title V, Foreign Language Materials Acquisition. The Senate amendment maintains the maximum award size at $15,000 and sets aside 30 percent of the funds under this program for Major Urban Resource Libraries (MURLS) with no limit on the size of the grant for awards made from the 30 percent set-aside.

The House recedes with an amendment to raise the grant size from $15,000 to $35,000 and reserve 30 percent of the funds for grants of $125,000. In addition, no library may receive an award under both programs.

5. The House bill, but not the Senate amendment, contains a provision that recognizes that school libraries can be reimbursed with Library Services and Construction Act funds for providing access to the public during periods when school is not in session. The Senate recedes.

6. The House bill, but not the Senate amendment, clarifies the intention of the maintenance of effort reporting requirements. The Senate recedes with a technical amendment.

7. The House bill, but not the Senate amendment, contains a new Title VIII, Family Learning Centers. The Senate recedes with an amendment adding a provision for Library Literacy Centers to this title. This new title VIII may not be funded until titles I, II, and III are funded at the Fiscal year 1989 appropriations levels, plus 4 percent.

8. The Senate amendment, but not the House bill, contains a provisions that requires libraries not to discriminate in providing equal access to library space for public meetings. The House recedes with an amendment to include only libraries that receive Library Services and Construction Act funds.

9. The Senate amendment, but not the House bill, clarifies provisions regarding licensing and certification of child-care centers. The House recedes.

SEEKING APPROPRIATE METHODS OF BRINGING A HALT TO OFFSHORE OIL DRILLING

(Mr. SMITH of Florida asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. SMITH of Florida. Mr. Speaker, just the other day Secretary Lujan of the Department of the Interior made a rather flippant, cavalier statement. I am talking about the moritorium on oil drilling that many of us in this Congresss would like to see made permanent in the gulf and other southern areas in the hemisphere off the shores of the United States. He said that maybe the State of Florida should buy back the oil leases.

Well, he knows very well that is not capable of being done. No. 1, the State of Florida never got the money for selling them in the first place, so then the Feds would pocket 100 million bucks and then the State of Florida and its citizens would pay to get back that land which the Federal Government sold to begin with.

No. 2, it was a cavalier attitude and a cavalier remark, because he knows it is not capable of being done. That is not the way to seriously discuss the environmental problems of this country or to address the concerns that a great many Members of this House have.

On a bipartisan basis, 13 members of the State of Florida delegation have written a letter to the Secretary asking him to consider appropriate methods of finding out how we can stop oil drilling and save the environment, and one of the ways is not by being funny or cute and coming up with a suggestion that frankly nobody believes has a prayer of ever coming to pass.

Mr. Speaker, I say to the Secretary, "Mr. Lujan, we hope you can do better next time in reality."

THE PERIOD OF CONFLICT OVER NICARAGUA IS OVER

(Mr. BONIOR asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute).

Mr. BONIOR. Mr. Speaker, the results of the Nicaraguan elections are a victory for democracy, a victory for the peace process, a victory for all of us who have worked for so many years for a peaceful solution in Nicaragua.

Violeta Chamorro has accomplished at the ballot box in a few short weeks, what the "Contras could not accomplish in a decade, at the cost of millions of United States dollars and thousands of Nicaraguan lives. She is to be congratulated. President Ortega is also to be commended for upholding his commitment to the peace process and for his willingness to abide by free and fair elections.

President Arias was right when he told us that negotiations—not military aid—could bring about peaceful change and democracy.

It is time for us to put the bitter period of conflict over Nicaragua behind us. I hope all the people of Nicaragua will now be able to work together in a spirit of reconciliation and openness for a new era of peace and prosperity.

A VICTORY FOR THE NICARAGUAN PEOPLE

(Mr. BEREUTER asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. BEREUTER. Mr. Speaker, Sunday was a victory for the Nicaraguan people. Extraordinary numbers of people registered, over 90 percent. An extraordinary percentage came out to vote, over 90 percent. The geography of the country was a problem, but yet the election was peacefully conducted and properly conducted. I commend the Sandinista government for the election process, specifically the Supreme Electoral Council headed by Dr. Fiallos. I thought Ortega's remarks were conciliatory and constructive.

Mr. Speaker, I think special credit is owed to former President Jimmy Carter. I was privileged to be a part of the election observer team, and I want to say as well that kudos are in order for the Organization of American States and for the United Nations. It played varied and constructive roles in the pre election period and during the election.

Mr. Speaker, things are on track, it would appear, for reconciliation in Nicaragua. It is important that we lower the rhetoric in this country and in this body on this divisive issue. Some extraordinary difficulties have taken place, but I think it is important now that we give an opportunity for the Nicaraguan people to claim the advantages of the victory that they had on Sunday. They approached their duties as citizens at the ballot box with absolute reverence. It is an extraordinary example that all people in democracies all across the world might do well to emulate.

EARTH DAY 1990 COUNTDOWN

(Mr. FAZIO asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. FAZIO. Mr. Speaker, Earth Day 1970 focused the attention of a generation of Americans on the importance of preserving our environment. However, in the 1980's under the Reagan-Bush administrations, our national commitment to preserving our precious environment languished in indifference.

Earth Day 1990, which is now 54 days away, offers a great opportunity to rekindle our Nation's vigorous commitment to the environment. Clean air and clean water, along with preservation of the wonderful beauty and diversity of our natural environment are among the most important legacies we can leave for future generations.

Every American should be able to breathe clean air. Achieving this goal will require a comprehensive effort with major reductions in emissions from stationary sources as well as automobiles, trucks, and other mobile sources. Cleaner, alternative fuels for vehicles can contribute significantly to reducing air pollution and I urge the Federal Government to take a leadership role in promoting fuels that will help clean up our air.

Finally, we must not forget that the growing demand for energy is the underlying cause of much of our air pollution. We need to redouble our energy conservation efforts. Energy conservation not only promises savings, but also reduces air pollution.

CONGRATULATING MRS. CHAMORRO AND COMPLIMENTING MR. ORTEGA

(Mr. DREIER of California asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. DREIER of California. Mr. Speaker, throughout the past decade, Ronald Reagan said, "Name one totalitarian Communist regime which has ever negotiated itself out of existence." He obviously asked that question rhetorically.

Well, Mr. Speaker, until April 15 of last year, when the roundtable talks took place in Poland and the June 4 elections there, it could not be done. Obviously, in the past several months, we have seen it take place in a number of countries; the most recent, of course, was Nicaragua. Winston Churchill said, "In victory, magnanimity."

It is no secret that on the Democratic side of the aisle and the Republican side of the aisle, most all of us supported the democratic process and the candidacy of Mrs. Chamorro. It is clear to me that Daniel Ortega should get a degree of credit for, first of all, responding to international pressure and holding that election.

Mr. Speaker, Daniel Ortega also should get a great deal of credit for last year's San Ysidro agreement recognizing that the FMLN Communist guerrillas in El Salvador are attempting to destabilize that government, and, yes, I also congratulate Mr. Ortega for his warm sense of congratulations to Mrs. Chamorro that he demonstrated just last evening.

My colleagues, it is very clear that two important things remain at the top for this change to take place. The Ministers of Interior and Defense need to see a change, and it is going to be up to that government to do it. They should have our wholehearted support.

Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. SKELTON], my colleague, and I have introduced a resolution today, which I hope our colleagues will cosponsor, congratulating Mrs. Chamorro and also complimenting Daniel Ortega on the way he has handled this. I urge my colleagues to cosponsor.

FORKED-TONGUE ENVIRONMENTALISTS

(Mr. MILLER of California asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. MILLER of California. Mr. Speaker, the American people know the difference between rhetoric and responsibility. The Bush administration's claim as environmental defender is rejected every day as simple rhetoric as his administration takes the antienvironmental stance on wetlands, global warming, oilspills, and the list goes on.

Take the President's "America the Beautiful" plan. While President Bush pretends to commit his administration to reforestation and beautification, his budget calls for just the opposite.

Far from beautifying the Tongass National Forest, the budget calls for a 20-percent increase in funding—to continue harvesting ancient trees in our largest and last rain forest at the taxpayers' expense simply for the timber industry's profit.

The House spoke clearly last July when it voted 356 to 60 in favor of the Tongass Timber Reform Act to protect the forest, and the taxpayer, from this outrageous Federal subsidy.

Another example of President Bush's duplicity on the environment is the recent secret settlement negotiations between Exxon and the Justice Department over the Valdez oil spill. Since when is the criminal allowed to determine restitution for his own crime? Apparently, if you are Joe Hazelwood, you will be prosecuted to the full extent of the law; but if you are Exxon, the Attorney General will cut you a deal.

President Bush's claim to being the environmental President is without foundation. Every real action of his administration places our environment in greater jeopardy.

NICARAGUAN ELECTIONS

(Mr. GOSS asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. GOSS. Mr. Speaker, on Sunday I witnessed an incredible thing. As an invited member of the Organization of American States observer team, I watched the Nicaraguan people choose Violeta Chamorro as their President—and choose freedom and democracy as their course for the future.

With an overwhelming mandate—one that has long been underestimated—the people of Nicaragua finally said enough to the Marxist/authoritarian regime of Daniel Ortega.

By insisting on an open and fair election in Nicaragua, the United States helped open the door to freedom—and on Sunday a whole Nation walked through that door.

The people of Nicaragua have shown courage and determination. Their commitment to peaceful change and their faith in the potential of freedom and democracy helped them to triumph on the most uneven of playing fields. They have joined the ever-rising tide of freedom that we see rushing into almost every corner of the world.

I congratuate Violeta Chamorro, the 14-party opposition coalition, the people of Nicaragua, and even the Sandinista regime—which now appears willing to respect the results of the election.

But there is more work to be done. With the election behind them, the people of Nicaragua stand ready to tackle the daunting challenge of rebuilding their country. They need—and deserve—our help.

THE ENVIRONMENT

(Mr. WOLPE asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. WOLPE. Mr. Speaker, I rise to express my strong concern that White House Chief of Staff John Sununu's continuous intervention on environmental matters is doing President Bush a grave disservice and, at the same time, is jeopardizing our Nation's environmental policy.

In recent weeks, Mr. Sununu has overruled President Bush's environmental advisers on at least three major policy issues. In each instance, the effect of Mr. Sununu's intervention has been to substantially weaken efforts to clean up and protect the environment. First, Mr. Sununu succeeded in watering down a major Presidential speech on global warming. Then he weakened a Federal agreement to protect fragile wetlands. And now his hand is clearly visible in efforts to weaken the clean air bill.

Is the President really serious about keeping his promise to the American people to protect the environment? If he is, it is time that he rein in Mr. Sununu and begin to heed his own environmental advisers. The environmental crisis we face is real. It deserves more than lipservice. It deserves strong Presidential leadership.

PRESIDENT'S PRIORITY ON EDUCATION IS EMPTY RHETORIC

(Mr. VISCLOSKY asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. VISCLOSKY. Mr. Speaker, in his State of the Union Address last month, President Bush said:

Education is the one investment that means more for our future because it means the most for our children.

But to invest means to commit money in order to earn a return.

Unfortunately, if one looks at recent education funding levels, the President's top priority looks like empty rhetoric.

For example, in his education funding request this year President Bush asked for a real increase of only 2.7 percent.

This lack of investment costs all of us later on. The irony is that for all of his posturing on taxes, Bush's failure to adequately invest in the educational system of our Nation imposes a hidden tax on business of $210 billion a year for employee training in basic reading, writing, and arithmetic.

Such a tax does nothing to foster a stronger economy.

In closing, I urge the President to take decisive action in the classroom. I also ask the American people to start reading to their children at home.

ULTIMATE STRENGTH OF THIS COUNTRY IS IN ITS EDUCATIONAL SYSTEM

(Mr. DORGAN of North Dakota asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. DORGAN of North Dakota. Mr. Speaker, yesterday I was traveling in North Dakota and visited a small college on one of our Indian reservations. As I visited with the students, they told me again and again how difficult it has become to get any financial support to continue their education.

One young woman told me she didn't know where she could get the $900 for tuition during the next semester, but that she desperately wanted to stay in school in order to improve her life.

It seems to me that a President bent on building B-2 bombers and star wars, taking trips to Mars, and putting missiles on railroad tracks should be able to understand that the ultimate strength of this country is in its education system—and if we weaken that, we weaken America's first defense.

President Bush says he wants to be an "education President." But it's more than saying the words. It's making the investment. Here are some sober thoughts about our education system, Mr. President. U.S. students are 2 to 3 years behind the Japanese students when they graduate from high school—and one-half of the Japanese high school graduates know as much as U.S. college graduates. The United States is one of the few industrial countries left whose classrooms are dark more than half the year. We have a 180-day school year while the Japanese have a 240-day school year. And the list goes on.

The plain fact is, we have to rededicate ourselves to build the finest education system in the world, and to keep it that way. Mr. President, that's going to take some creative genius and some commitment. But we can't do it if we just talk about it. We've got to decide that educating our kids to be the best they can be is more important than building missiles whose explosions destroy their world's dreams.

EDUCATION AND THE PRESIDENT'S "NEW MATH"

(Mr. MARTINEZ asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. MARTINEZ. Mr. Speaker, the President has said that he wants to be the education President and he said that improving math skills must be a top priority. Looking at the President's budget, we can see why: This budget just doesn't add up.

This proposed budget slashes spending for education in real terms. And that's not all: Under the President's plan, Federal education funding would again fall as a percentage of GNP. This budget is $10 billion below the proportion of the GNP we were spending a decade ago. Studies suggest that the United States is coming in close to last among industrialized nations in its education funding efforts. Instead of leading the world, we are lagging much of the world in education funding.

The President is right when he says that money doesn't buy excellence in education—but adequate funding does buy qualified teachers, quality textbooks, and school facilities that don't date from the Korean war. We do need to use our education dollars more efficiently. That is why it is curious that the President opposes funding star schools which helps put modern telecommunications to work in our schools.

Let me give you another example of how this budget doesn't add up. Our Nation badly needs skilled teachers in mathematics, sciences, foreign languages, special education, bilingual education, and so on. In disregard of that need this budget makes it harder to become a teacher because it cuts student aid for would be teachers and for all students.

Pell grants—which go to the neediest students—would receive no adjustment for inflation. This would mean that between 1980 and 1991 the award will be cut by one-fifth after inflation. Is it any wonder that a falling proportion of minority students is going on to college. This decrease in college attendance includes minority students from middle-income families who don't dare incur the debts that this administration's policies require for higher education.

We need to move the Nation toward a more reasonable balance of scholarships and loans—rather than the current system that leaves disadvantaged students deep in debt at the time in their lives when they are working to build careers, striving to establish strong families and battling to keep a roof over their heads.

At a time when modernizing work-based education is increasingly vital to keep our Nation's businesses competitive in world markets, this budget proposes to cut it. Funding is cut from IRCA programs to provide English language and basic skills training to immigrants receiving amnesty. In short, the budget does not add up.

No matter how lofty the goals are said to be, this budget undermines our Nation's ability to build excellence and access in education for all Americans. Thirty-second sound-bite rhetoric that promises an education President and then proposes to cut real funding for education is something America cannot afford. I urge my colleagues to support making America No. 1 in education by supporting an education budget that does add up.

A WELCOME END TO THE STRUGGLE IN NICARAGUA

(Mr. McNULTY asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. McNULTY. Mr. Speaker, what a tremendous year for freedom. The Berlin Wall has come crashing down. The Soviet Communist Party has given up its monopoly on power, and now we can all rejoice at Sunday's democratric miracle, when the Nicaraguan people spoke out with their votes against totalitarianism and made Violeta Chamorro their new President.

We must now do all we can to help her establish peace, freedom, justice, and prosperity for all; but winning the Presidency is only step one. The Sandinistas still control the army, the security forces, and the instruments of government. They will play a significant role in the transition.

I commend President Ortega for his pledge of cooperation.

I also salute President Bush for his commitment to normalize our diplomatic relations with Nicaragua and to lift the economic embargo and the trade embargo. These are commitments he made before the election results were known, and when it appeared as though the Sandinistas would be victorious.

Working together, Mr. Speaker, we will finally see an end to this bitter struggle in Central America.

FORMER PRESIDENT REAGAN'S POLICIES IN CENTRAL AMERICA VINDICATED

(Mr. ROHRABACHER asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. ROHRABACHER. Mr. Speaker, a freedom tide is sweeping this planet. We can see it in Eastern Europe. The Berlin Wall is down. Even in the Soviet Union, we can see democracy making great progress. In South Africa we can see the freedom tide.

Now today we recognize it even in Central America, in Nicaragua. The bulwarks of tyranny will not stand against this tide. Yet unlike the tide, which is a natural occurrence, these things did not happen on their own or as a natural occurence. These were the outgrowth of policies. Over the last decade, Ronald Reagan was reviled and his policies attacked by those who now applaud and celebrate the progress we have made. I am very proud to have served with Ronald Reagan, and it is the Reagan doctrine that we can give credit to for these great changes today.

WRONG ADVICE TO TAXPAYERS FROM THE IRS

(Mr. TRAFICANT asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. TRAFICANT. Mr. Speaker, Money Magazine gave a tax test to 50 professional tax preparers, and guess what, 48 of the 50 flunked. That is right. Only two experts were able to correctly identify how much tax this hypothetical family of four did owe. In fact, over 300 of those experts overestimated their tax by $8,000.

Now, this hypothetical $8,000 could help this hypothetical family given their hypothetical kid a hypothetical 4-year college degree; but I see the sad truth here, and it is a shame when a taxpayer has to pay up to a $4,000 service fee to have an expert screw up their taxes, which they could have done themselves.

The bottom line is that a Philadelphia attorney and a CPA cannot figure out our tax laws, and the people in the country cannot either.

We simplified it all right. We have taken it from calculus to brain surgery.

ANTI-COMMUNIST: A BADGE OF HONOR

(Mr. DORNAN of California asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. DORNAN of California. Mr. Speaker, I can't understand the soft drone of 1-minute speeches here, most of them on domestic issues, when in the last 48-hour period we have experienced one of the great upsets of communism in our lifetime. It boggles my mind. I feel like Diogenes going around looking for the honest man, in this case the honest liberal, the liberal who will stand up and say with some intellectual courage, "I was wrong over my adult life. Communism is and always was worse, or just as bad, than Nazism or fascism, because it has killed more people."

The evil Castro will probably fall within the next year or two, and dos Santos, the evil Communist in Angola, will fall; Mengistu, the evil one in Ethiopia, will fall within the next 3 or 4 years, maybe sooner.

What a glorious time we live in. All of my life the dominant media culture, Mr. Speaker, and people in this House have called me an anti-Communist with an opprobrious ring to that term. It is a badge of honor. I have worn it since I was 16 years of age, 40 years an anti-Communist, and I am proud of it.

We have not seen anything yet. But will an honest liberal, please, come up to me and say, "BOB, anti-Communist is a term of honor. I was wrong about the Contras. I was wrong about the church people going down there. I was wrong about Jennifer Jean Cassolo. I was wrong to go bootlicking down there to the Ortega brothers with their hidden Swiss bank accounts. I was wrong about communism."

Gorbachev is right. Stalin killed more people than Adolf Hitler. The Third Reich lasted for 12 years of ugly terror. Communism has lasted for 72½ years and counting. We are going to see it all die, and then we will all be anti-Communist and lovers of liberty.

NATIONAL ASSESSMENT OF CHAPTER 1 COMPENSATORY EDUCATION PROGAM

(Mr. ORTIZ asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks)

Mr. ORTIZ. Mr. Speaker, today I rise in support of the bill, H.R. 3910, the National Assessment of Chapter 1 Compensatory Education Program.

The purpose of this bill is to assess the need for compensatory education nationwide for disadvantaged children, as we prepare to reauthorize chapter 1 which expires at the end of fiscal year 1993.

As we study the various needs of our educational system in the 1990's, it is important to pay particular attention to the area of south Texas.

As a vegetable growing agricultural entity, farmers in the Rio Grande Valley tend to hire migrant workers.

Due to the severe freeze last month, the citrus and vegetable crop in south Texas, as well as other areas of the country, were greatly damaged.

I take this time, Mr. Speaker, to emphasize that the Department of Education should realize that the number of migrant workers will, in all probability, be lower this year than normal.

I urge those conducting the educational study to be aware of the fact that there will be fewer migrant workers in the valley area, therefore, the data collected must be adjusted to ensure accuracy.

INTRODUCTION OF STUDENT LOAN DEFAULT REDUCTION AMENDMENTS OF 1990

(Mr. DENNY SMITH asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks)

Mr. DENNY SMITH. Mr. Speaker, when President Bush talked about education during his State of the Union Address, he spoke of the critical need for more math and science teachers. Many of these future teachers will depend on guaranteed student loans to help pay their college costs. Unfortunately, we may not be able to meet their needs because we spend 37 cents out of every GSL dollar financing unpaid student loans.

That's why I rise today to introduce the Student Loan Default Reduction Amendments of 1990, which amends the Higher Education Act of 1965 to allow Secretary Cavazos more latitude in cracking down on student loan defaults.

In fiscal year 1989 defaults on guaranteed student loans totaled $1.8 billion. These default rates are unacceptable, and serve only to rob other valuable education programs of scarce resources. Put simply, the time has come to reassert that a good education is worth borrowing money for, and worth paying back.

The President is 100 percent behind this legislation, and has identified it as a key component of his plan to invigorate America's education system. Senators GRAMM and DOLE have introduced companion legislation in the Senate, and have pledged to move the bill through that body with all possible speed.

I ask my colleagues to demonstrate their support for getting more dollars to education by cosponsoring this bill.

TRIBUTE TO JESSE SAPOLU

(Mr. FALEOMAVAEGA asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. FALEOMAVAEGA. Mr. Speaker, it is my understanding the world Super Bowl champions, the San Francisco 49ers, are in Washington today, and our President will be hosting them sometime today at the White House. Congratulations are certainly in order for the owners and the coaching staff of this great football team.

Mr. Speaker, there is one particular individual and fellow football player on this 49ers team that I would like to pay a special tribute to and to share his good name with my colleagues this morning.

He is unique in that he was the only Pacific Islander who played in a Super Bowl game. A graduate of Farrington High School in Honolulu and the University of Hawaii where he lettered in football and other sports, Jesse Sapolu is an outstanding role model for our Nation's youth, both while attending college and even today.

Jesse was drafted by the 49ers some 8 years ago as an offensive guard and center.

Throughout the past season, he played as first-string center for the 49ers and proudly wears No. 61 on his jersey.

Jesse is the son of proud but humble Samoan parents who have labored diligently and faithfully for the Samoan Congregational Christian Church for over 30 years.

A humble gentleman who stands 6 feet, 4 inches tall and weighs 285 pounds, Jesse Sapolu is probably the only Pacific Islander to my knowledge to have successfully earned three Super Bowl rings with the 49ers from three world championship football games.

Jesse Sapolu is a devout Christian and is married to the lovely Melanie Aholoholo from the island of Kaua'i in the State of Hawaii, and they are the proud parents of three children.

CREDIT ALSO TO PRESIDENT BUSH

(Mrs. BENTLEY asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend her remarks.)

Mrs. BENTLEY. Mr. Speaker, decades come and go; seasons mark the changes in our lives; but the drives and hopes of people are a constant.

Witness Eastern Europe: fear chained them; despair held them back.

But no more. They will be free.

Now Nicaragua. A woman's voice was heard. The paper could be shut down; but the truth could not be muzzled. And the people voted.

All of these countries look to the United States. We are the model; we should be justifiably proud of the example we set, proud of even the little things, such as the peaceful transfer of power.

And we shall watch Nicaragua to see if Ortega listens to the wishes of his countrymen.

As we pass out praise for those who have done so much, the Walesas, the Havels, the Chamorros, and President Carter, we should not overlook President Bush. He has provided strong leadership in Central American affairs, from his handling of the Panama crisis to encouraging free elections in Nicaragua.

Repressed peoples worldwide, from Eastern Europeans to Nicaraguans, want to be our friends. And President Bush has not shrunk from extending a strong U.S. hand in friendship.

We are beginning to see the results.

THE 25TH ANNIVERSARY OF HEAD START

(Mrs. UNSOELD asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend her remarks.)

Mrs. UNSOELD. Mr. Speaker, this year marks the 25th anniversary of Head Start. Why is that significant?

Mr. Speaker, there is nothing more vital to our national security than how we educate our children. If we are to be successful in an increasingly competitive world, our children must first succeed in the classroom. Yet, too many of our children entering kindergarten today are not prepared to learn. They have never learned discipline, never learned respect for someone else, for themselves, for property, never learned responsibility.

We have a high-school dropout rate of over 25 percent.

We know that $1 invested in Head Start will save $4.75 in future costs of welfare, unemployment, and crime. Yet only 18 percent of our eligible 3-to-5-year-olds are able to participate in Head Start.

The President's budget does not recommend full funding. I call upon my colleagues, Mr. Speaker, to reauthorize Head Start and provide full funding this year. Head Start is a good start for investment in life.

TRIBUTE TO VIOLA GRAY-JOHNSON

(Mr. CARDIN asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. CARDIN. Mr. Speaker, on February 18, Viola Johnson, age 84, passed away at Johns Hopkins Hospital of a respiratory illness. Ms. Johnson lived a life that was a monument to the values that we all cherish as Americans. She worked tirelessly for 40 years at South Baltimore General Hospital where she pressed uniforms for staff members. She believed in the work ethic and did her best to teach her children and grandchildren right from wrong. She told them with a little hard work and belief in yourself you can do and be anything you want.

Viola Gray-Johnson's story is typical of millions of American families. The strong maternal influence, teaching by example, giving her children and her grandchildren belief in their own abilities to achieve great things. What makes this classic American story of special interest to us in this Chamber is that the legacy of Viola Johnson's faith is alive in the work of her grandson, the U.S. Representative from Maryland's Seventh District, our colleague and my friend, the Honorable KWEISI MFUME.

We all would like to express our sympathies to Congressman MFUME and to his entire family. Mrs. Johnson will be missed, but she has left her family, and the people of Baltimore and the entire United States better off.

ECONOMIC CONVERSION LEGISLATION IS NEEDED NOW TO ASSIST COMMUNITIES WITH DEFENSE SPENDING DECLINE

(Mr. BRENNAN asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. BRENNAN. Mr. Speaker, I join today with Congresswoman OAKAR, in cosponsoring legislation to assist communities which are heavily affected by defense industries to make the conversion to nondefense industry opportunities.

We have witnessed a real decline in defense spending over the past 5 years and that trend will continue. The dramatic changes we see in Eastern Europe, the Soviet Union, and now in Nicaragua reflect the budget realities of less for defense.

In my home State of Maine, we are heavily influenced by defense industries. While defense cuts have not translated into massive layoffs yet, we need to begin planning for that possibility.

This legislation assists in developing plans to shift from defense work to alternative public and private projects. These projects can be used to address critical needs in the areas of housing, education, and transportation. The bill also addresses retraining, education, and job placement help for displaced workers.

The decline in defense spending should not result in economic catastrophe, but provide for economic opportunity. This bill will aid in that effort and I urge your support for it.

ELECTION SHOULD END NICARAGUAN OBSESSION

(Mr. RICHARDSON asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, like Buster Douglas, Mrs. Chamorro got off the canvas and upset Daniel

Ortega. Only there was no Don King to try and cancel the victory. In fact, the Sandinistas permitted a clean, efficient, and fair election. They permitted thousands of observers, myself included. They have gracefully accepted defeat.

As much as some people hate to say this, we should commend them and acknowledge their positive effort in this election.

If Mrs. Chamorro is going to govern effectively, she is going to need them to be cooperative and turn over his reigns of power, especially the military and the security policy.

So, for once, let us shut up and stop gloating over the Sandinista defeat. Let us not complicate the reconciliation process in Nicaragua.

For those that say Nicaragua has got to get in line for United States help alongside those Eastern European democracies, I say Nicaragua comes first. We have a moral obligation to help that country after 10 years of a U.S. proxy war and thousands killed. This election hopefully should end our Nicaraguan obsession.

Mr. Speaker, I wish to insert for the RECORD a prediction of our colleague, the gentleman from New York [Mr. SOLARZ]. The gentleman is to be commended for his foresight.

ECONOMIC AID PACKAGE FOR NICARAGUA

(Mr. SLATTERY asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. SLATTERY. Mr. Speaker, on Sunday I witnessed historic elections in Nicaragua as a member of the OAS observation team.

The people of Nicaragua spoke freely in this election and democracy triumphed. I congratulate Mrs. Chamorro and her UNO team.

But many other people deserve credit for the election. President Ortega should be recognized for honoring his word to hold a free election, because that is what happened. Secretary General Baena Soares of the OAS should be recognized and commended, along with former President Carter and his team, for the countless hours they spent without pay in observing this election.

But now, Mr. Speaker, the hard work of governing begins for the new government headed by Mrs. Chamorro. Now is also the time for this administration to make sure our commitment to democracy in Nicaragua is not empty rhetoric.

I hope that President Bush will restore full diplomatic relations to the Nicaraguan Government immediately. We should also lift the trade embargo and encourage international assistance from the World Bank and the International Monetary Fund.

We should make sure that Nicaraguan men and women have the opportunity to have equal access to our markets. We must also commit the United States to an economic aid package that will at least equal the economic assistance that the Nicaraguan Government under the Sandinistas has received from the Soviet Union and other Eastern bloc countries.

THE AVIATION TRUST FUND

(Mr. VALENTINE asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. VALENTINE. Mr. Speaker, the airport and airway trust fund, known also as the aviation trust fund, is derived from various user taxes and an 8 percent ticket tax (which is proposed to go to 10 percent) levied on airline passengers. Under the law, that money is intended primarily for research and for capital investments in airports and air traffic control equipment that serve to maintain or enhance this country's aviation system.

The aviation trust fund currently has an unspent balance of approximately $13 billion. We all know what that balance is being used for: It is being used to help camouflage the true size of the Federal budget deficit. How long can this go on before those people who are paying for, but not receiving, aviation improvements go beyond a state of anger to a state of utter rage?

The people of this country will gladly pay dedicated user taxes if they agree with the public objectives and are confident that the funds will be used to achieve those objectives. The aviation trust fund, as currently administered, can make a claim for neither.

The time for dealing honestly with the trust fund is now, and I hope that we in the Congress will have the courage to do it.

PUT CLEAN AIR BILL ON PRESIDENT'S DESK BY EARTH DAY

(Mr. DOUGLAS asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. Speaker, a number of Members have stood here today and attacked President Bush and New Hampshire's John Sununu over clean air legislation. I think what we need to do is put this in perspective, because today is the seventh month to the day that the President's clean air package came to the U.S. House. It was introduced July 27, and the President asked that he get the bill on his desk by January 1.

We have not even voted on it yet, and yet the President is already being attacked by Democratic Members of this House, who control this House and have controlled it since 1954. If they want the clean air bill on the floor, they can get it on the floor by April 22, which is Earth Day. It should be on the floor. We should be voting on it. It should be signed by the date the President wants it, the latest date, Earth Day.

Before the President gets attacked again, I think the Democrats ought to recognize they control the House, they control the action. They can put that bill on the desk of the President, and the sooner the better.

AMERICA NEEDS MORE EDUCATION, NOT JAILS

(Mr. FLAKE asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. FLAKE. Mr. Speaker, this morning we have been awakened to a new revelation that one out of every four persons who occupy prison cells or are on probation are African-American young men in their 20's. I think that one of the answers to trying to solve the problem is not building more jails, not trying to develop more mechanisms within the criminal justice system, but understanding that in this Nation there is a responsibility and an obligation to educate all of its people.

Education has been the key that has unlocked the door for so many who have tried to escape the circumstances of their life from ghetto experiences, those who have found themselves with an inability to be competitive. Education has given them those opportunities.

Yet, in many of our communities the dropout rate is so high that these young men find their way to the streets and determine the way to succeed is to be able to function out in the streets.

I would challenge us today to understand our obligation to all of our citizens and our obligation in an educational manner is to somehow endow within each and every citizen the capability and the skill to be competitive, the ability to be productive. We can only do that by committing ourselves to a priority in education, so that each and every American citizen understands not only their responsibility to the Nation, but their responsibility to themselves. Let us educate every American.

DICTATORSHIPS AROUND THE WORLD ARE MOVING TOWARD DEMOCRACY

(Mr. SCHEUER asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. SCHEUER. Mr. Speaker, we are all thrilled and astonished at the victory of Mrs. Violeta Chamorro in Nicaragua. Few of us anticipated it, although many of us hoped for it.

It is an exhilarating fact that when voters have been given the chance to express themselves on staying with tight, nasty, repressive dictatorships or moving toward democracy, they have gone for it every single time. They have gone for it in Russia. They have gone for it in Eastern and Central Europe. They have gone for it in the Baltic States. And here they have gone for democracy in Nicaragua.

□ 1250

I have had the pleasure and privilege of meeting with Mrs. Chamorro. She is a charming, educated, fine, sincere person. But she needs a heck of a lot of help, Mr. Speaker.

The history of relatives of deposed and fallen chiefs of state taking their place is not encouraging. Prime Minister Bhutto, the daughter of the executed Prime Minister Bhutto is having great difficulty in Pakistan. Mrs. Aquino, who was a simple housewife, has performed miracles considering her lack of experience when she took on this job, but she is in great difficulty. Rajiv Gandhi, the aviator son of Mrs. Gandhi who took over, had a desperately difficult time because of lack of experience and knowledge and sophistication about the ways of politics and governance, and I fear that Mrs. Chamorro is going to need all of the help that she can get. As a very charming, educated, cultivated housewife she has a desperate plate of problems before her, and we owe her help, we owe her advice and counsel, and we owe her resources. Mr. Speaker, we have a $5 trillion economy, and out of that we ought to be able to create an adequate foreign aid program to help the Nicaraguan people and Mrs. Chamorro.

BIGEYE IS TRULY A BOMB

(Mr. PORTER asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. PORTER. Mr. Speaker, as the dramatic changes unfold in Eastern Europe and Secretary of State James Baker reports major progress on nuclear, conventional, and chemical weapons arms control, the Pentagon continues to fund development for an outdated and severely flawed weapon called the Bigeye nerve gas bomb.

The Bigeye bomb project is no small undertaking. If this Congress were to approve full funding, the taxpayers would get stuck with a billion dollar bill for a weapon that repeatedly failed nearly every round of testing.

The Bigeye's supporters call for additional time to work out these design problems. Additional time? This bomb was misdesigned in 1959 and has been under development for no less than 30 years.

It's time to stop spending money on this failed weapon. Its development has been drawn out so long that it can play no real role in the final draft of the chemical weapons treaty. While the Bigeye cannot intimidate the Russians, it continues to scare the daylights out of American taxpayers.

CONGRATULATING MRS. CHAMORRO ON VICTORY IN NICARAGUA

(Mr. CARPER asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. CARPER. Mr. Speaker, questions concerning the fairness and openness of the Nicaraguan elections finally have been answered. Democracy has triumphed. By all accounts, Sunday's elections were both fair and open.

Despite President Ortega's gracious concession speech, serious questions remain, however, concerning the willingness of the Sandinistas to turn over real power in Nicaragua. The Sandinista military and police must be transformed into Nicaraguan forces. Without doubt, the Sandinistas will find the loss of that power even more difficult to accept than last weekend's election results.

Mrs. Chamorro, meanwhile, is to be congratulated on a most impressive victory against great odds. She will find, as did the Sandinistas, that winning an election, or a revolution, however difficult, is far easier than governing a country mired in poverty and wracked by deep internal dissension.

The United States has contributed directly to the deterioration of the Nicaraguan economy through our economic embargo and our support of the Contras. Now, we must assist in Nicaragua's rebuilding by quickly normalizing relations, both diplomatic and economic, with the new government.

Just as important, the United States must work closely and skillfully with the Organization of American States and the United Nations, as well as with Sunday's winners and losers, in an effort to promote a peaceful transition of power when Mrs. Chamorro is sworn in as President in April. Like the recently concluded campaign, that transition will not be easy, nor will it likely be very friendly. But it must be done if Sunday's elections are to have true meaning.

As that transition moves forward, other changes should occur: The demobilization of the Contras and their reintegration into Nicaraguan society. Any remaining U.S. aid to the Contras should be used for that purpose.

The best enforcer of Mrs. Chamorro's victory is international public opinion in a world that is quickly being transformed. Enough Nicaraguan blood has been spilled; the time for rebuilding Nicaragua and for restoring hope to its people has come at last.

THE PEOPLE HAVE SPOKEN FOR DEMOCRACY IN NICARAGUA

(Mr. DELAY asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. DELAY. Mr. Speaker Mrs. Chamorro's victory in the Nicaraguan elections should bring great pride to every member of this House who supported the Freedom Fighters in their quest to oust a Communist dictator.

Once again, the people have spoken overwhelmingly that they do not want the tyranny and oppression of Communist governments. And if given the opportunity in free and fair elections, that they will vote them out of office without the least hesitation.

Unfortunately, Communists understand that they are pretenders to the throne and are never able to govern with the support of the people. Communists must be pressured and dragged kicking and screaming into holding free elections.

Ortega and the Sandinistas were no different. Without our support of the Contras and the courage of the opposition in the country, Mr. Ortega would have been content to grow old as dictator over his country like so many other Communists.

As democracy continues to break out all over the world, a clear message is being sent to the few remaining Communist dictators: The people want freedom and not oppression.

Hey, Fidel, I hope you're listening. Cuba may be next.

ANTI-SEMITISM

(Mr. ENGEL asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. ENGEL. Mr. Speaker, now that perestroika is taking hold in Eastern Europe and the Soviet Union, the terrible specter of anti-Semitism is again rearing its ugly head. Our Government must make it absolutely clear to the Soviets that anti-Semitism in the Soviet Union, or anywhere else will not be tolerated.

Soviet Jews are now fleeing the U.S.S.R. in record numbers, many fearing for their lives. Yet it is becoming increasingly difficult for newly applied refugees to again admittance to the United States, and despite promises, the Soviet Union has not yet allowed direct flights from the U.S.S.R to Israel. This leaves many potential refugees trapped with no place to go.

The U.S. Congress and the Bush administration must demand from Mr. Gorbachev direct flights from Moscow to Tel Aviv immediately and strong intervention from the Soviet Government to end the scourage of anti-Semitism in the U.S.S.R.

CONSTITUTIONAL AMENDMENT TO PROTECT THE FLAG

(Mr. HUBBARD asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. HUBBARD. Mr. Speaker, today I have introduced a resolution proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States authorizing the Congress and the States to prohibit the physical desecration of the flag of the United States and to set criminal penalties for that act.

This is not the first resolution of this type this Congress. I introduce this resolution to remind my colleagues that last week—on February 21—in the first Federal court ruling on the Flag Protection Act of 1989, U.S. District Judge Barbara Rothstein, of Seattle, ruled the law we passed last year was unconstitutional.

David Cole, of New York City, the lawyer representing the Seattle flag burners, said last week of Judge Rothstein's decision: "I think it's wonderful * * * people must be as free to burn the flag as they are to wave it."

The Seattle flag burners are four individuals who shortly after midnight on October 28 last year, the day the 1989 Flag Protection Act went into effect, removed a flag from a flagpole at a Seattle Post Office. Then, of course, they excitedly burned the American flag.

There are those who argue that's OK. But very few of my Kentucky constituents think that way.

Those of us in the House who were insisting last year that we need a constitutional amendment to ban malicious flag burning by those who live here but hate the United States will now double our efforts for a constitutional amendment.

NICARAGUA ELECTIONS

(Mr. SLAUGHTER of Virginia asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. SLAUGHTER of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, today I rise to congratulate the people of Nicaragua for their free and fair vote. Another dictator has fallen before the popular will.

□ 1300

Violeta Chamorro appears to have unseated dictator Ortega.

When the Sandinistas seized power as a victorious united front in 1979, they apparently had the good will and support of the international community, including the United States. After defeating democratic elements and hijacking the revolution, the Sandinistas attempted in true Marxist-Leninist fashion to socially reengineer Nicaraguan society.

Their failure to overhaul Nicaraguan society by force resulted in civil war—20,000 organized and trained men joined a fight to overthrow the new dictators whose rhetoric was different but whose methods of social control were the same. Today those who fought for the right to speak out, vote, and participate in the governing of their country are vindicated.

Nicaragua's people, all Central America, and the United States are winners today.

THE 1988 ANNUAL REPORT ON MINE SAFETY AND HEALTH ACTIVITIES—MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. MAZZOLI) laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States; which was read and, together with the accompanying papers, without objection, referred to the Committee on Education and Labor:

(For message, see proceedings of the Senate of today, Tuesday, February 27, 1990.)

ANNOUNCEMENT BY THE SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to the provisions of clause 5 of rule I, the Chair announces that he will postpone further proceedings today on each motion to suspend the rules on which a recorded vote or the "yeas" and "nays" are ordered, or on which the vote is objected to under clause 4 of rule XV.

Such rollcall votes, if postponed, will be taken after debate has concluded on all motions to suspend the rules.

THE 1992 NATIONAL ASSESSMENT OF CHAPTER 1 ACT

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H.R. 3910) to require the Secretary of Education to conduct a comprehensive national assessment of programs carried out with assistance under chapter 1 of title I of the Elementary and Secondary Education Act of 1965, as amended.

The Clerk read as follows:

H.R. 3910

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "1992 National Assessment of Chapter 1 Act".

SEC. 2. NATIONAL ASSESSMENT OF PROGRAMS ASSISTED UNDER CHAPTER 1.

(a) NATIONAL ASSESSMENT.—

(1) GENERAL REQUIREMENT.—The Secretary of Education, through the Deputy Under Secretary for Planning, Budget, and Evaluation and the Assistant Secretary of Educational Research and Improvement (in this section referred to as the "Assistant Secretary"), shall conduct a comprehensive national assessment of the effects of chapter 1 of title I of the Elementary and Secondary Education Act of 1965 (in this section referred to as "chapter 1").

(2) INDEPENDENT REVIEW PANEL.—Such assessment shall be planned, reviewed, and conducted in consultation with an independent panel of researchers, State practitioners, local practitioners, and other appropriate individuals including individuals with a background in conducting congressionally mandated national assessments of chapter 1. The Federal Advisory Committee Act shall not apply to the establishment or operation of such panel.

(3) COORDINATION WITH AND USE OF EXISTING STUDIES.—Such assessment shall be coordinated with all related research conducted by the Secretary of Education. Nothing in this section shall be construed to limit or alter the authority of the Secretary to review other program aspects of chapter 1 not mandated by this section.

(b) CONTENTS OF ASSESSMENT.—The assessment required by subsection (a) shall include descriptions and evaluations of—

(1) the implementation of the provisions of sections 1019, 1020, 1021, and 1435 of chapter 1, including—

(A) the progress made by State educational agencies and local educational agencies in implementing such sections;

(B) procedures used by State educational agencies and local educational agencies to govern interactions between such agencies relating to the administration and coordination of the provisions of such sections;

(C) program improvements undertaken by local educational agencies and State educational agencies under such sections and the effects of such improvements on program participants with respect to the basic and more advanced skills that all children are expected to master; and

(D) major programmatic accomplishments and problems and procedural accomplishments and problems caused by the implementation of such sections;

(2) the implementation of section 1015 of chapter 1, including—

(A) the number of schoolwide projects assisted under such section;

(B) operational procedures used by the schoolwide projects assisted under such section, including an analysis of similarities and differences in procedures and programs among such projects in different States;

(C) accomplishments and problems resulting from establishing schoolwide projects;

(D) an analysis of the effectiveness of schoolwide projects as compared to other programs assisted under part A of chapter 1; and

(E) a description of uses of funds in programs assisted in the implementation of schoolwide projects;

(3) the overall operation and effectiveness of part A of chapter 1, including—

(A) program participation, particularly—

(i) allocation of funds to school sites and the factors involved in such allocation;

(ii) recipients of services delivered with assistance under such part, including limited English proficient students;

(iii) with respect to each local educational agency that receives assistance under such part (or a representative sample of such agencies for each State), the number of eligible children within the jurisdiction of such agency, the resources necessary to serve all such eligible children, and the school attendance of participants in programs assisted under such part; and

(iv) the effect of the decennial census complied by the Bureau of the Census in 1990 on the allocation of funding to local educational agencies, as well as counties;

(B) program services and personnel, particularly—

(i) services delivered with assistance under part A of chapter 1; and

(ii) a comparison of the background and training of teachers and staff who conduct programs assisted under part A of chapter 1 and regular classroom teachers and staff;

(C) program administration, particularly—

(i) coordination with regular classroom activities and with other programs;

(ii) the adequacy of standardized tests; and

(iii) the effectiveness of parent involvement procedures in enhancing parental collaboration with schools and parent involvement in the children's educational development;

(D) program outcomes, particularly—

(i) student achievement, as reflected by student attendance, behavior, grades, and other indicators of achievement; and

(ii) the development of curricula that provides effective instruction in basic and more advanced skills that all children are expected to master; and

(E) a national profile of the manner in which local educational agencies implement activities described in the plans included in their applications submitted to the Secretary under section 1056 of chapter 1;

(4) the implementation of section 1017 of chapter 1;

(5) the operation and effectiveness of Even Start projects carried out under part B of chapter 1; and

(6) the operation and effectiveness of programs for migratory children carried out under subpart 1 of part D of chapter 1.

(c) CONSULTATION WITH CONGRESSIONAL COMMITTEES.—In designing and implementing the assessment required by subsection (a), the Secretary of Education shall consult with the Committee on Labor and Human Resources of the Senate and the Committee on Education and Labor of the House of Representatives.

(d) REPORTS TO CONGRESS.—

(1) GENERAL REQUIREMENTS.—The Secretary of Education shall submit to the Congress—

(A) not later than June 30, 1992, a report containing the preliminary results of the assessment required by subsection (a); and

(B) not later than December 1, 1992, a final report with respect to such assessment.

(2) LIMITATION ON DEPARTMENTAL REVIEW OF REPORTS.—Notwithstanding any other provision of law, the Secretary of Education shall make available to the appropriate committees of the Congress such studies, reports, and data as are submitted to the Secretary by grantees and contractors pursuant to this Act without any additions, deletions, or other modifications by the Department of Education. The Secretary of Education and the President may submit such additional studies and make such additional recommendations to the Congress with respect to chapter 1 as they may consider appropriate.

(c) RESERVATION OF AMOUNTS.—From funds appropriated for purposes of chapter 1, the Secretary of Education shall reserve for purposes of conducting the assessment required by subsection (a) a total amount of not more than $6,000,000 from funds appropriated for the fiscal years 1990, 1991, 1992, and 1993. Amounts reserved under the preceding sentence may only be expended during the period beginning on December 1, 1989, and ending on January 1, 1983.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is a second demanded?

Mr. GOODLING. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, a second will be considered as ordered.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Montana [Mr. WILLIAMS] will be recognized for 20 minutes, and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GOODLING] will be recognized for 20 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Montana [Mr. WILLIAMS].

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, universal quality education is the key ingredient needed to keep the United States competitive with its neighbors in the international community, and ensure economic growth and prosperity at home.

But, today we are faced with an education system which threatens our economic stability. While some schools are achieving education excellence, many are struggling and turning out a generation of adults ill prepared for the challenges and complexities of the workforce of the 1990's and beyond.

The majority of new workers are expected to be those in our society who are most educationally at-risk: the economically disadvantaged, minorities, and immigrants. For economic, social, and moral reasons, it is imperative that we as a Nation mobilize all of the many resources we have to make education the number one national priority.

One of the most cost effective, successful Federal elementary and secondary programs on the books is the Chapter 1 Program. Chapter 1, which was reauthorized through 1993, as part of the Hawkins-Stafford School Improvement Amendments of 1988, provides basic reading and mathematics skills to economically and educationally at-risk students in school districts across the country.

Studies have shown that $600 spent for a child or one year of compensatory education can save $4,000 in the cost of a single repeated grade. The school improvement amendments required an additional $500 million to be spent each fiscal year for chapter 1, so that full funding could be reached by 1993. I am sorry to report that this year, less than one-half of all children eligible for chapter 1 remedial education are enrolled in the program. This situation exists for one reason—inadequate funding—we are not spending enough money on our children in the chapter 1 effort.

The measure before us today, H.R. 3910, the National Assessment of Chapter 1, deals not with funding levels, about which an agreement has not been reached, rather this measure comprehensive, objective evaluation of the continued effectiveness of all aspects of chapter 1. The gentleman from California introduced this legislation with our friend and colleague, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GOODLING].

This legislation, which was unanimously reported by the Education and Labor Committee, is designed to provide for an objective and fair analysis of the effectiveness of chapter 1. The committee found the last national assessment to be extremely helpful when we reauthorized chapter 1 in 1988, and we anticipate the assessment required by this bill will be equally as useful to those who will be reauthorizing the law in 1993.

New provision, such as program improvement and schoolwide projects, need to be properly evaluated, and the national assessment must be coordinated with all other related research conducted by the Secretary of Education. This legislation also includes an amendment which has been recommended by the Department of Education, and agreed to by Mr. GOODLING and Mr. HAWKINS, which exempts the review panel from the Federal Advisory Committee Act, so as to ensure timely completion of the assessment.

I thank the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GOODLING] for his commitment to quick passage of this legislation, and urge my colleagues to do everything we can to make education our No. 1 priority.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. GOODLING. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of H.R. 3910, the 1992 National Assessment of Chapter 1 Act, a bill that I enjoyed the responsibility of coauthoring with my distinguished chairman, AUGUSTUS HAWKINS. This small but important bill will authorize the Secretary of Education to conduct a national assessment of the Chapter 1 Program. Chapter 1, the largest of the Federal elementary and secondary education programs, will expire in 1993. That may seem like a time in the distant future, but in terms of gathering and collating information, it is imperative that we begin the assessment of the program now. This assessment will help to give Members valuable information regarding the implementation of the program.

Furthermore, it is also our intent that the Department of Education, in carrying out this national assessment, include in their studies an evaluation of the effects of the State and Federal regulations related to chapter 1 services offered to children.

I wish to thank the Department of Education for their suggestions and assistance in helping to rewrite the bill in order to make this a comprehensive and workable review. I know that the Department has already begun studying various program aspects of chapter 1. It is my intent that those activities continue and are incorporated into this assessment.

I would also like to take a moment to commend the Department for their work in implementing the provisions of Public Law 100-297, the Hawkins-Stafford Amendments of 1988. I realize that we placed very stringent time constraints on the Department for issuing regulations. The legislation incorporated in Public Law 100-297, the authorizing legislation for chapter 1, took Congress over 16 months to complete; yet, the time constraints we imposed on the the Department was a great deal shorter. As a matter of fact, in order to meet the deadlines in the legislation, the Department began working on the negotiated rulemaking regional meetings for the regulations even before the bill was completed by Congress.

I wish to commend the Department for the careful consideration they gave to the comments and negotiations made regarding the proposed regulations and the policy manual. It is my understanding that on the policy manual alone the Department conducted numerous meetings with over 1,300 local educators, administrators, and committees of practitioners. Careful consideration takes time. Furthermore, the Department should be commended for the regional meetings held last year explaining the regulations and those held this year explaining the program improvement sections of chapter 1.

With regards to the substitute amendment, two important amendments have been included in the substitute to the reported bill. First, we have clarified our intent to include consideration of the participation of private school children under section 1017 of chapter 1. Second, the Department has pointed out that the advisory panel created to advise the Department would be subject to the Federal Advisory Committee Act and we accordingly exempted this panel from those requirements.

Finally, I would note that our chairman has announced his intention not to seek reelection. I realize that, as a member, he will not benefit from the fruits of this study. I commend him for his consideration and foresight in laying the foundations for information that will be useful for those men and women who will serve in Congress in 1993.

Again, I rise in support of this bill and ask my colleagues to join me in voting in favor of its passage.

□ 1310

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. GOODLING. Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. MAZZOLI). The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Montana [Mr. WILLIAMS] that the House suspend the rules and pass the bill, H.R. 3910, as amended.

The question was taken; and (two-thirds having voted in favor thereof) the rules were suspended and the bill, as amended, was passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days within which to revise and extend their remarks on H.R. 3910, the bill just passed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Montana?

There was no objection.

AUTHORIZATION FOR THE TAFT INSTITUTE FOR FISCAL YEARS 1990, 1991, AND 1992

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H.R. 3315) to extend the authorization of appropriations for the Taft Institute, as amended.

The Clerk read as follows:

H.R. 3315

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That section 1373 of the Education Amendments of 1980 is amended to read as follows:

"AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS

"SEC. 1373. There are authorized to be appropriated to carry out this subpart—

"(1) $750,000 for fiscal year 1990;

"(2) $500,000 for fiscal year 1991; and

"(3) $250,000 for fiscal year 1992.

No funds are authorized to be appropriated to carry out this subpart for fiscal year 1993 or any succeeding fiscal year.".

SEC. 2. It is the sense of the House of Representatives to reject any extraneous amendments not related to the subject of this bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is a second demanded?

Mr. GOODLING. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, a second will be considered as ordered.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Montana [Mr. WILLIAMS] will be recognized for 20 minutes, and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GOODLING] will be recognized for 20 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Montana [Mr. WILLIAMS].

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, today we are considering H.R. 3315, a bill to extend the authorization of the Robert A. Taft Institute of Government.

We are all pretty familiar with the Taft Institute. It's a nonprofit, nonpartisan education organization named in honor of the late U.S. Senator Robert A. Taft of Ohio. It was founded in 1961, and it has received Federal support since 1981.

The Taft Institute each year conducts seminars for educators who are responsible for teaching government at the classroom level. These seminars, held on college campuses, attempt to give these educators a better understanding of how our system of government works. The seminars are taught by practicing politicians and elected officials. One hundred and eighty current Members of Congress have taught Taft seminars. Last year 30 seminars in 27 States were held, enrolling 847 educators. Since its beginning, 580 Taft seminars have been held on more than 125 college campuses; 8,000 educators have gained practical political experience through them, and more than 15,000 Republican and Democratic government and political officials have conducted that training. Taft is a success.

H.R. 3315 would continue that success. It would provide continued Federal support for the Taft Institute for 3 more years. When Taft received its initial Federal authorization in 1980, its supporters believed that the institute could develop to the point where it could function without continued Federal support. This bill gets us to that point. Over the next 3 years, the Federal contribution to the Taft Institute will be annually reduced, so that by fiscal year 1993 the institute will be on its own financially. I had originally wanted to fund the Taft Institute for 4 fiscal years. However, when this bill was considered in committee, an amendment was offered granting the Taft Institute authorizations of $750,000 in fiscal year 1990, $500,000 in fiscal year 1991, and $250,000 in fiscal year 1992. That amendment was adopted, and is a part of the legislation before us today. I have been assured by the Institute's staff that they will be able to gear up their fund-raising efforts to have sufficient private resources in place to make up for the loss of Federal funding that will occur in fiscal year 1993.

The Taft Institute is a good program. Last year when we attempted to reauthorize it, a number of extraneous items were added to the Taft bill that contributed to that legislation's defeat. This year we adopted an amendment in committee that attempts to prevent that from happening again this year.

H.R. 3315 would continue a very worthwhile program. I urge my colleagues to support it.

Mr. GOODLING. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to join Chairman WILLIAMS and Mr. COLEMAN, ranking member of the Subcommittee on Postsecondary Education in supporting the consideration of H.R. 3315, the reauthorization of the Taft Institute, under suspension of the rules.

The Taft Institute honors the name of a great Republican, the late U.S. Senator Robert A. Taft, and has, for the past 25 years, promoted the greater understanding of our government and the political process at all levels.

The Taft Institute is a nonprofit organization, which conducts seminars for classroom teachers, administrators and librarians who are responsible for the teaching of history, social studies, civics, and government. These seminars focus on the American Government and how it works, and they are taught by politicians and government officials. Almost 200 Members of Congress have participated in these seminars.

This final reauthorization of the Taft Institute, H.R. 3315, provides 3 years of a continuing but declining Federal level of support. During this transition period, the Taft Institute will develop private sources of support for its continued operation of its yearly seminars.

The purpose of H.R. 3315 is to provide a stable phase-out of Federal support; $750,000 is authorized for fiscal year 1990; $500,000 for fiscal year 1991, and $250,000 in fiscal year 1992. The bill provides for no funding in fiscal year 1993 or any succeeding fiscal year.

Mr. Speaker, let me close by saying, "but if," and the "but if" is that if it comes back from the Senate as it did in the fall of 1988, I will work just as hard to kill it again as I did to kill it at that time, because when it left here, it was a single bill for $750,000, and when it came back, it was a bill of $60 million. Everything under the Sun that anybody thought they could pass was added, and we, of course, wanted to go home. They do not have that luxury at this time, so I am just sending out notice now before we go to conference that I have not lost my enthusiasm to kill the bill if it becomes a Christmas tree.

Mr. MONTGOMERY. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of H.R. 3315. The work done by the Taft Institute provides educators with valuable, practical information about politics and government. This face-to-face experience with government leaders gives our educators a better insight into how the process works. That translates into more effective teaching of these subjects when the teachers, administrators and librarians return to their schools across the country.

My alma mater, Mississippi State University, has had a long and successful relationship with the Taft Institute. The program has recently had some funding problems and some cuts were made, but this authorization will help remedy some of those problems and enable the program to continue. It has been good for Mississippi and for the country and I think it deserves our support.

Mr. COLEMAN of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I join Chairman WILLIAMS in supporting the consideration of H.R. 3315 under suspension of the rules. The Taft Institute honors the name of a great Republican and has, for the past 25 years, promoted the greater understanding of the American political process at all levels of government.

Through its "Seminars for Teachers," the Taft Institute has reached out to some 20,000 classroom teachers of history, social studies, and civics. These seminars bring these teachers into direct contact with politicians, party organizers, and government officials—representatives of the political process at the local, State, and Federal levels. These seminars are an important means of educating and inspiring those teachers who will themselves introduce literally thousands of students to the American political process. I know their effectiveness, because I participated in one of the Taft-sponsored seminars at the University of Missouri in Kansas City, MO, last year. I am one of almost 200 Members of Congress to have participated in this seminar program.

So, I join Chairman WILLIAMS in this final authorization of a program that works well and that will continue its important work in the future, as the Taft Institute increases its private sources of funding.

This authorization will provide a continued but declining level of support for the Taft Institute during a period of transition. As Federal funding is gradually reduced, it is our expectation that the institute will develop its private sources of support. We are all in agreement on this point. The purpose of continued funding is to provide for a stable phaseout of Federal support.

H.R. 3315 provides for 3 years of declining levels of Federal support, costing $1.5 million over 3 fiscal years, 1990 through 1992. Thereafter, there will be no further authorizations for appropriations for the Taft Institute.

I have been assured by the family of the late Senator Robert A. Taft and by representatives of the institute, that a 3-year phaseout will provide an acceptable and adequate period of transition, as the institute increases its fundraising efforts.

The Taft Institute is a fitting memorial to a great American political figure and has been worthy of our Federal support and encouragement. I think it is also fitting that we encourage, in this last reauthorization of the Taft Institute, private means to serve the public ends of responsible and knowledgeable citizenship.

Mr. GOODLING. Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Montana [Mr. WILLIAMS] that the House suspend the rules and pass the bill, H.R. 3315, as amended.

The question was taken; and (two-thirds having voted in favor thereof) the rules were suspended and the bill, as amended, was passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days in which to revise and extend their remarks on H.R. 3315, the bill just passed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Montana?

There was no objection.

CONFERENCE REPORT ON H.R. 2742, LIBRARY SERVICES AND CONSTRUCTION ACT AMENDMENTS OF 1990

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and agree to the conference report on the bill (H.R. 2742) to extend and amend the Library Services and Construction Act, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

(For conference report and statement, see prior proceedings of the House of today.)

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is a second demanded?

Mr. GOODLING. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, a second will be considered as ordered.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Montana [Mr. WILLIAMS] will be recognized for 20 minutes, and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GOODLING] will be recognized for 20 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Montana [Mr. WILLIAMS].

□ 1320

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I rise today to call for the adoption of the conference report to accompany H.R. 2742, the Library Services and Construction Act Amendments of 1990. The Library Services and Construction Act was the first, and continues to be the largest, Federal program of assistance specifically for public libraries. The act is designed to assist libraries in extending and improving services, to provide some support for library construction and renovation, to promote sharing of resources among libraries, to improve services to native Americans and to support library literacy programs.

It is important to note that while this conference agreement makes few changes to the existing law, it was drafted with the White House Conference on Libraries in mind. A portion of the funding needed for the 1990 conference has already been appropriated and planning for State and local level meetings that will preceed the national meeting has already begun. This conference process will provide the Congress with a comprehensive assessment of the needs of our Nation's libraries. The recommendations that will come from this meeting will serve as the basis for the next reauthorization of the LSCA programs in 1994.

This conference agreement broadens the current Library Services and Construction Act to encourage the use of new technologies to improve library services, adds additional literacy and child-centered activities in title I, and includes a variety of technical amendments to increase flexibility and efficiency to the programs. It also provides public libraries with the opportunity to become more involved with preservation efforts.

Finally, I note that this conference agreement closely reflects the original House passed legislation.

I urge my colleagues to adopt the conference report accompanying H.R. 2742.

KEY FEATURES OF H.R. 2742 LIBRARY SERVICES AND CONSTRUCTION ACT

SECTION 2: DEFINITIONS

This section of the bill updates various definitions used in the Act to reflect the current state of technologies used in public libraries. In addition, this section broadens the definition of the term "international" to emphasize the ability of public libraries to participate in library information networks that include both foreign and domestic libraries and information centers. The conferees note that this is not a change in current law. The term "international" was added in an effort to encourage libraries to provide the public with the broadest range of information services possible.

SECTION 5: ANTIDISCRIMINATION PROVISION

This section of the bill requires the State Library Administrative Agency to provide assurances that libraries receiving funds under the LSCA programs do not discriminate on the basis of race, religion, age, gender, national origin, or a handicapping condition in making space available to the public for meetings. The Committee recognizes that State Library Administrative Agencies are limited in their ability to regulate private libraries, therefore the provisions of this amendment apply only to public libraries receiving LSCA funds.

SECTION 7: MAINTENANCE OF EFFORT

This section of the bill modifies the system of evaluating a state's maintenance of effort in supporting public libraries. The Committee recognizes the importance of the maintenance of effort requirements in leveraging State support for public libraries. This modification is designed to preserve the maintenance of effort concept while also simplifying the reporting requirements for States and providing more flexibility in allowing States to reallocate funds to support new priorities.

SECTION 18: RESOURCE SHARING

This section of the bill encourages public and school libraries to cooperate in making school library resources available to the public during periods when school is not in session. While this is an allowable activity under current law, the Committee is hopeful that by making specific reference to this activity, more public libraries will explore developing cooperative relationships with school libraries such that school library resources will be available to the public yearround.

SECTION 20: MAXIMUM GRANTS UNDER TITLE V

This section of the bill amends Title V to increase the maximum grant size to $35,000 for 70 percent of the funds and $50,000 for 30 percent of the funds appropriated under this Title. The Committee recognizes the significant increase in the cost of purchasing foreign materials and therefore has increased the grant size to assist libraries in maintaining quality foreign materials collections.

SECTION 21: LIBRARY LITERACY GRANTS

The Library Literacy Grants program was created by the Library Services and Construction Act Amendments of 1984. (P.L. 98-480). Title IV received $4,737,000 in FY1986 and has been funded at or near its authorized level ever since that time. Reports on the program show it to be highly successful. In 1986, 217 local public libraries and 22 state libraries in 46 states were funded. These projects reached more than 48,400 adults. In subsequent years, the program has been equally successful. In FY 1989, 531 applications were received, but only 214 could be awarded with the $4,370,000 available. The Conferees are impressed with the record of success that this program has achieved in addressing the immense national problem of illiteracy. Title VI enables libraries to make their own unique contribution to such efforts, in coordination with other agencies and organizations. This bill increases the grant size under Title VI from $25,000 to $35,000. The Conferees hope that by raising the grant level some projects may be funded that permit the greater use of technology such that an even larger number of individuals may be reached by this program.

SECTION 22: TITLE VIII

Part A—Family Learning Centers

This section of the bill creates a discretionary grant program to support Family Learning Centers in public libraries. The Committee recognizes the important role that families play in supporting their childrens' education. By providing support through comprehensive family-oriented library services, the Committee hopes to strengthen this partnership.

Part B—Library Literacy Centers

This section of the bill creates a discretionary grant program to establish and support library literacy centers throughout the country to serve as resources centers for the dissemination of literacy materials in order to help overcome the high incidence of adults with limited literacy skills in the U.S. Such centers will provide adults with nonthreatening opportunities to learn to read either at home or in the library. In addition, such centers will assist adults with limited literacy skills in reaching full employment through literacy learning experiences at the public library. Funds awarded under this program may be used to purchase literacy training and resource materials and support staffing and personnel training to provide literacy services.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. GOODLING. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I join Chairman WILLIAMS and the ranking member of the Postsecondary Education Subcommittee, Mr. COLEMAN, in supporting the conference report of H.R. 2742, the Library Services and Construction Act. All major items of disagreement between the House and Senate versions of the LSCA have been resolved, and I support the swift adoption of the conference report on H.R. 2742, under the suspension of rules.

The LSCA is the largest program of Federal support to libraries. The LSCA is important to Pennsylvania and to all of the States, for it is essentially a State-based program, allowing in most cases individual States to determine both the process and projects funded under the act.

The result has been that States are able to tailor-make programs to meet local needs and priorities.

The use of Federal library funds as seed money to begin programs has been very important to Pennsylvania, expanding access to library services, particularly in rural areas; leveraging local funds for needed library construction and the installation of computer technology systems; providing increased funding for literary programs and particularly for literacy materials, in the absence of State funding; and creating the authority for statewide preservation plans for the conservation of library materials. Pennsylvania has some of the oldest libraries in the Nation, with some collections going back almost 250 years, and the need for such a preservation program has been long felt.

Further, the amendments to the LSCA strengthen the coordination between the States and the Department of Education, and provide an additional title for evaluation and assessment activities, incorporating one of the central recommendations of the administration's own library bill, the "Library Services and Improvement Act of 1989," which as ranking member, I introduced by request.

The administration's proposals for retargeting Federal support for libraries deserve serious consideration, but I join the chairman and the ranking member in wishing to await the recommendations of the White House Conference of Libraries before making basic changes in the federal role in expanding and improving library services.

In conclusion, I want to stress that the final conference report reflects strong bipartisan support for the Library Services and Construction Act amendments, both in the House and in the Senate. I would like to express my appreciation of the support of the Pennsylvania State librarian, Sarah Parker, and the other 48,000 librarians throughout the Nation, who have endorsed these amendments through the American Library Association.

Mr. COLEMAN of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to join Chairman WILLIAMS today to support, under suspension of the rules, the conference report on H.R. 2742, the Library Services and Construction Act Amendments of 1990.

The Library Services and Construction Amendments of 1989 have had strong bipartisan support. The LSCA Amendments of 1989 have been supported by the testimony of State and local librarians during hearings and have been endorsed by the American Library Association, representing over 48,000 librarians throughout the Nation. I would like to commend the library community for its support and participation in this reauthorization process.

H.R. 2742 makes technical changes to the LSCA, adds a new title IV, for assessment and evaluation of current programs, which was requested by the administration, and adds a new title VIII, for competitive grants for family learning centers providing family-oriented services in each State. Title VIII cannot be funded until all other titles have been funded.

The Library Services and Construction Act provides the majority of funds directly to State library agencies, which then tailor library programs which are responsive to the current, local needs of libraries in that State. Additionally, LSCA leverages State and local funds for public libraries, enlarging the impact of federally appropriated moneys.

LSCA funds are critical to the continued expansion of access to library materials and services, through such programs as resource sharing, improved delivery of materials, and through expanded services for the elderly and visually impaired.

This legislation will also assist libraries in coping with the growing problem of illiteracy in American communities. LSCA has provided roughly $1.5 million in the last year for grants for literacy programs in libraries, for materials, for training volunteer tutors, and for the coordination of literacy activities with other agencies working to combat illiteracy.

H.R. 2742, the Library Services and Construction Act Amendments of 1990, continues to provide both State and local librarians with the expanded resources and the flexibility to respond to these and other problems, such as the preservation of deteriorating library holdings and materials.

I join Chairman WILLIAMS in supporting the conference report on H.R. 2742. All items of difference between the House and Senate versions of the LSCA have been resolved to the satisfaction of the conferees, extending this Federal support program and the important library services it supports throughout the Nation.

Mr. OWENS of New York. Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong support of the conference report for the Library Services and Construction Act Amendments.

The conference report includes a more modest version of an amendment I offered in committee to establish a new title VII under LSCA to support family learning centers; $3 million would be authorized for this new program of competitive grants to local libraries in fiscal year 1991 and such sums in the succeeding 4 years.

These grants could be used by libraries to initiate, expand, or improve public library services to families. At least 25 percent of the funds are to be used for the acquisition of new books, and other resources and materials for children and their parents, including materials on child care, child development, and nutrition. Another 10 percent of the funds are to be used for the purchase of computer hardware and software for the use of library patrons.

Family learning center grants could also be used to support special library services geared to families, such as staying open on weekday nights, on weekends, and on some holidays to enable working parents to use the library with their children. Libraries could also establish a family library loan program through which families could borrow sets of books for extended periods, and set up other similarly innovative family-oriented programs and policies.

The conference report also includes an amendment I offered in committee which blocks the Department of Education from contracting out its research library before October 1991 to give the General Accounting Office and the Congress sufficient time to give this issue careful review. The Department's research library maintains one of the largest and most comprehensive education collections in the United States, second only to the Columbia University Teachers College Library. Its collection includes the complete archives of the Department and rare textbooks and other materials dating as far back as the 15th century.

The research library's impressive and unique collection represents over a century of hard work. The library began, in fact, with the personal collection of the very first Commissioner of Education. We have an obligation to assure that any decisions made about its future are made with the same care and consideration with which it has been administered over the past 100 years.

My amendment would bar the Department from proceeding with its current plans to contract out the library until after GAO has had an opportunity to carry out a study of the library's operations that is also required by the amendment. GAO is directed to review three particular concerns about the library's operations: First, the value of the library's unique collection to the educational community, historians, and others; second, possible alternatives for expanding public access to the library's resources; and third, ways in which current services to Department personnel can be improved.

With this information in hand, the Department and the Congress will be in a much better position to discuss alternatives for the library's future. It is the intention of the Subcommittee on Select Education, in particular, to review this issue again during our consideration of legislation to reauthorize the Office of Educational Research and Improvement in the next Congress.

In other areas, H.R. 2742 makes only modest changes in LSCA in the expectation that the 1991 White House Conference on Libraries will provide a forum to examine and discuss more substantive changes in Federal library policy. Librarians and library users in every State will have the opportunity to participate in this process and to help shape Federal library policy for the next century.

The conference report does, however, make a few important interim changes in LSCA which are necessary to help libraries cope with urgent problems in the areas of technology and preservation which we cannot afford to wait until 1994 to address.

Libraries of every type and size and in every part of the country are struggling to keep pace with recent rapid advances in information technology. With more and more information now being made available only through online databases, microfilm, compact disks, and in other machine-readable formats, keeping up with new technology has become essential to fulfilling the library's mission. But in era of tight operating budgets, few libraries have been able to pull together all of the resources they need to meet the large capital costs of new technology.

Last year I introduced legislation which would establish a new formula grant program under LSCA to provide assistance for the purchase and rental of new information technologies and to provide librarians with the training they need to use them effectively. I continue to believe that this is the kind of approach Federal policy will have to take in the future.

But in the interim H.R. 2742 does include new provisions designed to help libraries meet their technology needs. It permits State library agencies to use their title II construction grants for the purchase, installation, and maintenance of substantial new equipment and information technologies. It would be left up to the State agency's discretion how much, if any, of these funds are used for this purpose. As with construction projects, the non-Federal match for title II technology projects would be 50 percent. In addition, changes have been made in title I to permit these basic grant funds to be used to pay for staff training and other technical assistance libraries may need to meet their technology needs.

H.R. 2742 also includes amendments designed to assist libraries with the preservation of their collections. Experts now estimate that up to 80 percent to 90 percent of the books and other printed resources on the shelves of the Nation's libraries are printed on acidic paper and are thus vulnerable to deterioration and disintegration over the next few decades. This so-called slow fire in the stacks undermines the very capacity of the library to continue to act as the agent for universal, equal access to information in our society. We have made startling progress in the last 50 years in expanding and improving the services of our libraries and in making them accessible to unserved and underserved populations. Unless we act now to address the preservation needs of our libraries, we face the prospect of seeing all this progress quite literally turn to dust.

H.R. 2742 permits States to use a portion of their title III resource sharing and cooperation grants for preservation activities. With these new resources, States can begin to provide the practical training in preservation that is now needed by so many librarians working in the field. Assistance can be provided in evaluating the conditions of collections in local libraries and guidance offered about how best to meet the unique preservation needs of each community. Statewide planning can also be supported to minimize the waste of scarce resources and to assure that libraries' preservation efforts are well coordinated.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I want to commend Subcommittee Chairman PAT WILLIAMS and ranking minority member THOMAS COLEMAN for their hard work on this fine legislation.Their willingness to listen to and to work closely with librarians and library administrators during this reauthorization have won them many new friends and admirers in the library community.

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of the conference report on House Resolution 2742, the Library Services and Construction Act [LSCA].

Libraries have long been in the forefront of services to the community. Libraries make a major contribution to the quality of life for the entire family, young and old alike. The purpose of House Resolution 2742 is to provide financial and material assistance to public, school and college libraries. When appropriated, House Resolution 2742 will also keep the libraries in the cutting edge of information-sharing technology.

Title I, which authorizes $100 million, is the largest Federal assistance program specifically for libraries to expand the range of library services offered in the States. Title I provides funds for innovative services to previously unserved or underserved populations such as the elderly and the handicapped.

Under title II, the conferees agreed to authorize $55 million for construction to remove barriers for access by handicapped persons and to accommodate new information technologies, and to renovate historic buildings for use as public libraries.

Title III of the bill authorizes $35 million for inter-library cooperation and resource sharing. This has become an increasingly important part of the LSCA. Historically, title III has authorized grants to States for interlibrary loan programs. Currently, the program is helping with new forms of technology such as computer bibliographic systems that are communicated through telephone lines.

In addition to the three main titles LSCA will also authorize funds for foreign language materials and library literacy programs. The conferees also added a new title to provide funds for family learning centers.

The Library Services and Construction Act is a successful program that should be reauthorized. The reauthorization of House Resolution 2742 will help the library system as it faces challenges to maintain its high standards and meet the increasing needs for library services.

I urge my colleagues to support the conference report on House Resolution 2742.

Mr. GOODLING. Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members have 5 legislative days in which to revise and extend their remarks on the legislation before us.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. MAZZOLI). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Montana?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Montana [Mr. WILLIAMS] that the House suspend the rules and agrees to the conference report on the bill, H.R. 2742.

The question was taken.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, on that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to clause 5, rule I, and the Chair's prior announcement, further proceeding on this motion will be postponed.

CONCERNING IRANIAN PERSECUTION OF THE BAHA'IS

Mr. DYMALLY. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and agree to the concurrent resolution (H. Con. Res. 87) concerning Iranian persecution of the Baha'is.

The Clerk read as follows:

H. CON. RES. 87

Whereas in 1982, 1984, and 1988, the Congress, by concurrent resolution, declared that it holds the Government of Iran responsible for upholding the rights of all its nationals, including members of the Baha'i Faith, Iran's largest religious minority;

Whereas in such resolutions and in numerous other appeals, the Congress condemned the Iranian Government's persecution of Baha'is, including the execution of more than 200 Baha'is and the imprisonment of additional thousands on account of their religious beliefs;

Whereas the Congress has urged the President to work with other governments and with the United Nations in support of the rights of Iranian Baha'is;

Whereas recent reports indicate a decline in the numbers of Baha'is executed or imprisoned in Iran and the restoration of some confiscated business and personal properties; and

Whereas despite such actions affecting individual Baha'is, the Government of Iran continues to deny the Baha'i community the right to organize, select its leaders, acquire and maintain places of worship or assembly, operate religious schools, and conduct other religious activities: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the Congress—

(1) continues to hold the Government of Iran responsible for upholding the rights of all its nationals, including Baha'is, in a manner consistent with that Government's obligations under international law which guarantee the civil and political rights of its citizens;

(2) acknowledges reports of recent improvements in the treatment of individual Baha'is, including a decline in the number of executions and the release of many Baha'is imprisoned on religious charges;

(3) express concern that the Baha'i community as a whole remains an oppressed minority which is denied legal recognition and internationally recognized rights which would permit Baha'is to organize, hold property, operate religious schools, and conduct the normal activities of a peaceful law-abiding religious community;

(4) urges the Government of Iran to extend to the Baha'i community the rights guaranteed by the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and other relevant human rights accords, including freedom of thought, conscience and religion, education, and equal protection of the law; and

(5) calls upon the President to continue—

(A) to emphasize the need for improvements in the Government of Iran's human rights practices, particularly Iran's treatment of Baha'is and other religious minorities, as an important factor in the development of the United States Government's relations with the Government of Iran;

(B) to encourage other governments to continue to appeal to the Government of Iran concerning the situation of the Baha'is;

(C) to cooperate with other governments and international organizations in joint appeals and to initiate and support actions by the United Nations and its agencies to promote the protection of the religious rights of Baha'is; and

(D) to provide, and to urge others to provide, for refugee and humanitarian assistance for those Baha'is who flee their homelands on account of religious repression.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the rule, a second is not required on this motion.

The gentleman from California [Mr. DYMALLY] will be recognized for 20 minutes and the gentleman from New York [Mr. GILMAN] will be recognized for 20 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from California [Mr. DYMALLY].

Mr. DYMALLY. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I rise to give my whole hearted support to House Concurrent Resolution 87 which timely concerns itself with the continued persecution of the Baha'is by the present regime in Iran.

It is important to note that the persecution of this group is unfortunately symbolic of the general and pervasive atmosphere of repression and persecution that permeate the very social fabric of the Iranian society.

During the latter part of January of this year, a special representative of the United Nations visited Iran for the first time, to investigate human rights violations which it had collectively condemned by numerous resolutions and unsuccessful requests for U.N. team visits over the past 8 years. The November 1989 U.N. report to the General Assembly was particularly catalytic in dramatizing with vivid cases, the nature and extent of human rights violations in Iran. These included summary arrests and imprisonment without charges, of thousands of Iranians with particular emphasis on the repressive, dehumanizing and inhumane treatment of women.

It was apparent during the visit of the U.N. delegation to Iran that, because of the enormity of human rights violations and the willingness of thousands of Iranians to risk reprisals and to brave the inclement weather to be a witness to these atrocities, a week's time frame was most inadequate. For example, more than 1,000 families who were victims of the Iranian regime, staged a sit-in in front of the U.N. office to describe their sufferings and ordeals to the U.N. delegation, in spite of a total news blackout on the U.N. delegation's visit, but with the help of the widely listened to resistance radio and foreign broadcasts.

As a consequences, in a day and a half, 30 of my colleagues joined me in requesting an extension of the time frame from the U.N. Secretary General. The delegation, for reasons of logistics had to return after a week but plans a followup visit in the very near future after it has presented its findings to the current session of the U.N. Human Rights Commission to be followed by a joint resolution.

State sponsored terrorism, reaffirmed by the continued call for the death of British author Rushdie 1 year after Khomeini's death, is still the order of the day in Iran.

It is, therefore, not surprising that there is growing opposition, internally and externally, to the present Iranian regime and its inhumane atrocities. For example, the 23-nation parliamentary assembly of the Council of Europe has called for the expulsion of the present Iranian regime from the United Nations and the immediate recognition of the Iranian resistance led by Massoud Rajavi. This movement is gaining more and more adherents and increasing as the legitimate representative of the Iranian people. A resolution by the European Parliament and a memorandum signed by me and 185 of you, my colleagues, takes the same position.

The winds of change taking place in the Soviet Union and Eastern Europe and the growing support to the Mojahedin resistance indicate that the time has come for the international community to further the isolation and eventual fall of the present Iranian regime with, among other actions, an effective international arms and oil boycott. The move toward democracy and the justice and human rights in Iran will, thereby, be greatly facilitated.

Broad support of this resolution will, without question, convey this important message to the world community.

□ 1330

Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. YATRON], the chairman of the Subcommittee on Human Rights and International Organizations of the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

Mr. YATRON. Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong support of House Concurrent Resolution 87, which has 145 cosponsors. This initiative was approved by the Subcommittee on Human Rights and International Organizations on January 31, and the Foreign Affairs Committee on February 6. To facilitate the passage of this resolution, which has the support of the administration, Chairman HAMILTON and Congressman GILMAN of the Subcommittee on Europe and the Middle East waived their jurisdiction. I thank them for their support in this effort.

I want to commend the ranking minority member of the subcommittee, Congressman BEREUTER, for joining me in authoring this resolution. I want to also commend Chairman FASCELL and Congressman BROOMFIELD for their leadership in bringing this legislation to the floor.

Mr. Speaker, House Concurrent Resolution 87 calls upon the President to continue to emphasize the need for improvement in the Government of Iran's human rights record, particularly its treatment of Baha'is and other religious minorities. It asks the President to cooperate with other governments at the United Nations and in other joint efforts to protect the religious rights of the Baha'is, and to provide for humanitarian assistance for those Baha'is who flee their homeland.

The Subcommittee on Human Rights has held extensive hearings on the Baha'is and the Congress has passed several resolutions concerning Iranian persecution of this religious minority. The Baha'is are a gentle and peace-loving people, who espouse equality and education. Yet they have been the victims of the most severe kinds of repression. They have been imprisoned, tortured and killed for their religious beliefs. Although they constitute the largest religious minority in Iran, their religion is not recognized and their places of worship destroyed. Their marriages are not sanctioned and their children are denied college education. All opportunities to seek redress are closed, and due process rights are not provided.

The State Department's just-released human rights report documents ongoing human rights violations against the Baha'is which underscores the fact that despite the change in leadership in Tehran, Iran's human rights record continues to be one of the worst in the world.

The resolution is most timely in light of the recent U.N. special rapporteur's visit to Iran. Due largely to the leadership of the National Spiritual Assembly of the Baha'is community of the United States, the world community, including the United Nations has focused considerable attention on the plight of the Baha'is. Although they are still subjected to government-sponsored repression, recent efforts by the international community, including congressional resolutions, have resulted in a reduction of killing of Baha'is. However, much more needs to be done if the Baha'is are to live free of persecution.

Mr. Speaker, it is my hope that the passage of the resolution, the recent U.N. investigation, and the consideration of a human rights resolution at the current session of the Human Rights Commission at Geneva will continue to effectively pressure the Iranian Government.

Mr. Speaker, at this point, I would like to insert into the RECORD an excerpt of an exchange of views between Chairman FASCELL and Congressman LAGOMARSINO from a recent hearing. In this colloquy, both our colleagues spoke to the importance of congressional human rights resolutions and the positive impact that they have on countries in which they are directed.

I urge my colleagues to support this resolution.

EXCERPT OF EXCHANGE OF VIEWS BETWEEN CHAIRMAN FASCELL AND CONGRESSMAN LAGOMARSINO

Chairman FASCELL. Let the Chair express his appreciation to the Chairman of the Western Hemisphere Subcommittee, the ranking member and the gentleman from California for taking this action.

Expressing the opinion of the Congress with regard to the situation in Haiti is absolutely essential, as it is with the other actions that we have taken.

Some people, unfortunately, still think that there is no weight in what we say in these resolutions or that in some way it is a useless exercise. When the Congress through this committee takes action and speaks, especially in a unified voice, with regard to an action in any country in the world, it has great impact, and considerable power. It is important for us, as representatives of the people of this country, to take positions after due deliberation and debate. People are entitled to know where we stand and where this country stands.

People still argue about sanctions. I do not know that history will ever support the idea that sanctions are helpful in bringing about social or political change. I think they do.

But one thing is certainly very clear: that we need to speak, whether it is by resolution or legislation, with respect to a position which we know is morally right. It has tremendous strength and power in the world, even more so than steel.

So, I am happy to join the gentleman in sponsorship of this resolution.

Mr. LAGOMARSINO. Mr. Chairman, would you yield?

Chairman FASCELL. Mr. Lagomarsino, of course.

Mr. LAGOMARSINO. I wanted to just commend you for the statement you have made and to say that I think you are absolutely right. Every time that I go to a foreign country I am absolutely amazed at how much the people in that country know about what is going on here, whether they hear about it on the CNN or it is read.

Chairman FASCELL. They have read these resolutions. That is for sure.

Mr. LAGOMARSINO. They sure have.

Chairman FASCELL. Yes.

Mr. LAGOMARSINO. And maybe if the governments are not paying attention, the people sure are.

Mr. GILMAN. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have been an original cosponsor of this House Concurrent Resolution 87, which now has 145 cosponsors. For far too long, the Baha'i community in Iran has been oppressed by the Government of Iran.

We take note of recent progress with respect to Iran's treatment of individual members of the Baha'i faith, but we call upon the Iranian Government to institutionalize human rights and religious rights for their largest religious minority group.

It is my sincere hope that this congressional action will inspire the U.N. Human Rights Commission, now meeting in Geneva, to press the Iranian Government to abandon, once and for all, its persecution of these peaceful people.

I noted in today's newspapers that the U.N. Human Rights Commission rapporteur, assigned to examine the human rights situation in Iran, submitted what has been called a mildly critical report as allegedly part of a deal to help secure the release of 17 Western hostages in Lebanon—including 8 Americans. While I do not take a back seat to anyone desiring to obtain the release of those hostages, we still must not turn a deaf year to the human rights plight of an entire nation. The international community must continue in its position of holding Iran accountable for its human rights violations, and to continue to urge that it make progress in this important area.

Permit me to thank American Baha'i spokesman, Prof. Firuz Kazemzadeh, for his outstanding articulation of the plight of the Baha'is. Let me also thank the distinguished chairman, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. YATRON] of the Subcommittee on Human Rights and International Organizations, as well as his ranking minority member, the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. BEREUTER], for their outstanding work on this critical issue.

Mr. Speaker, I urge our colleagues to support House Concurrent Resolution 87 and to once again send a strong message to Iran and the Baha'i people that we continue to care about the human rights situation in Iran, and the suffering of the Baha'i people.

Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PORTER], the cochairman of the Human Rights Caucus and an initial cosponsor of this measure and a longtime fighter for human rights in this House.

Mr. PORTER. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from New York for yielding this time to me and for his leadership in the Congress on all matters concerning human rights, as I do also thank the gentlemen from Pennsylvania, New York, and California for their leadership.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong support of House Concurrent Resolution 87, concerning the continued persecution of the Baha'is in Iran.

As in years past, we are here today to send a message to the Government of Iran that the fundamental rights of the 300,000 members of the Baha'i community must be respected. Despite the death of Ayatollah Khomeini and reports in the Western media that overall conditions for human rights in Iran have improved recently, the Baha'i community continues to be oppressed for being a heresy under Islamic fundamentalist law.

Members of the Baha'i faith are a peaceful, law-abiding community, not a misguided sect seeking to subvert the Iranian Government as they have been portrayed. Today, they constitute the largest religious minority in Iran. Yet for many long, dark years, they have been denied their religious rights. They have been denied their legal rights as citizens of Iran. They have been denied their human rights. And in some cases, they have been denied their right to life itself.

Under Ayatollah Khomeini's rule, thousands of Iranian Baha'is were imprisoned and many of them were tortured. Hundreds of thousands were denied employment and education. And more than 200 Baha'is, including women and children, were executed solely for their religious beliefs.

The recently released State Department Report on Human Rights states that no Baha'is were executed last year, and that the number of Baha'is held in prison fell to fewer than 15. This is very encouraging news and is a testament to the effect that international condemnations have had on the Iranian regime. However, Baha'is are still not a legally recognized religion in Iran and are still imprisoned for their religious beliefs, denied the right to organize, select their leaders, acquire and maintain places of worship, operate religious schools, or conduct religious activities.

Clearly, this is an intolerable situation, and we must not allow this suppression to continue. Instead, we must speak out, as we are today, and appeal to the nations of the world to condemn this continuing persecution. I urge the United Nations Human Rights Commission, currently meeting in Geneva, to adopt a resolution on the condition of human rights in Iran with specific focus on the treatment of the Baha'i community.

The concept of religious freedom is a principle that all Americans hold dear, as do many other nations around the world. Unfortunately, Iran does not yet adhere to this concept. Only through actions by the U.S. Congress, the United Nations, and others can we hope to help end the continuing persecution of the Baha'i people and secure their right to freedom of worship as guaranteed in international law.

Mr. YATRON. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from California [Mr. LANTOS], a leader on human rights issues in the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

Mr. LANTOS. Mr. Speaker, first, I would like to pay tribute to the distinguished chairman of the Human Rights Subcommittee, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. YATRON], for his outstanding leadership on all human rights issues, and to the ranking minority member, the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. BEREUTER], and to my friend, the cochairman of the Congressional Human Rights Caucus, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PORTER], who has been the leader in this fight for human rights for Baha'is.

Mr. Speaker, at a time when there are human rights improvements throughout the globe, with a few notable exceptions, the tragic case of the Baha'is stands out as a disgraceful spectacle of a peaceful, gentle people being persecuted purely for their religious faith.

Although the number of Baha'is under active persecution has been somewhat reduced during the course of 1989, the fact remains that men, women, and children of the Baha'i faith—for no reason whatever except their religious faith—are continuously under persecution, discrimination, harassment, and worse in Iran.

Mr. Speaker, I was particularly shocked a few days ago when, in honor of the 11th anniversary of the Iranian revolution, amnesty was announced for all kinds of criminals, but a few groups were excluded. Let me tell my colleagues who those groups are who were excluded. Those groups are armed robbers, rapists, drug dealers, those guilty of multiple burglaries, armed opponents of the government, and members of the Baha'i sect.

The ultimate arrogance of the Iranian regime to lump together drug dealers, burglars, rapists, with a group of individuals whose sole crime it is to worship the Almighty in their own way tells us volumes about the values of the Iranian regime.

Mr. Speaker, for over a decade we have pleaded for equal rights in the religious arena for members of the Baha'i faith. We are sending word to the government in Iran that we will not go away. We will continue to raise the Baha'i issue year after year after year, just as we raised the issue of the Soviet dissidents and refuseniks, just as we raised the issue of Lech Walesa in Poland, just as we raised the issue of the distinguished President of Czechoslovakia who addressed us assembled in joint session just a few days ago, President Vaclav Havel. Just as President Havel got out of jail, just as his persecution came to an end because of his own courage and because men and women in free societies spoke out on his behalf, just as Lech Walesa stopped being the persecuted trade union leader and became the acknowledged leader of the Polish people who was received by the President of the United States and addressed a joint session of Congress, I look forward to the day—not far in the future—when the members of the Baha'i faith will have their full religious rights restored to them and they will be accepted as fully equal members of Iranian society.

Mr. MFUME. Mr. Speaker, I rise to support the measure House Concurrent Resolution 87, which expresses the sense of the Congress that we are concerned that the Baha'i community as a whole remains an oppressed minority in Iran, and urges the Government of Iran to extend considerable human rights to members of the Baha'i community.

The Baha'i people are the largest religious minority group in Iran and yet the plight of the Baha'is and the atrocities that they have suffered have gone unrecognized by the Iranian Government. Additionally, many Members of the House of Representatives have written to the Iranian Government asking them to provide an account of the Baha'is allegations of human rights abuses. Unfortunately, these queries have also fallen upon deaf ears since I, at least, have yet to receive a substantive explanation as to why the Baha'i people have had to endure such gruesome hardships.

The Baha'i are known to be very friendly people who stress the importance of not only education and equality, but many Baha'is have committed themselves to eradicating slavery. It has been reported by the special representative to the United Nations Commission on Human Rights that between 1979 and 1985 there were 7,000 reported executions in Iran. I say reported because only God knows how many innocent people died at the hands of the secret executions that did not receive coverage from the Iranian media.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, we should not ease the pressure on Iran's international isolation until the latest revolutionary government comes clean and accounts for its human rights violations against the Baha'is and other individuals who may not have agreed with the Ayatollah, nor his regime's totalitarian rhetoric.

Mrs. MEYERS of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong support of House Concurrent Resolution 87. The Government of Iran's treatment of the Baha'is ranks among the worst repressions directed at a religious minority in history.

Iran has stripped from the Baha'i faith even recognition as a religion. Because the Baha'i faith developed as an offshoot of Islam, the mullahs declare it to be a heresy and adherents to be infidels, deprived of any protection under the law. Baha'is are barred from public employment and their organizations are banned. This pacific, law-abiding religious community has suffered unspeakable persecution from the government, in blatant violation of religious rights guaranteed by international law.

Congress has passed resolutions such as this three times previously, and they have had a positive effect on Iran's behavior. In 1989, no Baha'is were executed, and the number of Baha'is in prison has dropped to 15. Yet this is not nearly enough. The Baha'is should have all of their rights restored to them, and I believe Congress should continue to speak out until this occurs.

Mr. LEHMAN of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I have been aware and involved in congressional appeals on behalf of religious minorities in Iran since the hostage crisis several years ago. I would like to express my support again today for the Baha'i community in Iran who continue to be an oppressed minority. Two hundred Baha'is were executed for their religious beliefs since the Islamic regime took over in 1979. That no Baha'is have been killed since 1987 attests to the effect that international pressure and publicity critical of Iranian human rights practices have had.

Nevertheless, those who practice the Baha'i faith in Iran must do so in secrecy; they are denied the right to organize or conduct relgious schools; they are still represseed. I believe that passage of House Concurrent Resolution 87, expressing concern about the Baha'is in Iran and urging the Government of Iran to extend relevant human rights to members of the Baha'i community will send an important message to Iran. If Iran is to return to the community of civilized nations, it must be willing to respect its own citizens.

Mr. BERMAN. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in support of House Concurrent Resolution 87, a resolution that once again will reaffirm our support for the Baha'i community in its struggle to secure basic human rights from the Iranian Government.

Since the Iranian revolution of 1979, hundreds of Baha'is have been executed or imprisoned because of their faith. The recently released State Department human rights report documents that this repression continues. The Iranian Government, in the past year has systematically and ruthlessly attempted to expunge the practice of the Baha'i faith and repress its adherents.

However, one thing is clear, the Iranian Government does respond when the civilized world records its outrage at their actions.

There were no executions of Baha'is last year and the number of those imprisoned has dropped to below 15. I have no doubt that previous condemnations of Iranian actions by this House have contributed significantly to that decline.

The United Nations Commission on Human Rights will vote on Iran during the coming month. It is imperative that we send a signal loud and clear that we unreservedly condemn Iranian repression of Baha'is and demand that the community be granted its basic rights to practice freely as guaranteed by international law.

Mr. Speaker, I therefore ask my colleagues to join with me in supporting this resolution.

Mr. STARK. Mr. Speaker, I strongly support House Concurrent Resolution 87, expressing our outrage for the continued mistreatment of people of the Baha'i faith in Iran.

People of the Baha'i faith in Iran, that country's largest religious minority, are law-abiding citizens in Iran as well as the 144 other countries and territories in which they live. The Baha'i raise their children on principles which instill discipline, respect, education, and freedom. They do not engage in public demonstrations or in subversive activities against any group or government. Iranian Baha'is, in keeping with Baha'i teachings, do not engage in political activity and are committed to obey their country's civil law.

Although the conditions in Iran for the Baha'is have improved from extreme persecution, they continue to face significant harassment. For example, the Baha'i faith is still not recognized by the Iranian Government; no organized Baha'i activity is allowed; no right of access to holy places is permitted; and community property is confiscated.

In light of these examples, the Iranian Government is far from recognizing the fundamental principle of religious freedom. This is the third resolution the House of Representatives has considered on the human rights violations of the Baha'i in the past 10 years. I hope that passage of this resolution will send a message to the leaders of Iran about the importance of human rights. The House of Representatives should continue to denounce the actions of the Iranian Government for their gross mistreatment of the Baha'is by passing this resolution.

Until the persecution of the Baha'is ends, I will oppose any normalization of trade and economic relations between Iran and the United States. We should treat their pistachios, rugs, and oil the same way they treat the peace-loving Baha'is.

Mrs. MORELLA. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to be a cosponsor of this important resolution, which refocuses our attention on Iranian human rights violations committed against the embattled Baha'i religious minority. More than 200 Iranian Baha'is have been executed since the Iranian revolution in 1979, and there has been little change in official attitudes toward the Baha'i community since the death of Ayatollah Khomeini. Baha'is continue to be persecuted solely on the basis of their religious beliefs.

We are here today to put Tehran on notice that the U.S. Congress, as it has in previous years, continues to hold the Iranian Government responsible for assuring the basic human, civil, and political rights of all of its citizens. I welcome some recent reports that show some improvement in the treatment of Baha'is, including a decline in executions and the release of some Baha'is who had been imprisoned for religious reasons.

Yet there can be no doubt that the Baha'i community as a whole remains a brutally repressed minority. The Iranian regime denies Baha'is legal recognition and internationally recognized rights. By virtue of this repression, Baha'is are restricted from organizing, holding property, operating religious schools, or engaging in other activities normally conducted by such peaceful and law-abiding religious groups.

Iranian repression of the Baha'is constitutes a gross violation of the universal declaration of human rights. Iranians should be guaranteed freedom of thought, conscience and religion, education, and equal protection of the law. The United States Government should regard Iran's human rights record as a principal factor in our relations with that country, and we should work with other governments and international organizations in support of the human rights of Baha'is and other Iranian minorities. In the meantime, we and others should continue to provide necessary assistance to Baha'is fleeing their homeland because of religious repression.

Mr. HALL of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of House Concurrent Resolution 87, a resolution introduced by my colleague, Representative YATRON, which condemns the continued Iranian persecution of members of the Baha'i faith. As an original cosponsor of the resolution and a member of the Congressional Human Rights Caucus, I strongly support this public condemnation of Iranian abuse of human rights.

In the past 8 years, the Iranian Government has executed more than 200 Baha'is and imprisoned thousands. It has refused to allow the Baha'is, Iran's largest religious minority, such basic rights as the election of its leaders, the operation of its schools, and the acquisition and maintenance of its places of worship.

International pressure on the Iranian Government may be working. In 1982, 1984, and 1988, Congress passed resolutions similar to the measure we are considering today urging the Iranian Government to end the harassment of the Baha'is. During this same time period the Iranian Government has scaled down its attacks on the peaceful Baha'i community. Last year no Baha'is were killed and fewer than 15 were imprisoned.

House Concurrent Resolution 87 declares that Iran is responsible for maintaining and protecting the human rights of all its citizens regardless of their race or religion. Although Iran has improved its record of human rights abuses, this resolution expresses concern that Iran continues to deny the Baha'i community many of the legal rights required under international law. The resolution urges the President to continue to support and emphasize the need for further improvements in Iran's human rights record. Finally, the resolution expresses the sense of Congress that the United States Government should continue to provide assistance for Baha'is who leave Iran because of religious persecution.

I have met with members of the Baha'i faith of the Miami Valley in my district who have expressed to me their concern for the Baha'is of Iran. It is tragic that a group of people should be forced to suffer the kinds of human rights denials that the Baha'is have had to endure. That is why I urge you to support House Concurrent Resolution 87 and vote to send a clear message to the Iranian Government that we do not approve of their treatment of the Baha'is.

Mr. FASCELL. Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong support of the resolution.

The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. YATRON] is to be commended for again calling to the attention of the Congress the cruel persecution of adherents to the Baha'i faith by the Government of Iran.

Given the sorry record of United States-Iranian relations over the last decade I suspect that many in Iran may be tempted to dismiss American concerns over the Baha'is as part of some nefarious scheme to discredit Iran. That is simply not true. I and other Members of Congress are here representing the commitment of the American people to a fundamental proposition on which our own country is based: freedom of conscience. We are committed deeply and irrevocably to the idea that each human being has the inherent right to judge for himself his own relation to the Almighty by any name. And we believe with that individual human right comes the right to those activities of worship and education common to all religion. This is not some American notion about human rights; it is a human right enshrined in the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and recognized by most nations, including the Soviet Union.

The Baha'i community in the United States is small. Of a population of 250 million there are only 110,000 Baha'is here. When I first heard of the plight of the Baha'is in Iran I knew nothing of their religion but study revealed that their's is a gentle and sincere religion asking only to be left alone at peace. The widespread support they have gotten in Congress stems not from their political strength but from the instant response all Americans feel for those who suffer simply because they have a different religious belief.

The Government of Iran has done despicable things to adherents of the Baha'i faith, killing even small children. The Government has tried to stamp out a religion using every kind of trumped up charge imaginable from treason to petty crimes. I know that such horror perpetrated in the name of the Iranian people does not represent their wishes or the tenets of Islam. Yet ultimately it is the Iranian people whose silence allows these horrors to continue.

Recently the United Nations Human Rights Commission was allowed to have a representative visit Iran. At its current meeting in Geneva the Commission is scheduled to consider the human rights situation in Iran. The Commission must speak up strongly in condemnation of the Iranian Government's treatment of the Baha'is.

I hope that the Iranian authorities will reconsider the case of the Baha'i community in Iran and find as I have that they are a peaceful people seeking only to follow their own conscience. Iran must stop killing innocent people if it is to regain the respect of the world community.

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, as cosponsor of the resolution, House Concurrent Resolution 87, introduced by my good friends, GUS YATRON and DOUG BEREUTER, I rise today calling for its unanimous approval by the House. Mr. Speaker, this resolution urges the Government of Iran to guarantee the rights of conscience and religion, and equal protection of the law, for its Baha's community.

While more than 200 Baha'is were executed and many thousands imprisoned during the cruel rule of Ayatollah Khomeini, I am encouraged by the report that no executions have been recorded since his death. Nonetheless, the Baha'is continue to face discrimination, restrictions, and denials, such as the right to select their own leaders, operate religious schools, or conduct religious activities.

Mr. Speaker, the U.S. Government highlighted the lack of religious tolerance in Iran at the United Nations Human Rights Commission on February 13. During the debate on religious intolerance, as congressional representative of the U.S. delegation to the United Nations, I had the honor of presenting the U.S. statement on religious intolerance. As noted at that time, the Iranian officials maintain their policy of restrictions on the Baha'i community. The United Nations Human Rights Commission, I believe, has a real responsibility to maintain the level of concern internationally and promote a genuine respect for religious tolerance.

Iran stands in stark contrast to the positive developments which have been seen in Eastern Europe and the Soviet Union. While the economic and political structural changes have not been codified in these countries, the religious communities have begun to experience much greater freedom. Mr. Speaker, I commend the sponsors of this resolution today for having introduced this measure so that the level of concern is maintained in the United States Congress and emphasis is given to improvements in human rights practices in Iran, such as religious freedom, in United States relations with the Government of Iran.

Mr. BEREUTER. Mr. Speaker, according to the State Department human rights report that was released last week, Iran continues to be a major violator of human rights. The report notes that the Islamic government's hold on power is achieved through "arrests, summary trials and executions, and other forms of intimidation implemented by an extensive internal security system."

It is hard to draw an accurate picture because Iran has no procedural safeguards to guarantee basic human rights, and because the fundamentalist regime has very tight control on the flow of information. It is clear, however, that tens of thousands have suffered at the hands of Iran's revolutionary tribunals.

Earlier this month, Mr. Speaker, an investigating team from the United Nations Human Rights Commission conducted a brief investigation of conditions in Iran. It is altogether fitting, therefore, that this body choose this time to consider House Concurrent Resolution 87, concerning Iran's systematic persecution of the Baha'i religious sect.

The Baha'i religion is an offshoot of Islam, and is not officially recognized by the Iranian Government. Instead, they consider the Baha'is to be a misguided and heretical sect—something to be stamped out. And over the years, the fundamentalist regime in Iran has done its very best to do just that.

Since the 1979 revolution when Khomeini came to power, hundreds of Baha'is have been executed or imprisoned because of their faith. Baha'is have systematically been denied the normal benefits of society, such as access to education, the right to travel, the ability to inherit property, and even—on occasion—the right to purchase food.

This resolution demonstrates the continuing commitment of the United States Congress to press for respect of religious minorities in Iran. Resolutions concerning the Baha'is have been passed by both Houses of the Congress in 1982, 1986, and again in 1988. The resolution we are considering today has 139 cosponsors, demonstrating the overwhelming support of this resolution.

Mr. Speaker, this Member would bring to your attention the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. YATRON] whose tireless efforts on the behalf of the Baha'is have made this resolution possible. I also would like to voice my appreciation to Chairman HAMILTON of the Subcommittee on Europe and the Middle East, and ranking member GILMAN of that subcommittee, for acting in a timely and expeditious manner on this important resolution, and for the chairman and ranking member of the Foreign Affairs Committee, Mr. FASCELL and Mr. BROOMFIELD. Truly, Mr. Speaker, this is a bipartisan effort that enjoys overwhelming support.

As an original cosponsor of this resolution—along with Chairman YATRON—this Member would urge adoption of this resolution.

Mr. BROOMFIELD. Mr. Speaker, for the past several years, the Congress has expressed its support of the rights of the followers of the Baha'i faith. We have condemned the persecution that has been inflicted upon the Baha'is, and stated that we hold the Government of Iran responsible for upholding the rights of all its nationals, including members of the Baha'i faith, Iran's largest religious minority.

There has been limited progress by Iran in respecting the rights of individual Baha'is. The number of executions and imprisonments of Baha'is and the confiscation of their property has decreased.

Yet despite these steps, the persecution of Baha'is as a group has not ceased. Through House Concurrent Resolution 87, before us today, we continue to express our concern regarding the persecution of these people. The resolution recognizes the progress that has been made. However, it also points to the need for continued work in support of the universally recognized human rights of the Baha'is and all people. The resolution urges further progress by Iran that would allow the Baha'is to organize, hold property, operate religious schools, and conduct the normal activities of a peaceful law-abiding religious community.

Mr. Speaker, I wish to congratulate Congressmen YATRON and BEREUTER for their leadership in this matter. Their persistence has helped make possible progress that has been made so far. I also wish to congratulate our chairman, Congressman FASCELL, for bringing this resolution before us today.

As a cosponsor of this resolution, I urge our colleagues to support House Concurrent Resolution 87 and to continue to send an important dual message of support to the people of the Baha'i faith, and accountability to the Government of Iran.

Mr. FEIGHAN. Mr. Speaker, as a cosponsor of House Concurrent Resolution 87, I urge my colleagues to support this resolution. The resolution expresses the sense of Congress that the Government of Iran extend to the members of the Baha'i community, the largest religious minority within Iran, the human rights to which all human beings are entitled. The resolution also urges the President to support the plight of the Baha'is through cooperation with other governments and the United Nations. We must support this resolution and show that we will not stand and watch as a foreign government abuses its citizens.

The Baha'i vision is one in which no religion is preeminent; no one religion can call itself the one true faith, for each religion is a facet of what can be called the truth. This view has placed the Baha'is at odds with much of the Islamic community. This conflict has been exemplified by the persecution of Baha'is by the Government of Iran. There are 300,000 Baha'is in Iran, and since the fall of the Shah in 1979, they have borne the brunt of Iranian religious fervor. More than 200 Baha'is have been executed. By 1982 all Baha'i students had been expelled from Iranian universities. Some believers were even forced to repay salaries and pensions earned under the earlier regime. This pattern of persecution was endemic during the early years of the Khomeini government.

Recently, conditions for the Baha'is have improved slightly. No Baha'is have been executed since 1987, and fewer than 20 Baha'is remain in prison. The Baha'is can now also reapply for school. Although persecution has not been so consistent in recent years, the Baha'is still experience discrimination.

The internationally community has consistently addressed the plight of the Baha'is through the United Nations. Between 1985 and 1988 the United Nations adopted four resolutions specifically mentioning the Baha'is and condemning Iran's human rights record. For each of the last 8 years, the United Nations Commission on Human Rights and the United Nations Economic and Social Council have adopted resolutions concerning Iran's human rights record.

The Congress has also made a concerted effort to address Iranian abuse of the Baha'is. Congress adopted concurrent resolutions pertaining to Iranian human rights abuses and the Baha'is in 1982, 1984, and 1988. In addition, the Reagan administration repeatedly expressed support for the Baha'is, and I hope that the Bush administration will, upon passage of this resolution, continue our historical support for the Baha'is.

We tend to forget that Iran is not a homogenous country, that there are minority populations within the country that are as dissatisfied with the current government as the international community. We rightly concentrate on the connection between Iran and international terrorism, for Iranian controlled terrorist organizations such as Hezbollah control the lives of America hostages. But we must also remember the Baha'is, for the Iranian Government's atrocious foreign policy is only an extension of its domestic policy, a domestic policy which justifies persecution of minority populations based on religious differences.

A recent report by Mr. Reynaldo Galindo-Pohl, the United Nations Special Rapporteur for Human Rights in Iran, supports the purpose of this resolution. All religious shrines and many properties remain confiscated. In addition, Baha'is are rarely admitted to universities. It is still illegal to practice the Baha'is faith, for the Zoroastrian, Christian, and Jewish faiths are the only constitutionally recognized religious minorities. In his report the special rapporteur did state that the situation for the Baha'is was approaching de facto tolerance; he added, however, that continued monitoring was necessary due to past and current discrimination against the Baha'is.

Again, I urge my colleagues to support this resolution. The Iranian Government must know that the Government of the United States has not forgotten the Baha'is. The commitment that this resolution demonstrates is simple and thorough; the United States is committed to human rights, and the status of the Baha'is is no exception.

Mr. BEREUTER. Mr. Speaker, according to the State Department Human Rights Report that was released last week, Iran continues to be a major violator of human rights. The report notes that the Islamic government's hold on power is achieved through "arrests, summary trials and executions, and other forms of intimidation implemented by an extensive internal security system."

It is hard to draw an accurate picture because Iran has no procedural safeguards to guarantee basic human rights, and because the fundamentalist regime has very tight control on the flow of information. It is clear, however, that tens of thousands have suffered at the hands of Iran's revolutionary tribunals.

Mr. YATRON. Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. GILMAN. Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. MAZZOLI). The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from California [Mr. DYMALLY] that the House suspend the rules and agree to the concurrent resolution (H. Con. Res. 87).

The question was taken.

Mr. GILMAN. Mr. Speaker, on that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to clause 5 of rule I and the Chair's prior announcement, further proceedings on this question will be postponed.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. YATRON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members have 5 legislative days in which to revise and extend their remarks on House Concurrent Resolution 87, the concurrent resolution just considered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION

Mr. LAGOMARSINO. Mr. Speaker, yesterday due to a visit by Vice President DAN QUAYLE to my district I was unable to be in Washington and, therefore, was unable to vote on House Concurrent Resolution 87, the resolution concerning Iranian persecution of the Baha'is, and the conference report to H.R. 2742, the bill to extend and amend the Library Services and Construction Act.

For the RECORD, I would have voted "Aye" on both measures. I am a cosponsor of House Concurrent Resolution 87 and supported the resolution during its consideration by the House Foreign Affairs Committee, of which I am a senior member. Last September 12, 1989, I supported H.R. 2742 when it was before the full House.

I am encouraged that both measures passed the House with overwhelming majorities.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Speaker, I regret that I was unable to vote on two bills passed under Suspension of the Rules on Tuesday, February 27. I was in a meeting on the Senate side of the Capitol and due to mechanical failure of my personal address system, I did not vote on the bills H.R. 2742 and House Concurrent Resolution 87. However, if I had been in the Chamber at the time of the vote I would have voted "aye" on both pieces of legislation.

Mr. Speaker, I wanted to let my constituents know through the use of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of why I was unable to vote on these bills. I appreciate the opportunity to include my remarks at this time.

ANIMAL DISEASE CONTROL CO-OPERATION ACT OF 1947 AMENDMENTS

Mr. DE LA GARZA. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H.R. 4010) to provide the Secretary of Agriculture authority regarding the sale of sterile screwworms.

The Clerk read as follows:

H.R. 4010

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Act of February 28, 1947 (61 Stat. 7; 21 U.S.C. 114b et seq.) is amended—

(1) in the first section—

(A) by inserting at the beginning "SECTION 1. COOPERATION IN ANIMAL DISEASE CONTROL.—", and

(B) by striking "screw-worm" and inserting "screwworm";

(2) in section 2 by inserting after "Sec. 2." the heading "USE OF FUNDS.—";

(3) by inserting after section 2 the following:

"SEC. 3. SALE OF STERILE SCREWWORMS.—(a) IN GENERAL.—Notwithstanding section 1, the Secretary of Agriculture may, independently or in cooperation with any foreign government or any international organization or association, produce and sell sterile screwworms to any foreign government or to any international organization or association, if the Secretary determines that the protection of livestock and related industries of the United States will not be adversely affected by such production and sale.

"(b) TERMS OF SALE.—The Secretary may provide for the sale of screwworms under subsection (a) under such terms and conditions as the Secretary considers appropriate.

"(c) DEPOSIT OF PROCEEDS.—(1) INDEPENDENT SALES.—If the Secretary independently produces and sells screwworms under subsection (a), the proceeds of such sales shall be deposited in the Treasury of the United States and be credited to the appropriation from which the operating expenses of the facility producing the screwworms have been paid.

"(2) COOPERATIVE SALES.—If the Secretary produces and sells screwworms in cooperation with a foreign government or an international organization or association, the proceeds of such sale shall be divided between the United States and such government, organization, or association, as determined by the Secretary, and the United States portion of such proceeds shall be deposited into the Treasury of the United States and be credited to the appropriation from which the operating expenses of the facility producing the screwworms have been paid.";

(4) in section 4 by inserting after "Sec. 4." the heading "AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.—";

(5) in section 5 by inserting after "Sec. 5." the heading "COOPERATION WITH PUBLIC AND PRIVATE ENTITIES.—"; and

(6) by adding at the end the following new section:

"SEC. 6. SHORT TITLE.—This Act may be referred to as the 'Animal Disease Control Cooperation Act of 1947'.".

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to the rule, a second is not required on this motion.

The gentleman from Texas [Mr. DE LA GARZA] will be recognized for 20 minutes and the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. EMERSON] will be recognized for 20 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DE LA GARZA].

Mr. DE LA GARZA. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, perhaps the name screwworm might entice someone to ask what this program is and what it is we do. I think probably a short explanation is in order.

The screwworm eradication program is perhaps the most successful program ever ventured into in a scientific way by the Federal Government of the United States. It is cost effective, and it exercised the first peaceful use of radiation in the world in the field of agriculture. This is one of those programs where a certain periodical might point their finger at Congress, but, yes, this program has been so successful.

The screwworm is a fly. It is a pest which had inhabited most of the Southwestern United States. As an example, there were about 16 million recorded cases in Texas in 1 year of screwworm infestation, then it came down to 2 or 3 by the middle seventies—now it's usually zero.

What happens is that if there is any open wound, the fly lays its eggs in the open wound. It caused extensive damage to the cattle industry, to wildlife, and even to humans. I might mention that during the recent Panama exercise, one of our soldiers wounded there was found to have larvae of the screwworm fly.

It was one of the momentous occasions of history when scientists, Drs. Knipling and Bushland, one with the use of radiation, the other with the procreation of the fly, began their efforts to combat the screwworm.

□ 1350

Yes, I say to this periodical that often points a finger at us, it started with research on the sexual capacities of a fly. And it has saved untold millions of dollars and problems throughout the United States.

We have eradicated the fly from the United States. We have it almost out of Mexico. We are now going into Central America.

What happens is you grow from the eggs of the fly the pupa, which is the worm. Then the male fly by radiation is sterilized. Then they are set loose in a specific geographic area.

Since it has been sterilized, it cannot reproduce. Therefore, eventually you eradicate the fly from a specific area.

I annually recommend Drs. Knipling and Bushland for the Nobel Peace Prize. Certainly there are no more meritorious actions in the useful exploitation of radiation than the peaceful purpose of eradicating this pest that affects livestock and humans.

I think it is noteworthy that these two gentleman are still alive. I visit with them periodically. The small laboratory outside of Kerrville, TX, where they initiated their studies is now named after them, the Knipling-Bushland Research Laboratory.

Mr. Speaker, that is a brief history of where this problem comes from. What we are trying to do here in this legislation is allow flies to be sold to other countries. We now find this is limited to the Western Hemisphere. What this legislation does is allow the Department of Agriculture, APHIS, the agency which handles this program, to sell the flies anywhere in the world at a price. The income from the sale of the flies will come back to the program so it can be regenerated into the program.

I cannot say enough about the peaceful use of radiation. I would rather that we had done more of that than put it in missiles and rockets. It has been very successful.

The plant is low in capacity at this point, but it can fulfill the capacity needed.

I might mention that we have a similar problem with the medfly, the Mediterranean fruitfly, that also causes tremendous damage to the fruit and vegetable industry. What this legislation does is allow the Department of Agriculture to sell the sterile screwworm fly to whoever may need them in their particular country for a price to be directed back into the program.

Mr. Speaker, this bill authorizes the U.S. Department of Agriculture [USDA], either independently or in cooperation with other countries or international organizations or associations, to produce and sell sterile screwworm flies to other countries or international organizations.

As those familiar with the livestock industry know, the screwworm fly is a flesh-feeding parasite that attacks warmblooded animals and humans. The pest can be a serious threat to livestock production and even human health wherever it becomes established.

Fortunately, through an intensive cooperative effort by the Federal Government and U.S. livestock producers, the screwworm was declared eradicated from the United States by 1982. Without our vigilance, the USDA estimates the screwworm could today be causing 350 million dollars' worth of damage to our domestic livestock industry. We have now moved the screwworm battleground south of the United States border, in Mexico and several Central American nations.

Part of the aggressive eradication program south of the border involves a form of biological pest control—the release of sterile screwworm flies which mate with the existing screwworm flies, but product no offspring. Consequently, the population of flies diminishes and eventually disappears altogether.

The only facility in the world which currently produces sterile screwworm flies is operated by the joint United States-Mexico Commission on Screwworm Eradication based in Tuxtla Gutierrez, Mexico. This facility was founded in 1976 and is operated jointly by the USDA and Mexico's Secretariat of Agriculture.

The Secretary of Agriculture has informed Congress that screwworms were found in North Africa last year, the first such detection of the pest outside the Western Hemisphere. The spread of screwworms to the African Continent is of great concern because of its potential impact on animal disease control efforts and public health.

H.R. 4010 would provide the necessary authority for the USDA, or the USDA working through the Commission, to sell sterile flies to the Food and Agricultural Organization [FAO] of the United Nations to help combat the pest in North Africa.

To ensure U.S. taxpayers are not further burdened by the costs associated with eradicating the screwworm, this bill directs that the proceeds attributable to the United States of any sale of sterile screwworms be deposited in the U.S. Treasury and used to offset the expenses of operating the sterile screwworm-rearing facility.

Mr. Speaker, there is an element of urgency to the need for action on this bill.

In order to most effectively combat the screwworm infestation in North Africa, the FAO should act rapidly before the dry season ends. Previous research in Texas and Mexico has shown that eradication efforts are more successful during the dry season than during the more wet and humid season.

H.R. 4010 would allow FAO eradication efforts to be successfully conducted and protect the people and food supply of the African Continent.

As the custodians of technology to combat this pest and as Americans deeply concerned about the quality of life throughout the world, I urge my colleagues to support this measure.

Mr. EMERSON. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I might consume.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of the bill before the House of Representatives today, H.R. 4010, a bill that provides the Secretary of Agriculture with the authority to sell sterile flies to foreign countries or international organizations for use in the biological control of screwworm infestations. I particularly would like to thank the chairman of the committee, Mr. DE LA GARZA, for his prompt attention to this measure. He and I know that the screwworm is a pest that presents a serious threat to livestock production, as well as serious public health impacts.

Screwworm infestations were eradicated from the United States in 1982 and in recent years millions of dollars have been spent in eradicating this pest in Mexico and Panama. Part of the eradication program involves releasing sterile flies in the infested areas. Recently, these pests were found in North Africa, the first detection of screwworm outside of the Western Hemisphere. The presence of these pests cause considerable concern because of the potential for it to be spread to European countries bordering on the Mediterranean Sea and eventually into central Africa.

If allowed to spread, the screwworm can become the most devastating livestock and wildlife pest in Africa. The effect on human health would be considerable, particularly in the countries where drought and famine have already weakened the people. The threat posed by this pest is not limited to this region alone. The constant movement of people and goods throughout the world can lead to the introduction of screwworm into any country.

H.R. 4010 allows the Secretary, independently or in cooperation with a foreign government or an international organization, to produce and to sell sterile screwworm to any country in the world for use in eradicating such infestations. The bill also provides the Secretary with the authority to deposit the proceeds of the sales attributable to the United States to the appropriation for the facility that produced the screwworm.

The administration has no objection to this bill and I urge my colleagues to support H.R. 4010. I thank the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture.

Mr. HALL of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of H.R. 4010, which gives the Secretary of Agriculture authority, independently or in cooperation with the government of any country of the world, to produce and sell sterile screwworms to the government of any country of the world and to any international organization or association.

I would like to commend in particular the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture, Mr. DE LA GARZA, and the vice chairman of the Select Committee on Hunger, Mr. EMERSON, for leading this important effort.

United States assistance in the international screwworm eradification effort is needed to combat the recent outbreak of the screwworm fly in northern Africa. Because screwworm larvae are fatal to humans and livestock, this outbreak presents a real threat to many of our allies including Israel and Egypt, and could potentially have devastating effects on the people, economies, and wildlife of Africa.

The only way to stop the infestation is to interrupt the breeding cycle by saturating an afflicted area with sterile flies. The U.N. Food and Agriculture Organization is currently coordinating the effort to eradicate the fly from Libya, where it was introduced through infested livestock from the Western Hemisphere. I believe it is important that the United States assist this important international organization in this humanitarian effort.

Attempts at screwworm eradication have been immensely successful in this hemisphere. Current U.S. law prohibits the export of sterile screwworm flies outside the Western Hemisphere. We can prevent tragedy in Africa by making this appropriate technology available. It will save lives.

I urge all Members to suppport this legislation.

Mr. EMERSON. Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. DE LA GARZA. Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. MAZZOLI). The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DE LA GARZA] that the House suspend the rules and pass the bill, H.R. 4010.

The question was taken; and (two-thirds having voted in favor thereof) the rules were suspended, and the bill was passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. DE LA GARZA. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days in which to revise and extend their remarks on H.R. 4010, the bill just passed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

REGARDING MARION LAKE IN MARION, KS

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the Senate bill (S. 1016) to change the name of "Marion Lake," located northwest of Marion, KS, to "Marion Reservoir."

The Clerk read as follows:

S. 1016

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the lake located northwest of the City of Marion, Kansas, commonly known as "Marion Lake", and adopted and authorized in Public Law 81-516, shall hereafter be known and designated as "Marion Reservoir". Any reference to such lake in a law, map, regulation, document, record or other paper of the United States shall be deemed to be a reference to "Marion Reservoir".

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to the rule, a second is not required on this motion.

The gentleman from California [Mr. ANDERSON] will be recognized for 20 minutes, and the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. HAMMERSCHMIDT] will be recognized for 20 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from California [Mr. ANDERSON].

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, S. 1016, as passed by the Senate, would alleviate a problem of local confusion in the area of Marion, KS. Currently, there are two lakes in the area of Marion, KS, which hold the name of Marion. This bill would change the name of one of those lakes to Marion Reservoir.

This project was authorized by the Congress for flood control, water supply, and other conservation uses by the Flood Control Act of 1950. Since the project was placed in full flood control operation in February 1968, it has prevented over $36 million in flood damages.

I would also like to commend the gentleman from Kansas, Congressman WHITTAKER, for his fine work on this legislation. My best wishes go to him and his family as he looks forward to his retirement from Congress.

Mr. Speaker, I urge my colleagues to support this bill.

Mr. HAMMERSCHMIDT. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

(Mr. HAMMERSCHMIDT asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. HAMMERSCHMIDT. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in support of S. 1016, a bill to change the name of Marion Lake to Marion Reservoir. The bill is the Senate companion to H.R. 2434, introduced by the distinguished gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. WHITTAKER] who will be retiring at the end of this Congress.

The reason we are bringing up the Senate version of this bill today in lieu of the House version, is that there was a slight technical error in the original bill that was amended by the Senate.

Marion Lake is located northwest of the city of Marion, KS. It is my understanding that quite a bit of confusion has arisen due to the fact that there exists another lake in that area with the same name of Marion.

By renaming the northwest lake "Marion Reservoir," this bill should clear up the confusion between the two lakes and make things easier for the residents and visitors of Marion, KS.

I urge my collegues to support it.

□ 1400

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. WHITTAKER].

Mr. WHITTAKER. Mr. Speaker, I want to personally thank the gentleman from California [Mr. ANDERSON] as well as the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. HAMMERSCHMIDT] for their cooperative efforts to address this dilemma that we have had for some time, I thank them for their expeditious handling of this matter. It is genuinely appreciated.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of S. 1016, which would rename the lake located northwest of the city of Marion, KS, as Marion Reservoir.

At present, there are two bodies of water in Marion County, KS, within 10 miles of each other, each with the name Marion Lake. This measure would end a great deal of confusion that has been caused by the two lakes sharing the same name.

The cities of Marion and Hillsboro, the Marion Economic Development Council, the Marion Chamber of Commerce, and the Marion County Commission all are in support of this measure.

I urge the passage of S. 1016.

Mr. HAMMERSCHMIDT. Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. MAZZOLI). The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from California [Mr. ANDERSON] that the House suspend the rules and pass the Senate bill, S. 1016.

The question was taken; and (two-thirds having voted in favor thereof) the rules were suspended and the Senate bill was passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days to revise and extend their remarks on the Senate bill just passed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

ACCEPTANCE OF A STATUE OF PHILO T. FARNSWORTH

Mr. CLAY. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and agree to the concurrent resolution (H. Con. Res. 226) providing for acceptance of a statue of a statue of Philo T. Farnsworth, presented by the State of Utah, for placement in National Statuary Hall, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read as follows:

H. CON. RES. 226

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That (a) the statue of Philo T. Farnsworth (the father of television), furnished by the State of Utah for placement in National Statuary Hall in accordance with section 1814 of the Revised Statutes of the United States (40 U.S.C. 187), is accepted in the name of the United States, and the thanks of the Congress are tendered to the State of Utah for providing this commemoration of one of its most eminent personages.

(b) The State of Utah is authorized to use the rotunda of the Capitol on May 2, 1990, at 11:00 o'clock, ante meridiem, for a presentation ceremony for the statue. The Architect of the Capitol and the Capitol Police Board shall take such action as may be necessary with respect to physical preparations and security for the ceremony.

(c) The statue shall be displayed in the rotunda of the Capitol for a period of not more than six months, after which period the statue shall be moved to its permanent location in National Statuary Hall.

SEC. 2. The transcript of proceedings of the ceremony shall be printed, under the direction of the Joint Committee on the Library, as a House document, with illustrations and suitable binding. In addition to the usual number, there shall be printed 6,555 copies of the document, of which 450 copies shall be for the use of the House of Representatives, 105 copies shall be for the use of the Senate, 3,500 copies shall be for the use of the Representatives from Utah, and 2,500 copies shall be for the use of the Senators from Utah.

SEC. 3. The Clerk of the House of Representatives shall transmit a copy of this concurrent resolution to the Governor of Utah.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to the rule, a second is not required on this motion.

The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CLAY] will be recognized for 20 minutes, and the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GILLMOR] will be recognized for 20 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CLAY].

Mr. CLAY. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, House Concurrent Resolution 226 authorizes that the statue of Philo T. Farnsworth be placed in the National Statuary Hall.

Mr. Farnsworth, known as "the father of television" invented the first all-electronic television system. During his lifetime, he held patents to approximately 100 inventions, and aided in the development of such devices as radar, infrared lights, the electron microscope, and the baby incubator. Because of his dedication to the improvement of our society, the State of Utah wishes to display a statue of Philo T. Farnsworth in the U.S. Capitol.

Current legislation provides for the placement of two such statues into the National Statuary Hall by each State of the United States. Currently, there is but one statue from the State of Utah on display in the National Statuary Hall.

The bill also authorizes the State of Utah to use the rotunda of the Capitol on May 2, 1990, at 11 o'clock, for a presentation ceremony for the statue.

The statue shall be displayed in the rotunda of the Capitol for a period of not more than 6 months, after which period the statue shall be moved to its permanent location in the National Statuary Hall.

The transcript of proceedings of the ceremony shall be printed, under the direction of the Joint Committee on the Library, as a House document, with illustrations and suitable binding.

We have all benefited from Farnsworth's contributions to modern technology. His research helped to make the astronomical telescope 50,000 times more powerful and millions of Americans saw the first Moon walk because Farnsworth's image dissector sent back pictures of the historical event. Thus, special thanks from the Congress should be tendered to the State of Utah for providing this commemoration of Philo T. Farnsworth.

I urge my colleagues to support the passage of this bill.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. GILLMOR. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of House Concurrent Resolution 226 which authorizes the acceptance of a statue of Philo T. Farnsworth for permanent placement in Statuary Hall, and also the use of the rotunda of the Capitol for a presentation ceremony of the statue on May 2, 1990.

As Members know, each State is allowed to present two statues for placement in Statuary Hall, and the State of Utah has chosen the statue of Dr. Farnsworth to be its second gift for the Hall.

Dr. Farnsworth's accomplishments were vast. In addition to being considered the father of television, he is the creator of many ingenious and useful technological innovations, including radar and baby incubators.

Mr. Speaker, there are few people that pass on this Earth who have the opportunity to leave behind them from the ferility of their brainpower so many thing so useful to mankind as Dr. Farnsworth, and I think it is only fitting that he be honored by the State of Utah and by the U.S. Congress, and I would urge my colleagues to support the resolution.

Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Utah [Mr. NIELSON].

Mr. NIELSON of Utah. Mr. Speaker, the State of Utah has chosen to honor Philo T. Farnsworth by placing his likeness in the National Statuary Hall. A dedication ceremony is to be held on Wednesday, May 2, 1990 in the Capitol rotunda to which all Members are invited.

Philo T. Farnsworth, the father of television, well represents the pioneering spirit of Utah and its rich heritage. While growing up, Philo was an outstanding student with the vision to create many useful things. During his high school years, he perceived the concept of radio transmission of moving pictures what we now know as television. Television has had a profound effect on the world in virtually every sphere: Entertainment, education, and information. No doubt it has had a significant effect on the changes we are seeing in the world today. Dr. Farnsworth's impact was not only felt in television, but also in the development of radar, computers, infrared night lights, baby incubators, and the gastroscope. He was also a member of the first committee of the Federal Communications Commission to establish television reception standards.

Clearly, Philo T. Farnsworth is an outstanding choice to represent the people of Utah. He was an inventor with the vision to help humanity through invention and advanced technologies. I urge your support of House Concurrent Resolution 226 which will provide for acceptance of the Philo T. Farnsworth statue for placement in the National Statuary Hall.

Mr. OWENS of Utah. Mr. Speaker, I rise to ask support for House Concurrent Resolution 226, a bill establishing the procedure for presentation of a second statue from the people of my State of Utah to the people of the United States of America. The first statue from Utah, currently in Statuary Hall is that of Brigham Young, "the Great Colonizer."

This second statue depicts Utahan, Philo T. Farnsworth, best known as the father of television. More precisely, Mr. Farnsworth invented the image dissector which, along with his development of the cathode ray tube, led to the development of the television camera and viewing set.

Granted, there is not a united opinion as to whether all that has been done with Mr. Farnsworth's invention has been for the good, but most of us are in agreement that the impact of it has been phenomenal. May I note that our debate here in the House is being beamed to homes throughout the world, thanks to Philo T. Farnsworth.

But, Mr. Speaker, Mr. Farnsworth was not a one invention wonder. His ingenuity brought us such divergent creations as the radar, the electron microscope, and the incubator for newborn babies. He also pioneered research into the peaceful uses of nuclear fission and helped make greater strides possible in the development of the astroradio telescope.

Philo T. Farnsworth's work has expanded four frontiers and brought the wonder of our planet into our homes. He has also brought us images of planets beyond the world. His inventions insure our jets fly safely, our children grow strong, and our peace is preserved. Indeed, the favorable effects of his inventions have no limits since they are being applied in greater and greater measure to our daily lives.

Mr. Speaker, while Philo T. Farnsworth is truly a giant among inventors, the people of Utah are offering a life-size statue of him in their National Capital, and hope that permission will be granted for suitable ceremonies commemorating its placement in the Nation's Capitol.

Mr. BATES. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in support of House Concurrent Resolution 226 authorizing the placement of statue of Philo T. Farnsworth in Statuary Hall.

The Subcommittee on Procurement and Printing, in conjunction with the Subcommittee on Libraries and Memorials, is pleased to have been of assistance in facilitating the passage of this legislation.

We are pleased to have been a part of Utah's endeavor to honor the inventor of television with a statue placed in the U.S. Capitol. Television has played a tremendous role in the lives of Americans. Because of television, the proceedings of the House of Representatives are broadcast through the Nation giving Americans the opportunity to view the legislative process in action.

Once again, Mr. Speaker, I strongly support the placement of a statue of Philo T. Farnsworth in the U.S. Capitol.

Mr. GILLMOR. Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. CLAY. Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CLAY] that the House suspend the rules and agree to the concurrent resolution, House Concurrent Resolution 226.

The question was taken; and (two-thirds having voted in favor thereof) the rules were suspended and the concurrent resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. CLAY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days in which to revise and extend their remarks on the concurrent resolution just agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

AUTHORIZING USE OF THE ROTUNDA FOR A DEDICATION CEREMONY CONCERNING LAJOS KOSSUTH

Mr. CLAY. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and agree to the concurrent resolution (H. Con. Res. 251) authorizing use of the rotunda of the Capitol for a dedication ceremony incident to the placement of a bust of Lajos Kossuth in the Capitol and authorizing the printing of a transcript of the proceedings of the ceremony, as amended.

The Clerk read as follows:

H. CON. RES. 251

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring),

SECTION 1. DEDICATION CEREMONY AND PLACEMENT OF A BUST OF LAJOS KOSSUTH IN THE CAPITOL.

The Joint Committee on the Library is authorized to use the rotunda of the Capitol on an appropriate date in March 1990 for a ceremony to dedicate a bust of Lajos Kossuth, the leader of the Hungarian Revolution of 1848–1849, known as the "George Washington of Hungary". After the ceremony, the Architect of the Capitol shall place the bust in the rotunda for a period of not more than one year and, at the end of such period, shall place the bust in a permanent location in the Capitol.

SEC. 2. PRINTING OF A TRANSCRIPT OF THE PROCEEDINGS OF THE DEDICATION CEREMONY.

A transcript of the proceedings of the ceremony referred to in section 1 shall be printed as a House document, with illustrations and suitable binding. In addition to the usual number, there shall be printed, for the use of the Joint Committee on the Library, such number of copies of the document as does not exceed a cost of $1,200.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is a second demanded?

Mr. GILLMOR. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, a second will be considered as ordered.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CLAY] will be recognized for 20 minutes, and the genteman from Ohio [Mr. GILLMOR] will be recognized for 20 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CLAY].

Mr. CLAY. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, House Concurrent Resolution 251, as amended, authorizes the Joint Committee on the Library to use the Rotunda of the Capitol in March 1990 for a ceremony to dedicate a bust of Lajos Kossuth. He was the leader of the Hungarian revolution of 1848–1849, known as "the George Washington of Hungary." Lajos Kossuth was the first foreigner after Marquis Lafayette to be allowed to address the two Houses of Congress. He was one of the Governors of Hungary during the war of the Hungarians against the Hapsburg Empire. In 1958, the United States honored Lajos Kussuth as one of the champions of liberty with an 8-cent stamp.

After the ceremony, the Architect of the Capitol shall place the bust in the rotunda for a period of not more than 1 year. Additionally, the bill provides for placement of the statute in a permanent location in the Capitol.

A transcript of the proceedings of the ceremony shall be printed as a House document with illustrations and suitable binding for the use of the Joint Committee on the Library.

Placement of the bust in the Rotunda at this time honors the 141st anniversary of the Hungarian Revolution, reaffirms that Kossuth is indeed a "champion of liberty," and is a symbol of the enduring American-Hungarian friendship. I urge my colleagues to support passage of this bill.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. GILLMOR. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of House Concurrent Resolution 251 as amended, a bill which would allow the use of the Rotunda for a ceremony to dedicate a bust of the Hungarian statesman, Lajos Kossuth and the permanent placement of the bust in the Capitol. Mr. Kossuths leadership inspired the Hungarian people to rise up and fight for their freedom during the Hungarian democratic revolution of 1848–49. It was a cry for freedom that is once again being echoed in Eastern Europe today. Mr. Kossuth is known as the George Washington of Hungary.

As an Ohioan I would be remiss not to mention the involvement with and commitment to Hungary on the part of many Ohioans. In fact, Cleveland, OH has the largest settlement of people of Hungarian descent of any place in the world except for Budapest. Also, my own spouse, Karen, is a Hungarian from Cleveland.

I also would like to point out that it was an Ohioan, Mr. Csaba Kur of Warren, OH which made the bust of Mr. Kossuth, which will be placed in the Capitol.

In 1848–49, the United States expressed its support for the Hungarian uprising. Now, 141 years later, we can show our renewed sympathies by supporting this resolution.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank my distinguished chairman for his work in bringing this bill to the floor and I urge my colleagues to support it.

Mr. CLAY. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from California [Mr. LANTOS].

(Mr. LANTOS asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. LANTOS. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, first I want to thank the chairman of the Committee on House Administration, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ANNUNZIO] for his support, and I also want to thank the chairman of the Subcommittee on Libraries and Memorials, the gentleman from Missouri, my good friend Congressman BILL CLAY, for his support of this legislation.

Mr. Speaker, 1989 was a pivotal year in human history. It will go down as 1492 or 1776 or—yes, as 1848—as one of the great turning points in the history of mankind.

In 1848 a democratic revolution swept Europe, but the difference between the democratic revolution of 1848 and the democratic revolution of 1989 is that the first one failed and the second one has been triumphant.

Mr. Speaker, our resolution brings back before us the revolution of 1848, it permits the use of the Rotunda of the Capitol for a ceremony to unveil and present a bust of the father of Hungarian democracy, and the hero of the 1848 revolution, Lajos Kossuth. This bust will be permanently placed in the Capitol of our Nation.

Kossuth is only the seventh non-American citizen to be so honored. He led the Hungarian nation's uprising against Austrian domination and suppression in 1848. He was properly viewed as the George Washington of the Hungarian people.

After that revolution was suppressed with the overwhelming numerical preponderance of the troops of the Czar, Kossuth fled to Turkey and then came to the United States where he spent 2 years.

Not many know, Mr. Speaker, that following the Marquis de Lafayette, Kossuth was the second non-American citizen to address a joint session of the Congress about a century and a half ago. His remarks stirred our colleagues of that generation no less profoundly than did those of President Vaclav Havel, of Czechoslovakia, just a few days ago.

Kossuth sparked enourmous interest throughout this country. He was welcomed and honored as a hero in New York and Boston and Philadelphia and Charleston and Columbus. Counties were named after him throughout the Nation. He became one of those honored visitors whose commitment to the values of our Revolution the American people appreciated and cherished and honored.

I think it is significant, Mr. Speaker, that this ceremony honoring this great democrat of the 19th century—that is democrat with a small d—will take place on the 15th of March, anniversary of the beginning of the 1848 revolution and just 10 days before the first free and open miliparty elections in Kossuth's native country of Hungary in half a century.

Honoring this 19th century democratic hero is symbolic of our commitment as a nation to champions of democracy. It is important to recognize that Lech Walesa and Vaclav Havel and all the other heros of Eastern Europe over the last 2 years did not come out of a lack of a democratic tradition. There was a profound democratic tradition going back in some instances for centuries.

This ceremony on the 15th of March in our Rotunda honoring a hero of the Hungarian uprising of 1848–49 will be an appropriate milestone in this historic series of events which celebrate the rebirth of democracy and freedom in Poland and Czechoslovakia, in Hungary, in Estonia, in Lithuania, Latvia, East Germany, and hopefully Bulgaria and Romania.

Mr. Speaker, I urge my colleagues to support the passage of this resolution.

Mr. BATES. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in support of House Concurrent Resolution 251 authorizing the placement of a bust of Lajos Kossuth, the leader of the Hungarian Revolution of 1848–1849, in the United States Capitol.

The Subcommittee on Procurement and Printing, in conjunction with the Subcommittee on Libraries and Memorials, is pleased to have been of assistance in facilitating the passage of this legislation.

As events unfolding in Eastern Europe in recent months have thrilled people throughout the world, it is a timely moment to remember that the struggle for freedom has been fought many times over the centuries. Placing this bust is an important way to state our appreciation for those who have strived for freedom.

Once again, Mr. Speaker, I strongly support the placement of a bust of Lajos Kossuth in the U.S. Capitol.

□ 1420

Mr. CLAY. Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. GILLMOR. Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. MAZZOLI). The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CLAY] that the House suspend the rules and agree to the concurrent resolution (H. Con. Res. 251), as amended.

The question was taken; and (two-thirds having voted in favor thereof) the rules were suspended and the concurrent resolution, as amended, was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

ANNOUNCEMENT BY THE SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair understands there was an agreement reached on the House floor last week not to have recorded votes prior to 3 o'clock this afternoon. Therefore, it is the intention of the Chair to entertain 1-minute speeches and special orders, with the understanding that legislative business will be resumed at about 3 p.m.

SANDINISTA PRESSURE STILL A MAJOR CONCERN IN NICARAGUA

(Mr. DONALD E. "BUZ" LUKENS asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks and include extraneous matter.)

Mr. DONALD E. "BUZ" LUKENS. Mr. Speaker, the people of Nicaragua have spoken and freedom and democracy are the clear winners in that country.

Freedom is on the march all over the world and we must pay special attention to our Latin and Central American neighbors. With this new found freedom in Nicaragua, democracy and prosperity can follow. Our responsibility is to assist this country's growth through increased cooperation and participation in cultural, political, economic, and diplomatic efforts.

Mr. Speaker, my major remaining concern whether or not the Sandinista political party will actually give up their army. They are the only political party I know of in the world which has it own army. The Sandinistas wrote the country's constitution to give themselves the army, not the people, not to the government, but to themselves. We, in Congress, must insure that the popular mandate of the Nicaraguan people is fulfilled with the peaceful transfer of both the political and the military power to the newly elected Government of Nicaragua.

Don't let the Marxist Sandinistas "Panamize" this election.

Mr. Speaker, I include the following article from the Washington Times:

[From the Washington Times, Feb. 27, 1990]

CHAMORRO PRESSURED TO APPEASE SANDINISTAS

(By James M. Dorsey)

A quest for economic and political stability could force Nicaraguan President-elect Violeta Chamorro to strike a deal with the defeated Sandinistas and allow them to retain temporary control over the military and police, administration officials and analysts said yesterday.

They compared Nicaragua's situation to that of Poland, where the government led by the non-communist Solidarity movement had to concede defense and security ministries to the communists to maintain order.

Control of Nicaragua's 80,000-strong military and security forces tops a host of issues that Mrs. Chamorro's National Opposition Union and the Bush administration have yet to confront.

The police and the military, the largest army in Central America, were created as armed wings of the political Sandinista Front, not as national security forces under civilian control.

Senior amdinistration officials, including President Bush and Secretary of State

James A. Baker III, met yesterday to discuss how the United States could support Mrs. Chamorro's daunting task of consolidating power and engineering a peaceful transition in Nicaragua.

Mr. Bush and Mr. Baker called for transfer of both civilian and military power to the new government, which is scheduled to take office in Nicaragua on April 25.

"Our role will be to do any and everything we can to help . . . Mrs. Chamorro build a new government, help them on rebuilding Nicaragua's economy, and we will be urging the other members of the democratic community and nations to provide support as well," said State Department spokeswoman Margaret Tutwiler.

Dismantling the Sandinista military apparatus is likely to become one of the first major challenges Mrs. Chamorro will have to confront, according to the officials and analysts.

Despite conciliatory statements from both sides, there were fears of violence and instability in a nation in which one party has never peacefully transferred power to another.

Sandinista Interior Minister Tomas Borge said before the elections that he could not imagine that his security forces would obey ministers named by a new government.

"If a new government is formed * * * it will have to name its Cabinet and if it names another interior minister, it would have to get rid of the staff as well, because they certainly would not obey the new minister," Mr. Borge said.

Speaking also before the elections, Defense Minister Humberto Ortega cautioned that even if Mrs. Chamorro won, "she would still have to deal with me" and that the armed forces may not obey orders they considered unsound.

But a State Department official said parts of the armed forces would reject a Sandinista attempt to hold on to power. "The Interior Ministry is probably more loyal to the cause of the revolution than other elements" but "the loyalty of the reserve forces might be suspect," the official said.

Some analysts suggest that Mrs. Chamorro's campaign pledge to eliminate the draft and reduce the size of the army coupled with the Sandinista electoral defeat could prompt an erosion of revolutionary support.

"Suddenly those people wearing Sandinista T-shirts might be taking them off," said Mark Falcoff, a expert on Latin America at the American Enterprise Institute. Mr. Falcoff recalled that many supporters of Nicaraguan leader Anastasio Somoza joined the Sandinistas immediately after their 1979 overthrow of the former dictator.

"It's unclear whether the Sandinistas are willing to give up power. We may therefore see attempts to negotiate a government of national reconciliation with the opposition Sandinistas including control of the defense and interior ministries," said Latin America expert Eva Loser.

The Sandinistas remain Nicaragua's largest political party, despite their defeat, with more than 40 percent of the vote.

Robert Leiken, an expert on Latin America at Harvard University, suggested that demobilization could depend on the scope of U.S. economic aid. "The problem is that Nicaragua is an economic basket case. There are no jobs. There is a need for emergency aid to rebuild the infrastructure and create jobs for the ex-army," Mr. Leiken said.

VACATION OF SPECIAL ORDER AND GRANTING OF SPECIAL ORDER

Mr. GILLMOR. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the special order granted to Mr. DORNAN of California for today for 5 minutes be vacated, and that he be granted a 60-minute special order for today instead.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. HAYES of Louisiana). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

BLACK HISTORY MONTH

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. STOKES] is recognized for 60 minutes.

Mr. STOKES. Mr. Speaker, thank you for the opportunity to reserve this special order to commemorate Black History Month. Since 1976 when Congress adopted the resolution designating February as Black History Month, we have taken this opportunity to highlight and pay tribute to the notable accomplishments of black men and women who helped to build this great Nation.

Black Americans have a magnificent and rich history; a history which is inextricably woven into the economic, social, and political fabric which distinguishes our country from all others. From Garrett Morgan's invention of the traffic signal to Mary McLeod Bethune's founding of a university on $1.50, black men and women have made enormous contributions in the development of this country.

For these reasons, the members of the Congressional Black Caucus proudly reserve time each year to share with our colleagues and the world black history—our history.

Mr. Speaker, I want to pause at this time for remarks from my distinguished colleagues who join me on this occasion.

Mr. Speaker, I have the pleasure to serve as chairman of the Congressional Black Caucus Health Braintrust. In this capacity, I advocate on behalf of the CBC the need for quality health care for all Americans, especially the poor, minorities, and disadvantages. Therefore, I can think of no better time than Black History Month to spotlight the achievements of black men and women in the field of health and medicine.

Join me in paying tribute to those individuals who mustered the inner-strength and determination to accomplish feats that made them special. They sacrificed and gave of themselves to help make this world a better place for all of us.

Since colonial times, the black physician has been active on the American scene. In 1667, Dr. Lucas Santomee, the first physician of Afro-American descent, was rewarded with a grant of land for his services to the colony of New Amsterdam. Nearly a century later, the first recognized American-trained-and-established black physician was Dr. James Derham. Derham has born in Philadelphia, bought his freedom, and went to New Orleans, where he established a very successful practice, treating both black and white patients.

With the intensified fighting and conflict in the colonies during the pre-Civil War era came the emergence of the formerly trained black doctor. Thus, the first black American to obtain a medical degree was Dr. James McCune Smith of New York, who received his M.D. degree in Glasgow Scotland in 1837. The first to obtain a medical degree in the United States was Dr. David J. Peck, who received his M.D. from Rush Memorial College in 1847.

It is noteworthy that an American medical school graduated a black American 2 years before any conferred the degree on a woman, black, or white. Nonetheless, in 1864, Rebecca Lee became the first black woman to receive medical training in the United States, graduating from the New England Female Medical College in Boston. At the age of 23, Susan Smith McKinney Steward received her M.D. in 1870 from the New York Medical College for Women, becoming the first black woman so honored.

Black Americans were notable achievers in other health professions and arenas. One former slave who comes to mind when talking about the history of blacks in health and medicine is Sojourner Truth. Not only a famous abolitionist and underground railroad agent, Sojourner Truth was a nurse during the Civil War and immediately thereafter.

Sojourner Truth's legacy laid the foundation for other blacks to follow in her footsteps. Dorothea Lynde Dix was one such individual. When the Civil War began, Ms. Dix journeyed to Washington DC, and offered to assist the War Department by providing care for sick and wounded soldiers. In 1861, she was appointed by Secretary of War Simon Cameron to supervise the women nurses. This was a post of honor, but one that carried no official status or pay. Her wide-ranging authority gave her the power to organize hospitals for the care of the sick and wounded soldiers, to appoint nurses, and to receive, control and disperse special supplies for distribution among the troops.

While there are no accurate records of the appointment of nurses, their number, and where they served, a journal in the National Archives is devoted to documenting the role of colored nurses in the Civil War. According to this journal, 181 colored nurses—men and women—served between July 1863 and June 1864.

The significant role of these nurses established the framework for Mary Mahoney to become the first black woman to receive a diploma in nursing from the New England Hospital for Women and Children School of Nursing in Boston in 1879.

Let us also remember the many other extraordinary black Americans in health, medicine, and related fields like Dr. Daniel Hale Williams a pioneer in open heart surgery; Dr. Percy Julian whose research helped create derivative drugs which are in widespread use today for sufferers of arthritis and glaucoma; and the distinguished Dr. Charles Drew who discovered blood plasma.

In looking back at the achievements of these individuals, it is apparent that we owe much to blacks in the area of health and medicine.

As I stand here today, I am proud to note that black health professionals have continued to struggle and sacrifice to eliminate barriers and obstacles in the delivery of health care in our Nation. The National Medical Association, the National Dental Association, the National Black Nurses Association to name a few, have been in the forefront in addressing these challenges.

Add to this list of these determined leaders, the first black Secretary of U.S. Department of Health and Human Services—Dr. Louis Sullivan. He brings to the post the aspirations and dreams of so many black Americans before him. More importantly, Dr. Sullivan represents all black men and women in health and medicine who have persevered despite the obstacles. I am proud that history books in the future will record Dr. Sullivan's contributions to our Nation and the world.

Mr. Speaker, want to thank my colleagues for their participation in this special order. I am hopeful that what has been heard today has heightened the awareness and appreciation of the role courageous black men and women have played in the development of this Nation. Furthermore, we are hopeful that one day, the celebration of Black History Month will not be limited to 1 month. It is our hope that one day American heroes and achievers—both black and white—will stand side by side throughout the pages of our history books—for all the world to see.

Mrs. SCHROEDER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STOKES. I am pleased to yield to my distinguished colleague, the gentlewoman from Colorado.

Mrs. SCHROEDER. Mr. Speaker, a recent event in my district is part of the living legacy of the history of black Americans.

Last month was the grand opening in Denver of the Black America West Museum in its new home, the house once occupied by Dr. Justina Ford, Colorado's first black female doctor.

The museum is the collection of important historical artifacts gathered with the keen eye and tireless energy of the curator, Paul Stewart. Paul knew this void existed: There was no collection that showcased the contributions the black cowboy made in the Westward expansion of the United States. The national media he has received for his museum demonstrates the interest America has to this hidden page of history.

The restored house the museum now occupies is itself historic, a place well known and loved by many of my constituents.

Dr. Justina Ford started her practice in the early 1900's and did not quit until her death in the 1950's. She delivered hundreds of babies and gave comforting medical attention to anyone who knocked at her door. She offered food, shelter, and clothing as best she could, traveling in her horse and buggy and later in her auto.

To be a black woman entering the medical profession when she did was a path-breaking accomplishment. She met both sexist and racist resistance and hostility. Like her practice, however, she never let up.

Her house was within hours of demolition 7 years ago when neighbors saw the wrecker's ball and recognized the importance of saving the house. It was saved, moved, and eventually refurbished and landscaped. Many of her personal effects, including her doctor's bag were returned for display. Today, it stands as a community beacon in one of Denver's historic districts.

Mr. Speaker, this is what Black History Month is all about: the accomplishments of yesterday, showcased in a meaningful location today, for the benefit of the leaders of tomorrow.

Mr. STOKES. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentlewoman from Colorado for a very interesting and fascinating lecture on the contributions of black Coloradans. We appreciate the gentlewoman's participation.

Ms. ROS-LEHTINEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STOKES. I am pleased to yield to the distinguished gentlewoman from Florida.

Ms. ROS-LEHTINEN. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, in February of 1926, Dr. Carter G. Woodson established Black History Month in order to honor the invaluable contributions made by black men and women to the culture and history of the United States. Over the years, our fine Nation has paused each February to honor these contributions which have furthered the cause of our Nation's ideals of "life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness." Today, we are taking part in this month of celebration through this gathering which honors the living legacy of Carter G. Woodson, the father of black history. Through presenting a greater understanding and appreciation of these contributions, we will overcome our past shortcomings, and build upon them, allowing our Nation to further its excellence.

One of these finest contributors, Dr. Charles Richard Drew, has provided us with achievements that we benefit from in the present and which will carry us into the future. His experience should remind us of the ignorance of racial prejudices. Born in an era of racial division and hatred, Dr. Drew rose above this ignorance to establish himself as a world renowned surgeon, medical scientists, educator and authority on the preservation of blood.

After successfully helping the British establish a military blood bank program, our own War Department requested that blood from white donors not be mixed with that from black donors. Dr. Drew called this hypocrisy "a stupid blunder;" he recognized that as men, we are all of the same blood, and should work together in all of our efforts. In hearing Dr. Drew's statement, we are also reminded of Dr. Martin Luther King's request that men should "not be judged by the color of their skin, but the content of their character."

Men such as Dr. Drew and Dr. King have made tremendous contributions to this American experience, which we should all be proud of. We should emulate their lives for their tangible contributions as well as their spirit which they possessed that has enabled us to defeat the evils of racial prejudice. True, their dreams have not been perfectly realized, but we as Americans can unite and finish this journey which began so long ago.

In Dr. Drew's memory, the honor of his past contributions are recognized in the Charles R. Drew Elementary School of Miami. Through the tireless efforts of Mr. Fred Morley, principal of the Drew School and Mr. Everett Abney, the Drew dream is being furthered, and endless opportunities are being made for the students. As an educator, I must applaud this institution, and others which have adopted its curriculum, for they realize the vital importance of a solid education.

Unlimited opportunities are available for students who discipline themselves in an environment conducive to learning. The Drew School and its Career Awareness Laboratory provide students who are against the odds, with quality education and discipline for all to follow. They profess Dr. Drew's ideology of hard work in order to achieve the excellence which he attained.

So, as we are here today, let us resolve anew and dedicate ourselves in furthering unity, education, history, culture, and economic development, so that all Americans will benefit and continue the pursuit of excellence. Dr. Woodson and Dr. Drew clearly made valuable contributions in all of these areas, and they deserve to be honored for their achievements.

Mr. STOKES. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentlewoman from Florida [Ms. ROS-LEHTINEN] for her very articulate statement, and I very much appreciate her participation.

Mrs. BOGGS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STOKES. I am pleased to yield to the distinguished gentlewoman from Louisiana [Mrs. BOGGS].

Mrs. BOGGS. Mr. Speaker, the annual observance of Black History Month offers us the opportunity to honor the achievements of black Americans throughout our Nation's history and to explore the rich heritage of the African-American community. This year, we who serve in Congress have special occasion to recognize the black Representatives and Senators who have served over the past 120 years. We welcome the publication of "Black Americans in Congress, 1870-89," which has just been released in honor of Black History Month and as part of the commemoration of the bicentennial of Congress.

This new volume was prepared by the Office of the Historian under the direction of the Commission on the Bicentenary of the U.S. House of Representatives. As Chairman of the Commission, I am pleased to announce this publication and hope that it will contribute to a better understanding of this often overlooked chapter in our history.

The book includes biographical essays on the 66 blacks who have served in Congress since the days of Reconstruction. In addition to recognizing the individual achievements of the 63 Representatives and three Senators, including the five black women who have served in the House, the book offers a broader view of black participation in our Nation's politics and the lengthy struggle to achieve full equality of rights and opportunities.

Many of the early black Members of Congress participated in various efforts to secure the freedoms and rights of blacks in the South. Typical was Charles Edmund Nash, one of my predecessors from Louisiana, who served in the 44th Congress. While still in his teens, the Louisiana native enlisted in a black regiment of the Union Army and was critically wounded in one of the last engagements of the Civil War. Nash came to this Chamber in 1875 and served on the Committee on Education and Labor which had been created in 1867 to oversee Federal programs to assist former slaves. Most notable among the other military heroes was Robert Smalls of South Carolina. Drafted into Confederate service, Smalls won national fame when he and his black crew slipped a cotton steamer through to the Union fleet.

The first generation of black Congressmen keenly understood the need for education among former slaves and their children. John Mercer Langston of Virginia was founder of the Howard University Law School and served as acting president of Howard and president of Virginia Normal and Collegiate Institute before coming to the House of Representatives. Thomas Ezekiel Miller of South Carolina was a school commissioner before serving in Congress and later became president of South Carolina State College. As a Representative, Richard Harvey Cain of South Carolina proposed funding education from the proceeds of Federal land sales.

For more than 20 years after the end of Federal Reconstruction, blacks continued to win election to Congress from Southern districts and to pursue Federal support of educational and economic opportunities. These Representatives also sought Federal protection of the civil rights guaranteed by the 14th and 15th amendments to the Constitution.

The black Representatives of the 19th century faced enormous obstancles to enacting their legislative program, and with the institutionalization of segregation, fewer and fewer won election. The first chapter in the history of blacks in Congress ended when George White of North Carolina left office in 1901. Although no other blacks would win election until 1928, the 19th century black Congressmen, many of them born in slavery, signified the achievements of a generation and laid the foundation for the civil rights campaign that would culminate in the legislation of the 1960's.

In the middle decades of the 20th century, blacks began to win congressional seats in Northern cities and served as spokesmem for the concerns of their urban districts. These Members from Chicago, New York, Detroit and later Philadelphia and Los Angeles, sought solutions to the problems of housing, education, and unemployment that plagued inner-city neighborhoods. As the most prominent elected black officials, these Members also became defenders of the civil rights movement. Following passage of the landmark Voting Rights Act of 1965 and the victories of the civil rights movement, blacks have won election from all regions of the country.

As the publication of this book will make clear, the black Representatives of today carry on a tradition that dates back to the 1870's. A review of the careers of these 66 individuals demonstrates the remarkable achievements in the days following emancipation and in this century during the struggle for civil rights. These biographies also describe the recurrent efforts to secure rights for all Americans and achieve the dream of a democratic society.

This evening at 6:30 in H-324, the O'Neill Room of the Capitol, the Bicentenary Commission and the Chair of the Congressional Black Caucus will present this volume to the leadership. I hope all of you participating in this special order will join us for the ceremony and reception.

Mr. CLAY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STOKES. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. CLAY. Mr. Speaker, I would just like to commend the gentleman and praise the gentleman for the preparation of the book on black Americans of the U.S. Congress. I have seen it. It is a high-quality piece of journalism.

In fact, I was privy to it several months before its publication and used part of it in my book, which will shortly be released on black Members of Congress.

I might add that during the period of reconstruction that the gentleman talked of from 1870 to 1901, there were 23 black Members of Congress. We are proud today that sitting in one Congress we have 24 Members. There was, however, a period of barren years, and that was the 28-year period from 1901 to 1928 when no members of our race had the privilege and the honor of serving in the U.S. Congress, but in 1928 Mr. De Priest, Oscar De Priest, of Chicago, was elected the first black Member of Congress in the 20th century. Then for the next 17 years there was still only one black Member of Congress, when Mr. De Priest was defeated 6 years later by Mr. Arthur Mitchell. Well, Mr. Mitchell was not defeated. He did not run after two terms, and was replaced by Mr. Bill Dawson.

From 1928 until 1945 we did not see a second black Member of Congress elected until Adam Clayton Powell from the district in Harlem.

Today we do have 24 black Members of Congress.

In the history of this country, a little over 200 years, there have been less than 10,000 Members elected to serve in the U.S. House of Representatives. Only 265, I believe, have had the privilege of serving more than 10 terms, or more than 20 years. The gentleman who stands in the well and who is responsible for this special order is one of those 265 Members who have had the privilege of serving more than 20 years.

I also had the same privilege. I came the same day as the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. STOKES].

I would like to mention a third member of our race who has served more than 20 years, and that is the gentleman from California [Mr. HAWKINS], who announced just recently that he would not seek reelection. I think this country owes the gentleman from California [Mr. HAWKINS] a great deal. The gentleman from California [Mr. HAWKINS] has served continuously for 56 years in elected office, 28 years in the California assembly and 28 years in this body. He served with distinction, and I am proud to get up and happy to be able to acknowledge the contributions that he has made.

Mrs. BOGGS. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will yield further, I thank the gentleman from Missouri for his fine compliments and I congratulate him on the really important book he has undertaken, where he can go into much greater detail than our official volume was able to explore.

I would also like to say with great pride that the gentleman from California is a native Louisianian. He was born in Shreveport, LA, and lived there until he was around 8 years of age. We are all very proud that his beginning were in our State and that he has been such a stalwart leader, particularly as the earliest black Congressmen were in the education of his generations and future generations. He has made a tremendous contribution to this country in so many regards and we are extraordinarily proud of him.

I would also like to say that we have to remember that we had such great black women who have been in the Congress, including the one that is here now, the gentlewoman from Illinois [Mrs. COLLINS].

We have to remember that Shirley Chisholm was the first black woman to be nominated for the Presidency.

We have to remember that Barbara Jordon was thanked with great huge billboard signs all over the country for saving our Constitution, and we have to remember that Yvonne Brathwaite Burke was the only person of whom I am aware who ever asked for official maternity leave from the House of Representatives.

It has been a great pleasure to work on this book and, of course, it was Katie Hall who helped to establish the Martin Luther King national holiday, and we could go on and on about the blacks and their contributions to Congress and to the Nation.

I hope that all of you will join us in the celebration of the publication of our book this evening.

Mr. STOKES. Mr. Speaker, I thank the distinguished gentlewoman from Louisiana for the eloquence which she has brought to the floor once again, as she always does, and to join with my distinguished colleague, the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CLAY] in commending the gentlewoman for the leadership that she has given us with the production of this book, "Black Americans in Congress." It is a book that all of us take great pride in reading about those who came before us. Someday I am sure we will enjoy reading about those who will come after us; but we thank the gentlewoman so much for the leadership she has given in this area, as she has in so many other areas. It has been a pleasure to have the gentlewoman participate.

I say to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CLAY] that I certainly appreciate his participation. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CLAY] and I came into the Congress together in January 1969 with Congresswoman Shirley Chisholm, whom the gentlewoman from Louisiana has mentioned so nicely. In fact, the three of us happened to have the distinction of being cofounders of the Congressional Black Caucus, a feat of which we are very, very proud.

Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased at this time to yield to my distinguished friend and colleague, the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH].

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I thank my friend for yielding to me, and rise as a fourth member of the class entering in January 1969.

Mr. STOKES. That is right.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I am extremely proud to rise today in observance of Black History Month, to pay tribute to Dr. Carter G. Woodson, so appropriately recognized as the father of black history. One could easily speak for hours on the contributions of black Americans to the history of our Nation, and on the integral role Dr. Woodson played in the recording and interpretation of these events. For that reason, I take this opportunity to focus solely on one particular group of black Americans, and to share their distinguished military achievements. That group is the 369th Infantry Regiment formerly the 15th Infantry Regiment, New York National Guard.

The service of black Americans in the U.S. Armed Forces has received attention in recent weeks, due largely to the release of the critically acclaimed movie "Glory." "Glory" portrays the experiences of the all-black 54th Regiment of Massachusetts during the Civil War. Between the years of 1862 and 1865, more than 40,000 black troops gave their lives, both to preserve the Union and to bring an end to slavery. Despite their heroic efforts and courageous contributions to the war effort, black soldiers were discriminated against in pay, assignments, and rank.

Conditions were much the same when my father joined the 369th in 1918. Ours was a segregated Army; an Army where blacks and whites were kept rigidly separate. My father, however, had the honor of leading a company of the all-black 369th Infantry, which at the outset of our entry in that war, was assigned to the French 4th Army—I am told to avoid integration with the American forces.

The 369th had an extremely distinguished record in World War I. Eleven times they were cited for bravery. The entire regiment received the French Legion of Honor for gallantry under fire. Individually, 171 of its officers and enlisted men were decorated with this honor. The 369th will be remembered for many things: the 191 days they served in action—the longest of any American regiment; the only volunteer regiment raised during WWI that reached France; the first regiment of Allies to reach the Rhine; the only regiment in U.S. history to carry a State flag through the war. Mr. Speaker, they never lost a man to capture and never lost a foot of ground.

The 369th also distinguished itself in World War II and in Korea. My colleague, CHARLES RANGEL, obtained a Federal Charter for the 369th association.

Today, the 369th, now known as the 369th Transportation Battalion, wages different types of battles out of its post at the armory located at 142d Street and Fifth Avenue in New York City. It is engaged in numerous efforts designed to help children in the community to be the best that they can be. They support area Boy Scouts and the Harlem Little League, and run a program called the Junior Tennis Program. Through this program, youngsters are given the opportunity to develop their skills both on and off the court because their participation is dependent upon their commitment to getting good grades in school. Finally, the 369th Historical Society is making its own contribution to Black History Month, having given more than 3,000 kids tours of the armory and teaching them about the history of the black military.

It is my privilege to have this opportunity to pay tribute to the 369th and to share with you the role that their achievements have played, and continue to play, in the development of our Nation.

Mr. STOKES. Mr. Speaker, I thank my friend and distinguished colleague, the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH], for bringing to our attention the famed 369th. All of us familiar with black history take a great deal of pride in that regiment and the fact that the gentleman's distinguished father, who served in this body, led that regiment, and so we appreciate very much his remarks on this occasion.

Mr. Speaker, I am pleased at this time to yield to another distinguished member of the Black Caucus and a member who distinguished himself in terms of American black history by being one of only three black Americans to be elected as Lieutenant Governors of States in the United States. A few years ago he was elected the Lieutenant Governor of the State of California and served that State in a very distinguished manner. I am very pleased at this time to yield to the gentleman from California [Mr. DYMALLY].

Mr. DYMALLY. Mr. President, I thank my friend, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. STOKES], for bringing us together to observe African-American History Week and to focus attention on a much neglected aspect of African-American history, and that is the exclusion of the accomplishments of African-Americans in our textbooks which we use in our schools.

With the permission of the Speaker, I would like to make a personal reference. As an elementary school teacher in Los Angeles, I had the privilege of teaching the fifth grade, and the social studies unit for the fifth grade is U.S. history. I was shocked to learn in a textbook "Great Names in American History" only two African-Americans were mentioned in that entire textbook, Booker T. Washington and George Washington Carver, both of whom came from Tuskegee University.

Having gone to a British school, I obviously was not as exposed to American history as some of the teachers in my school, but I had spent enough time at Lincoln University in Missouri to know that there were many more than two African-Americans in American history who had significant contributions. So when I became a member of the California Assembly, I authored legislation which mandated the inclusion of African-Americans in our California textbooks. Today I am including in the RECORD an article from the Washington Times which deals with this subject.

Publishers around the country, school districts around the country, are faced with this challenge of seeing to it that our textbooks accurately reflect the accomplishments of African-Americans in U.S. history. That is a rich history. I note with some pride the mention of Dr. Charles Drew by the gentlewoman from Florida. I am pleased to say to the Speaker and Members of the House that in my district is located the Charles Drew University of Medicine and Science. It is dedicated to the work of Dr. Charles Drew, a very unique school to which my good friend, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. STOKES], has made a significant contribution as a member of the Committee on Appropriations.

So we must begin to chronicle, as the gentlewoman from Louisiana mentioned, the accomplishments of African-Americans in our textbooks. These textbooks neglect these great accomplishments of these brave and loyal citizens, and today, my small contribution to this special order is simply to bring attention to publishers, school districts, educators, administrators about the need to begin to rewrite our textbooks so that the accurate contributions would be reflected in these texts for our children today and tomorrow, in our school system.

Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from Ohio for bringing us together to continue to observe the great history of a great people.

I include in the RECORD the previously mentioned article from the Washington Times.

BLACK EDUCATORS SEEK TO REWRITE CURRICULUM TO COUNTER WHITE BIAS

(By Carol Innerst)

Black educators and organizations, arguing that the lessons taught in the nation's public schools are grounded in "white supremacy" and are responsible for the "genocidal" miseducation of minority children, are engaged in a nationwide offensive to radically rewrite school curriculums.

The drive is part of a widespread trend to infuse "multiculturalism" into elementary and secondary school curriculums to boost the self-esteem of minority children, keep them from dropping out and improve their academic achievement.

"Lies are being taught and continue to be taught in the American public school curriculum," said Conrad Worrill, chairman of the National Black United Front, a group targeting school curriculums in St. Louis, Kansas City, Houston, Dallas, Seattle, San Francisco, Detroit, New York, Chicago and other cities.

"Now that we are clear that the European world did not bring the light of civilization to Africa, and in fact it was the other way around—Africans in ancient times had a profound influence on the rest of the world—we ought to put African contributions at the center of the curriculum," said Mr. Worrill, chairman of the Department of Inner-City Studies Education at Northeastern Illinois University in Chicago.

The National Urban Coalition, the National Council of Black Studies, the National Alliance of Black School Educators, and the Association for the Study of Classical African Civilizations also have made school curriculums a top priority.

They have met some success in Portland, Ore., with the public schools' adoption of "African-American Baseline Essays." Fully developed, the "Essays" will portray the experience of each ethnic minority within each academic area.

"Essays" are to be used by teachers as a regular curriculum supplement, said Asa G. Hilliard III, a psychologist at Georgia State University who introduced the concept to Portland in 1981. Mr. Hilliard has outlined the concept to District educators developing a multicultural curriculum and recently began working with the Atlanta Public Schools.

"Black children are being miseducated and they're resisting it by not wanting to go to school, so genocide takes place," said Richard Brown, coordinator with NBUF's Portland Chapter. "We want every youngster in Portland schools to get exposed to this material, and that's not happening. . . . There should be a mandate."

Said Mr. Worrill, "The American public school system is organized on the white supremacy point of view. That's the problem."

A similar tone permeates a controversial task force report that has recommended radically rewriting the New York State school curriculum.

"People of color have to have some relationship to their learning, some personal stake in what it is they're getting in order for it to be meaningful," said Ramona Edelin, president of the National Urban Coalition.

The organization, which has 40 affiliates throughout the country, is interested in infusing African and African-American content in the school curriculum, said Ms. Edelin, an organizer of African-American Summit '89, at which delegates called for development and mandatory use of "Afrocentric curriculum materials."

While there is almost universal agreement that most school curriculums should better reflect minority contributions to American culture, many educators, historians and parents are disturbed by such ethnocentric fervor that disparages the common elements in our history, society and culture.

"A new curriculum cannot be built around a proposal that demeans and caricatures the culture of which it is part, and that disparages everyone who happens to have a white skin," said Diane Ravitch, professor of education and history at Teachers' College, Columbia University, and principal co-author of California's new multicultural History/Social Science framework.

"The California approach is to say all civilizations have made contributions of importance, there is tremendous variety and we are one people. It's a positive theme. It doesn't set group against group," she said.

"I do think the old establishment-type history was at fault because it omitted the experience and sufferings of many peoples," said William H. McNeill, professor emeritus of history at the University of Chicago. "The trouble with some kinds of [curriculum] revisions is that they become new distortions."

Ethnocentrism has always been natural to humankind, he said, but depending upon the level of anger, it can be subversive and even dangerous. "In a society with serious strains, to make that more acute by the kinds of history you teach is potentially contributing to the political antagonism and is irresponsible," Mr. McNeill said.

"Curriculum should be changed, not to put down any other group, but to tell the truth," said Edward Joyner, school development coordinator and associate of renowned child psychiatrist. Dr. James Comer at the Child Study Center, Yale University. "Don't teach to make bitter, but to set the record straight. You commit just as much damage when you distort your version of the truth."

Mr. Joyner, liaison with the Prince George's County Public Schools where the Comer program is being used to improve minority achievement, agreed. "The Comer program is based on parental and community imput as well as African-American culture. . . . Make kids feel capable and proud of their own backgrounds, but able to accept some of the values, attitudes of the mainstream," he said.

"History as a series of ethnic studies was an approach tried in the '60s and '70s all over the country," noted Charlotte Crabtree, professor at the Graduate School of Education at University of California, Los Angeles, and principal co-writer with Ms. Ravitch of the California framework. "There was no common thread.

"One of the first things we did in 1987 was to center the curriculum in the unifying history of the nation," she said. "It would be ironic if anyone were to go back to the ethnic studies approach that was widely discarded."

A MODEL CURRICULUM

Pressed by the Black United Front and the Desegregation Monitoring Advisory Committee, the Portland, Ore., school district published "African-American Baseline Essays," a multicultural curriculum effort. Unlike the curriculum changes proposed in New York, the Portland plan is conceived primarily, though not exclusively, as a teacher resource. It teaches, among other things, that:

Egypt was a Black African society—a matter of considerable scholarly dispute—and that Egyptian culture had its developmental origins further south in the African interior.

The African origins of Greek development became lost to the minds of Europeans 2,000 years after it was an unquestioned reality of the Greeks.

Since Africa is widely believed to be the birthplace of the human race, it follows that Africa was the birthplace of mathematics and science.

The concept of vaccination as a method to prevent smallpox was the contribution of a salve named Onesimus from Boston. In 1721, Onesimus described to his owner the process of innoculation for the treatment of smallpox he received in Africa. The owner in turn passed the practice on to doctors in the city.

To justify the enslavement and the exploitation of Africans, the Europeans began in the 15th Century to read them out of the respectable commentary of human history. Many achievements of black people were attributed to while people.

Mr. STOKES. Mr. Speaker, I thank my distinguished friend and colleague, the gentleman from California [Mr. DYMALLY], for his articulate statement on the subject of Black History Month.

Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to now yield to a very distinguished member of the Congressional Black Caucus, a gentleman who has distinguished himself in his own right and who represents Brooklyn, NY, the gentleman from New York [Mr. OWENS].

Mr. OWENS of New York. Mr. Speaker, I would first like to also congratulate my colleague, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. STOKES], for continuing this tradition that he started some time ago of having these special orders related to Black History Month. When he started these, I am certain that we did not have the volume of items on television and newspapers and on the radio related to Black History Month that we have today. We are quite pleased with the facts that there are so many different programs of various kinds that are being offered by public television, the network television, the local television stations, radio stations, and numerous other communications entities recognizing Black History Month. That was not the case when the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. STOKES] first started these special orders. These special orders certainly should continue as a part, as a component of a larger effort, because there cannot be too much said about this long-neglected history of African-Americans in this country.

Mr. Speaker, as a senior member of the Committee on Education and Labor, I am particularly interested in one of Carter G. Woodson's best-known books, and I do congratulate my colleagues for also focusing on the works of Carter G. Woodson and his efforts to keep black history alive, which started, of course, at first as a 1-week celebration, and now it is a month celebration, but many other speakers before me have said a number of things about him which I do not want to repeat.

I just want to focus on "Mis-Education of the Negro," that particular book, and the spirit of that book goes marching on.

In that book, which was written in 1933, Mr. Woodson notes that African-Americans were deliberately undereducated or miseducated so that they would never be able to rise above subservience and compete educationally, economically, and politically with whites. This miseducation was so complete that most African-Americans internalized feelings of inferiority and self-doubt. These feelings of inferiority and self-doubt were encouraged by the curricula and prevented them from fighting or challenging against the pervasive racial segregation of that time.

In fact, Carter Woodson wrote that if the practice of having the African-Americans enter and leave a white establishment by colored-only doors had not existed, African-Americans were so thoroughly brainwashed by the years of inferior education that they could have, or they would have, created their own back door. They would have created their own colored-only door, entrances and exits to white establishments.

It was an education reminiscent of what they call in South Africa "Bantu" education. Bantu education is what the minority white South African population has imposed on the majority African population under the system of apartheid. Bantu education has become synonymous with irrelevant education, education which does not prepare anybody to move into the mainstream of society and to be able to survive and make a living.

In 1990 we see that Bantu education, such miseducation of African-Americans continues in too many places. Too many public schools in urban areas across the Nation are old, decaying, they are decrepit and they are overcrowded, and they send a physical message to the youngsters right away that, "Your schools are different, they are inferior, we do not really intend to provide the same kind of education to you that we are providing to other youngsters." Classrooms are often so packed that the teachers are unable to give each student individual attention and assistance that he or she needs, and African-American students are often tracked into unchallenging, uninteresting classes for slow learners whether they deserve to be there or not.

A disproportionate number of African-American students are labeled retarded or learning-disabled. African-American students are often discouraged from majoring in the so-called difficult subjects, like mathematics, science, or languages. They are often not encouraged to attend colleges or universities by high school guidance or academic counselors. This does not exist only in the Deep South, I assure the Members.

□ 1510

Academic counselors in New York City are still discouraging youngsters from going to college. If they are encouraged, they are only encouraged to attend junior colleges or 2-year colleges. They are not encouraged to go to 4-year institutions of higher learning, graduate, and professional schools.

Contributing to their miseducation is 10 years of Reagan-Bush education policies which have seen a decrease in Federal funding for education. And each time Federal funding is cut, black students, African-American students, are hurt most.

Carter G. Woodson's legacy was his understanding that a people who know their history and understand its greatness can never again feel themselves inferior to any group. Negro History Week, which is now Black History Month, was a major step in undoing the damage that those years of Bantu miseducation, the years of lies and distortions by white historians regarding African and African-American history, did to us as a people.

But ethnic pride is not enough. As descendants of slaves and victims of post-slavery segregation and racism, and as taxpayers who have yet to reap the full benefits of the moneys we pay into the system, African-Americans need reparations in the form of a sweeping Federal Marshall plan which includes job training, urban education programs, massive upgrading of urban public school buildings nationally, the preparation of urban teachers, better urban teachers, a complete overhaul of urban housing stock, affirmative action set-aside programs, and so forth.

But most important of all, we cannot emphasize too much the need to make a herculean effort, a monumental effort, to end the miseducation of the African-American students. Education is the kingpin to the solution of all of our problems. I am certain that Carter G. Woodson fully understood that. We should make certain that the spirit of Carter G. Woodson goes marching on.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. STOKES. Mr. Speaker, I thank my distinguished friend for his contribution to the special order.

I am pleased to yield to the distinguished gentleman from New York [Mr. RANGEL], the senior member of the Committee on Ways and Means, and one of the members of the Congressional Black Caucus who has contributed so much to this body.

Mr. RANGEL. Mr. Speaker, I would like to congratulate the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. STOKES] for taking the initiative in bringing to this august body the statements of our friends and colleagues as we try to remind Americans of the great contributions that African-Americans have made to our history.

I know that during this time of the year so many of us are asked, "Why do you think you need your own history? Isn't American history good enough for you? It is good enough for other Americans."

Yet, Chairman STOKES, I am reminded of the experience that I had as a child, the fact that being born and raised in New York I never really knew too much about Africa. None of the teachers brought it to me. My family members tried to explain it, but it was always something so very foreign to me.

It was only after the United Nations opened up in New York City that we saw these African leaders dressed in their majestic clothes, costumes that I had never seen, speaking eloquently, which we were able to see and hear on television, that I truly understood that Africa just wasn't a place that we saw in the Tarzan movies, but was a place that we had to be able somehow to find a way to see where we came from, what contributions we made to this country, and how we can enjoy being called colored, Negro, black, African-Americans, but at least be able to have the same sense of identity as so many other Americans have had.

I recall that when Nelson Mandela was finally freed the feeling of pride that youngsters and other people felt. Not just black people, but Americans felt. That here a man, without a gun, without an army, had the will and the strength to allow himself to be imprisoned and not to be conditionally discharged because he had certain principles that dealt with what our Constitution is all about, and that is that all people be treated equally and have the opportunity to vote and participate in their government, and to come out with his wife strongly at his side, his family standing with him.

I guess all Americans, and especially African-Americans, felt a sense of pride in being identified with this type of courage and this type of leadership.

But, Mr. Speaker, I thought about it for a while. And as I see my colleagues wanting to return to Eastern Europe to enjoy the newly found freedom that people are seeing in Czechoslovakia and in Poland and in other parts of Eastern Europe, I wondered as African-Americans if the opportunity was given to us, if we were told that we would have first-class roundtrip tickets for ourselves and our family and our friends to visit our homeland, are we the only people in this great republic that would not know what to tell the travel agent? We would not know what country, what region. Certainly we would have even difficulty in saying what part of the continent that we would like to revisit in order to track our heritage or to track our roots.

I wonder whether we are the only people whose history has been so distorted and denied to us that even in sending a care package we would not know the town or village that we would want to be a part of saying that we remembered where we have come from.

So that is why we should pick a week, a month, a year, or a substantial part of our time, reviewing American history and restoring to it the dignity of the contributions of those Americans whose origins are in Africa.

We should remind each other that in this mosaic that we have in this country, where all people can make a contribution, that we can only move forward when all people are moving forward. Whenever there is a part that economically or socially or politically is not able to participate, then we lose that high ground when we try to tell countries as to what comes from a democratic country.

So it seems to me that I, like you, would hope that soon, certainly in our lifetime, it would be unnecessary to take out time in the well to extol this month, that we try to educate our fellow Americans about our contribution. But since that time has not come as yet, Mr. Speaker, let me once again say that we thank the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. STOKES] for the contributions that he and his family have made. Certainly the gentleman is part of that black African history that we are so proud of, and we thank him for constantly bringing to this House floor an opportunity for Members to participate in this special order so that we can join him and so many of our fellow Americans in understanding the great contribution to history that we have made as a people.

Mr. STOKES. Mr. Speaker, I thank my distinguished friend and colleague, the gentleman from New York [Mr. RANGEL], for his very kind remarks and for his contribution to this special order.

Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to yield to the distinguished gentleman from New York [Mr. GILMAN].

Mr. GILMAN. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to join with our colleagues in commemorating Black History Month for 1990 and I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Thomas Carlyle, the Scottish historian, wrote that: "The history of the world is but the biography of great men." Black History Month is an appropriate time to pay tribute to the many black men and women throughout the ages who have contributed to create the world in which we live. It is especially appropriate that we do so, because for too many years our historians and our school textbooks put these positive contributions on the back burner.

Too often, our history courses have failed to teach that the first victim of our war for independence, Crispus Attuckus, was a black man. Crispus Attuckus was a freed slave killed by British soldiers while he led the protest against British oppression known in history books as the Boston Massacre. This pivotal event in our Nation's history is often glossed over, without mentioning the contribution made by a black man.

Our beautiful Capitol City, Washington, DC, was laid out with the assistance of a black man, Benjamin Banneker, who in his time was called "the black Ben Franklin," because of his awesome contributions in so many different fields.

Harriet Tubman and Sojourner Truth were two black women who risked their lives during the struggle to end slavery in helping people flee to freedom.

Frederick Douglass, an escaped slave, was one of our Nation's leading diplomats and governmental leaders during the 1800's. Booker T. Washington and W.E.B. DuBois, although of opposing philosophies, helped develop the need for black education and for a self-awareness so necessary to achieve real equality.

The scientific contributions of George Washington Carver, of Granville T. Woods, and of Jan Matzeliger helped usher America into the industrial age.

And let us not forget the courageous, dedicated civil rights black leadership of Mrs. Rosa Parks, Martin Luther King, Jr., Medgar Evers, A. Philip Randolph, and Whitney Young.

And what would our culture be today, without the rich contributions made by the outstanding musicians who created jazz, the first truly American art form? "Fats" Waller, "Jelly Roll" Morton, Scott Joplin, and many others helped bring jazz music to us all, and their tradition was carried out by future generations of talented black artists.

Mr. Speaker, black Americans have contributed to every facet of American life. It is extremely appropriate therefore that we join together in calling these significant accomplishments to the attention of all citizens of our Nation.

□ 1520

Mr. STOKES. Mr. Speaker, I thank my distinguished friend and colleague from New York for his contribution to this special order.

I am pleased to yield to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. MAZZOLI], a distinguished friend and colleague.

Mr. MAZZOLI. Mr. Speaker, let me thank the gentleman from Ohio for having called this special order. I appreciate the opportunity of joining with him on the floor to speak about Black History Month.

Mr. Speaker, I have had the great good fortunes of being in political office for over 20 years. I entered in 1968 with three of the black politicians that I would say are seminal in Kentucky, State Senator Georgia Powers, who just recently retired, Representative Mae Street Kidd, with whom I was with just last weekend, and Representative Hughes McGill, who died soon after our election in 1968 to be succeeded by his wife Charlotte.

Then in 1971 I was elected to the House of Representatives and came here with the gentleman from New York [Mr. RANGEL], who spoke just a moment ago, the gentleman from California [Mr. DELLUMS], and the gentleman from the District of Columbia, Delegate WALTER FAUNTROY. So my own career, Mr. Speaker, has been intertwined with those of great black Americans.

Mr. Speaker, I am proud to join my colleagues in the House in celebrating and commemorating February as Black History Month.

In 1926, Dr. Carter G. Woodson, known as the father of black history, established Negro History Week—in 1976 extended to a month—because he recognized the need for all to recognize the history and culture of black Americans.

It is fitting that a month be set aside to honor the significant achievements of black Americans, many of whom have lived in Louisville and Jefferson County, KY, the district I am honored to represent in Congress.

Today, I wish to honor one such Louisville native, John W. Shannon, currently Under Secretary of the Army.

John Shannon was born and reared in Louisville before leaving for Central State University in Wilberforce, OH, where he earned a bachelor of science degree. John received his master of science degree from Shippensburg State College in Pennsylvania, attended Catholic University for postgraduate studies, and is a graduate of the U.S. Army War College.

John entered the U.S. Army, and during his excellent career which led to his eventual promotion to full colonel, he held various positions of leadership earning respect from his peers.

His career included two tours in Vietnam as an adviser and an infantry battalion commander. Secretary Shannon earned numerous awards while on active duty, including the Legion of Merit, the Bronze Star, and the Secretary of Defense Award for outstanding public service, just to name a few.

Before serving as Under Secretary of the Army, John Shannon held the Assistant Secretary position for installations and logistics. He assisted in direct Army policy and activities of logistics, installation procedures, and preservation and restoration of the environment. He also managed the Army's chemical stockpile disposal program.

Recently in Louisville, I had the honor of attending a luncheon sponsored by the Intergovernmental Black History Committee at which John Shannon delivered the key remarks. It was then that I fully realized what an outstanding role model John is for many black youths in Louisville.

I am proud to recognize Under Secretary John Shannon for his many contributions to Louisville, to America, and to the world.

I also extend best wishes and warmest regards to his wife, Jean, and their son, John, who is a lieutenant in the U.S. Army Reserve, who, when a young student, was an intern in my office.

Speaking for my constituents in Louisville and Jefferson County, John, we are all very proud of you.

Mr. STOKES. I thank the gentleman from Kentucky very much for his contribution.

Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SANGMEISTER].

Mr. SANGMEISTER. Mr. Speaker, I too congratulate the gentleman from Ohio for having this special order in the spirit of Black History Month.

In the spirit of Black History Month, I want to recognize just a few of the many outstanding individuals of the Fourth Congressional District who have dedicated their lives to improving the communities in which they live and work. These are very special people. People that have combined talent, wisdom, and commitment to achieve great things for their family, community, and Nation. We can all look to these individuals as examples of leadership in action.

The first leader I am proud to recognize is Rev. Isaac Singleton, Sr., pastor of Mount Zion Baptist Church in Joliet. Born in Tallulah, LA, to Ruben and Sarah Singleton, Reverend Singleton worked his way through Lincoln Christian College and eventually received a doctorate of divinity degree from Miller University in New Jersey. He has served as pastor of Mount Zion Baptist Church since 1961. A devoted husband, father, and community leader, Reverend Singleton has truly enriched the lives of many people who have had the honor to come in contact with him. He has received numerous awards for his contributions such as the Community Leader of American National Editors Award, the Community Relations Award from the city of Joliet, the Distinguished Citizens Award by Lewis University, and he is listed in the Who's Who Among Black Americans.

Reverend Singleton's diverse involvement includes serving as chairman to the children and family services advisory council of the State of Illinois, vice president of the Joliet region chamber of commerce, and presently as president of the Joliet affiliate of Operation Push.

Reverend Singleton's mission has taken him around the world to Africa, the Caribbean, Latin America, and the Middle East. We are proud of his contributions in foreign lands, but we are always grateful when he returns. Reverend Singleton has made an important mark on our community, and for this he will always be remembered.

The next tribute is as much to a family as it is to an individual. Robert and Augusta Gavin raised their three daughters and three sons who would go on to make significant contributions. The late Dr. Charles Gavin of Chicago Heights was truly a leader and pioneeer in the first degree. Upon graduation from medical school, Dr. Gavin completed a residency in orthopedic surgery and became one of the first Afro-Americans to become a board certified orthopedic surgeon.

In cooperation with several colleagues and community leaders, Dr. Gavin was able to establish and maintain a free medical clinic servicing indigent patients in the inner city of Chicago. His dedication and unselfish service to his patients were a source of inspiration to hundreds of people who crossed his path.

At an early age, the late Harriet Gavin Martin exhibited a sense of community. She made lasting contributions to Prairie State College. Harriet believed education was the key for further development of the individual and the community.

Robert Gavin, Jr., served in the U.S. Marine Corps during World War II and received several service awards. Robert was financially involved in the community by contributing freely to programs and activities that fostered youth development and racial harmony.

Judge Marvin Gavin graduated from DePauw University and Harvard Law School. Judge Gavin currently serves as a circuit court judge and president of the Gavin Foundation. The Gavin Foundation gives thousands of dollars each year in scholarships and grant aid to deserving members of the community.

A holder of a doctorate in education, Dr. Katherine Gavin's specialty is in the field of early childhood development and personalized learning. Katherine was a founding member of the Illinois Association for Personalized Learning Program. She is a frequent writer and lecturer in her field of specialty and has received numerous awards and citations for her work and contributions. Katherine formerly served as division chairperson at Prairie State College.

Yvonne Gavin Robinson received a double masters degree from Governors State University and has been a teacher in District 170 for over 15 years. She is currently the principal of Dr. Charles Gavin School in Chicago Heights where she has served with distinction.

Leonard Robinson, son-in-law to Robert Gavin, Sr., has made important contributions through his leadership in the development of the South Suburban YMCA and as a teacher with the Chicago Board of Education. His devotion to the youth of Illinois is truly commendable by helping build character at the ages when it is most important. We are fortunate to have the Gavin family among us, and their legacy continues to survive through their children and the Gavin Foundation.

Dillard Harris, superintendent/principal of Fairmont School District No. 89, Lockport, has displayed great leadership and civic responsibilities over the years. Having served as a U.S. Air Force officer since 1957, he achieved the rank of lieutenant colonel. Dillard has served on numerous civic organizations—often as the first Afro-American to be admitted—and has always been a strong supporter and promoter of Afro-American civil rights. Currently, he is the president of the Will County NAACP.

Dillard has been active in the Fairmont community as well as the school, believing that a school must meet more than the standard educational needs. Dillard believes that children should be stimulated enough in school to make them work independently on school projects and learning tasks outside of traditional classroom settings. Dillard Harris has dedicated his life to defending the Nation and educating his children. His life's work embodies the two sides to freedom: one side to protect and defend; and the other to grow and develop.

These are just a few of the many outstanding contributions to the Fourth Congressional District by Afro-Americans. The Fourth Congressional District is a better place thanks to the efforts of those mentioned here today.

Mr. STOKES. I thank the gentleman for his participation.

Mr. Speaker, I yield to the distinguished gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. PAYNE], who has distinguished himself by becoming the first black American to be elected to Congress from the State of New Jersey.

Mr. PAYNE of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, I too would like to commend the gentleman from Ohio for calling this special order today.

Mr. Speaker, today, I am honored to have this opportunity to join with my colleagues to participate in this special order and recognize the accomplishments of African-Americans throughout history. Since 1976, February has been designated as Black History Month. However, as you know, the concept was originated by Dr. Carter G. Woodson, more than six decades ago. This is an opportunity to pause and take notice of the persons and events which have contributed to the advancement of African-American people in this country and the development of this Nation.

The founder of Black History Month, Dr. Carter G. Woodson, is indeed not only an African-American hero but, an American hero. It has been said that Dr. Woodson was a discoverer of truth, organizer of truth, contributor to truth, a disseminator of truth, and a defender of truth. Through the efforts of this historian, scholar, and educator, we have access to compilations of accurate information concerning black history.

Dr. Woodson, who himself was self-educated until the age of 17, espoused the importance of scholarship and learning about one's heritage and the accomplishments of one's people. He believed that we must consider the African-American's contribution to American history as constructive parts of a whole, not as solitary fragments.

Mr. Speaker, as the first black Congressman from New Jersey, I am proud to be a mere fragment. But, I am even more proud to be a part of the whole. The African-American community is a tapestry within which is woven the skills and talents of individuals whose accomplishments represent endurance and perseverance.

Through much adversity and against oftentimes unsurmountable odds, African-Americans have educated themselves and shared the fruits of their knowledge in a variety of ways to the betterment of the country and world we live in.

In addition to Carter G. Woodson, there are countless others who knew the value of an education and the opportunities it could provide. I am reminded of Frederick Douglas who, as a slave, educated himself and went on to gain fame as an abolitionist. And of course, Mary McCleod Bethune, who was an outstanding educator and political activist. She was the founder of the institution today known as Bethune-Cookman College and founder and president of the National Council of Negro Women. She was also the first black woman to receive a major appointment in the Federal Government.

Other notables who participated in the education of blacks include Booker T. Washington, founder and president of Tuskegee Institute; and Dr. Charles Drew, famous for his work with blood plasma who taught countless surgeons at Howard University.
